Now, after endeavoring to be the peacemaker, after having settled things that had vexed us, after having done things that the world had indorsed, we are suddenly confronted by another note from Germany, withdrawing what she had promised us before and saying that she proposed to resume again that warfare which by her own action and her own admissions she had herself denounced, and for which she had agreed to make reparation to us, and which she had pledged herself never to do again.

So the President has not changed, the country has not changed, Congress has not changed, the world has not changed; but Germany has changed. She has now changed her position, not upon grounds of principle, but only upon grounds of expediency or necessity.

Mr. Bethmann-Hollweg, chancellor, in responding to the questions of the members of the Reichstag as to why he had apparently changed his position, said he had not changed his position; that while he had said something that might be construed as being against ruthless submarine warfare, he had only hesitated and refused at that time to be in favor of unrestricted and ruthless submarine warfare purely on the ground of expediency, namely, because Germany was not then ready for it, but added that Germany was ready for it now. All the time when we supposed that the justice of our position had been vindicated by Germany herself she was merely waiting, according to the words of the chancellor, an opportunity when she would be ready. She thinks now that she can with impunity violate the laws of humanity and the laws of God because she is ready to conduct the comparing of lawlessness successfully.

is ready to conduct the campaign of lawlessness successfully.

Now, she has threatened that. The question now arises are we, the Congress of the United States, going to vindicate the United States or are we going to ignore the threats or condone in advance the things which Germany threatens she will do? Are we going to quall before the challenge which she has bluntly thrown down to us and repudiate our Government and our people's rights?

Are we going now to record a vote of lack of confidence in the President, whom we have supported and led on in the belief that Congress was back of him, and in the belief that the world was back of him? Are we, upon a mere threat going to abandon him, the leader of our country, the President of the United States, and thus repudiate our rights and vindicate and condone the repetition of the terrible acts of which we complained and which Germany admitted were unjustifiable and which she pledged herself not to repeat.

That is the issue here in this resolution, Mr. President. I want to say that I am here not merely to say, "Mr. President, you have done this and you have closed my mouth, and I must perforce indorse what you have done." I want to go further and say that I approve of what the President has done because it is right and because the people have told him in advance that it was right and because he had a right to expect that when he took the position he has taken the country and Congress would line up back of him and sustain him as against a foreign country.

Now, it is said this may lead to war. God forbid that it should. This is not, however, a step that leads to war. It may be the only step that will still lead to peace. In union there is strength, and our diplomacy can have no strength when it appears that we are divided upon a momentous issue.

In the last two and a half years, during all the time that these great questions have been pending, the President has been sadly handicapped and hamstrung by a divided constituency. It would be too long and it would be fruitless to enter into a discussion here of the currents and the countercurrents that have been set adrift in this country to trip and to hamper the President of the United States in carrying out his foreign policy. Suffice it to say that he has been hampered, that obstacles have been put in his path which have hindered him from getting the benefit of the full force of a united American Nation.

The word has gone out into the world that the American people are divided on this issue. It has been said, and boldly said, more than once, that in the event of one thing happening or another thing happening, we could not command a united Americanism to sustain us. That has had its effect, no doubt, in our foreign relations, because there is nothing one nation fears less than another nation divided, and nothing which they fear or respect more than another nation united.

This is not merely a matter of sentiment; it is a matter of practical importance. I sometimes think that if any mistake has been made—I do not say that there has been—it has not been because we have a bloodthirsty President and a bloodthirsty administration, but it has been because we have been too solicitous about the feelings of other people and because we feared that we might involve at every step, unnecessarily, that due insistence upon a respect of our rights. I think we should assume, on the other hand, that an insistence upon a recognition of our rights would tend to keep us out of war. Urgent demands are resented, of course, but just demands are recognized when energetically presented.

I believe when the first breach of international law occurred the neutral nations of the world should have put the seal of their condemnation upon it at once and have tolerated it from no nation, because the yielding of one right invites the trespassing on another; and there is no end to the transgressing of an aggressive and unscrupulous force upon an ever yielding and never resistant force.

As was said here to-day, if there can be a blockade of the North Sea, why not a blockade three or four hundred miles from there? Why not a blockade a thousand miles? Why not a blockade 3,000 miles? Why not, eventually, a blockade just before our very door? And when the blockade gets before our very door, instead of defending our rights, will we still cry "Peace!" and and refuse to stand by the Government or our rights?

However, prudent men oftentimes know just when to stop, and prudent nations often know just when to stop; and I want to ask whether we are not in that situation now and whether the President did not have the idea in mind when he delivered his passports to the German ambassador that now is the time to call a halt?

It has been said here that two ways were open: One was for the President to send another note threatening that, in the event the German threat was carried out, we would resent it with force of arms, and the other was to hand Count von Bernstorff his passports. Which was the wiser thing to do? Was it to wait until Germany had actually committed the overt act and to put upon us the burden and the onus of declaring war, or to serve notice on Germany in the most kindly way, but in the most emphatic manner, that here was a line over which she might not step, and thus take for granted that a prudent and wise nation would halt before it takes the final and fatal step?

I say the President, in my judgment, acted in the best manner possible, and that the issue now is up to Germany whether she wants to continue something which she herself has condemned by solemn note or treaty negotiations, or whether she wants to insist that she deceived the United States, that she misled the United States, and that she proposes to recognize no other law on the face of the earth than that of necessity. It is true that she is fighting with her back to the wall; that allowances should be made for a nation in desperate straits; but, as I understand, while international law takes into consideration the necessities of nations, it yet holds that no nation can invoke the law of necessity against the rights of neutral nations and the lives of citizens of neutral nations.

Mr. President, I hope that we shall have peace; but I know and I feel that if we expect to have a peaceful outcome of this difficulty we must have a united country; so that word shall go forward, not that this is merely Mr. Wilson's idea—the idea of Mr. Wilson, the individual, Mr. Wilson, the President—but rather the word that when the President speaks he speaks for the whole country, and that the country stands behind that speech and is willing to back it up as far as it may be necessary to do so.

I noticed the other day in the public press that in Germany the newspapers were not speaking of a breach of relations with "the American people," but they were speaking of a breach of Germany with President Wilson. What does that mean? It means, does it not, on the part of those who use that language that they do not recognize that Mr. Wilson is speaking for the people of the United States, but that he is speaking only for himself, not for the country, not as the responsible head of a great Nation?

I repeat, I hope we shall have peace; I say that if we earnestly desire peace, and if peace can possibly be preserved or war avoided at this time, it can only be done by every nation on the face of this earth being informed that the United States is a united country; that even though we have people living in our midst who feel aggrieved at this breach of relations, when the solemn hour comes when it is necessary to choose between the Government to which they have sworn allegiance and the land which gave them birth, no matter what their ancestry may be, they will elect to stand by the land of their adoption, to stand by this country, regardless of the cost and the sacrifice which it may mean to them.

The President in every line of his speech before Congress breathes the expression of good will and conciliation; but he lays down flatly and emphatically upon what terms this friendship may be retained. We are now called upon either to give him a vote of confidence or to withhold it; to give a vote of confidence to him not for doing something to which we have been opposed in the past, but for something to which we have been committed for the past two years, and for which we have supported him in every way and at every turn that the question may have taken. This is not only a vote of confidence or lack of confidence, but it is also a vote going to the solidarity and integrity of this country. It must not go out to the world that this country has turned down the President of the United States, who has acted within his proper functions and in accordance with justice and right.

It would be different, Mr. President, if we had at the head of this Nation a man who had gone mad, who was a tyrant, a usurper of power: but nobody doubts the patriotism of our President, no one doubts his ability, no one doubts his peaceful purposes, no one doubts that he is acting solely for what he conceives to be the best interests of this country. For two and one-half years Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, has stood between us and war. His every effort, his every thought, his every wish and desire has been to conduct us safely through It seemed, indeed, that he had succeeded in his heart's desire. Perhaps he will yet. Every one of his fellow citizens knows that if there be any way consistent with our honor and our rights or our interests to stay the awful hand of war it will be pursued. I am confident that our Government or our President will do nothing to promote war and that everything will be done to prevent war, if it can be avoided. Let the whole country, let a united citizenry, stand back of the man who has done his full duty through more than two crushing years. Let him feel now the helpful moral support of his fellow citizens in this hour of crisis. Thus, if at all, can be best avoided what we all dread and would all avoid.

Let us stand by the President because we thus stand by our country.

Is it going to be said that we repudiate our President and our Government? Have you stopped to think what the consequences would be should we repudiate the head of our Government, our spokesman who stands for our rights and the rights of humanity? If you take the helmsman from the helm, who will conduct the ship through the storm and turbulent waters? A President can not resign; he must still be President; and if you repudiate him, how could he serve you? He would speak as an individual and not as a nation. Of course I know it will not be done in a crisis like this. The people of the United States do not elect to the high office of President a man who deserved or who would be accorded such treatment. The time has not yet come nor that stage of degeneration yet set in when the people of the United States will refuse to stand by the United States.

Mr. President, I repeat I hope we may have peace. I hope I may never be obliged as a Senator to register my vote in favor of war. I hope the awful responsibility will never devolve upon me to decree that men must fight and die for our country. My thoughts, my purposes, my prayers are solely and alone for what I conceive to be the good of my country. May my judgment be clarified so that my voice and my vote will ever be found in truth and in fact for that which will redound to the good of the country and the happiness of our people. Whatever errors I may make in this Chamber will, I am sure, be errors of the head and not of the heart, and if I err now in the position I am taking I pray that a kind Providence may overlook it. But, in my judgment, it would be fatal to defeat this resolution now that it is before us. It would make for disintegration and not union to divide ourselves upon this issue. It would be unpatriotic, dangerous, and unwise to refuse to approve and indorse the acts of the President done within the line of his duty and his jurisdiction, and to give notice to the world that we are not a united but a divided and disorganized people. I shall feel constrained to vote in favor of the resolution.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to say just a few words before voting on the pending proposition.

I shall vote to sustain the resolution, but in voting to sustain it I am not passing judgment upon either the propriety or impropriety of having the resolution before the Senate. It is before us and we must vote on it. If I felt that in supporting this resolution we were taking one step nearer to war, I should pause, and pause very long, before casting a vote in its favor; but, Mr. President, instead of bringing us nearer, I believe that a united front in support of this resolution at this critical time will do more to prevent war than any one thing we could do to-day. Recalling the past diplomatic utterances of the President on the submarine controversy, his declaration of what he would be compelled to do under certain circumstances, I can not see how after receiving the last German declaration he could do less than he has done or more than he has done in severing diplomatic relations with the German Government.

Mr. President, it might be well to pause right here before going further to ask ourselves what are the rights that the President of the United States claims for the American people and which we stand pledged to maintain? I do not believe that the President questions for a single moment the right of Germany to place restrictions upon trade in munitions of war with her enemies. We do not for a single moment deny her right of blockade; we do not claim upon our part that we can without interference send munitions of war or other contraband into the British Islands. All we are claiming, if I understand the President's address aright, is simply that in the exercise of the right of a belligerent to prevent the importation of munitions or other contraband of war into an enemy country he shall exercise the usual precautions that are required by international law. we claim is, not that we may break that blockade which Germany has declared around the British Islands; not that Germany may not seize any American ship that is laden with contraband; but what we claim is that the question of whether a ship is carrying contraband and the question of her right to enter that zone shall be determined before the vessel is sunk.

It is up to Germany to say whether or not she will accede to that demand of the United States. Certainly it seems to me that the Imperial German Government will not seriously contend that she has a right to declare that only one American ship shall sail from the United States to Falmouth if she carries nothing but mail, or that she can sail but once a week, or that she can limit the number of ships of American registry that may sail the ocean or that may carry our goods not declared contraband or our mails and passengers even to a belligerent port.

We do not deny, and we can not deny, her right to maintain her blockade; but is it necessary for the protection of the life and existence of the German Empire that she sink without notice American ships not laden with contraband? Is it not necessary, even though such vessels are laden with contraband, that she shall determine that question before they are sent to the bottom of the ocean? Is it necessary to preserve her life that she destroy American lives by this method? I do not believe, Mr. President, that the great central powers will claim that that is essential; and if we do not insist upon international conduct which we would not concede to others were we engaged in a war, I do not believe there is any real danger of war with the Imperial German Government. We only claim that questions Imperial German Government. We only claim that questions of contraband and questions of the innocence of vessels traversing the war zone shall be determined before, and not after, they are sent to the bottom.

Mr. President, I was one among the thirteen in the Senate who declared it to be the duty of the American Government to suggest to American citizens that they ought not needlessly to travel in the war zone during hostilities and during a time when we were attempting to settle mooted questions with one of the belligerent powers. I am still of the same conviction. I feel that American citizens owe a patriotic duty to this Govern-ment to keep us out of war, if possible, and that if they will refrain from exercising every international right they may have, and remain upon American soil when it is not necessary for them to visit the war zone, they will confer a blessing upon their country by keeping it out of any possible war with any of the belligerents.

I hope that that will be done; but if it is not done, it is still within the power of Germany easily to keep out of war with the United States. It is within her power to unleash the dogs of war if she pleases so to do, but by exercising a due consideration for the rights of humanity and the rights of neutral vessels she can avoid war with us.

I am certain, Mr. President, that the President of the United States will do everything in his power to keep us out of any armed conflict, and that he will require the most positive proof of a flagrant abuse of international law and of the rights of American citizens before he will come to the Congress and ask us for armed force to maintain our rights. But it seems to me, Mr. President, that there is nothing else we can do at the present time except to say to the Imperial German Government and to the nations of the world that when the President severs diplomatic relations with any belligerent power, when he declares a great principle of international law, which we all concede to be the law, and insists that we shall maintain our rights according to the terms of that declaration, it becomes our duty to sustain him in a vote of confidence. Therefore, Mr. President, I shall vote to sustain the resolution, but I shall now and at all other times do all in my power, all I can do within the bounds of national honor, to keep this country out of this great world conflict.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. I merely ask for a vote on the resolution. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire. Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I hope the Members of the Senate will read the resolution very carefully before they vote The minds of Senators are already made up on the questions that are involved in the present controversy. All Senators earnestly desire to avoid war if it can honorably be done. All Senators will loyally support the administration if war is On those two propositions I believe there is absolute

But on two other questions there is substantial disagreement: First, as to whether diplomatic relations with Germany should have been severed, and, second, as to what cause might be sufficient to warrant a declaration of war.

On reading the resolution I find that it is distinctly of a peaceful character. It is in no sense a preliminary declaration of war. I have come to the conclusion which I have stated, because I know the source of the resolution, and I have carefully considered its terms. I believe that the distinguished Senator from Missouri, the author of the measure, firmly desires peace and that he will go further than a majority of this body to secure peace. But when I read the resolution I am sure that the intention of it is peaceable.

The body of the resolution asks for the approval of the action of the President as set forth in his address. The only action set forth by the President in his address was the severance of diplomatic relations with Germany. There is, moreover, no declara-tion by him as to whether war should be undertaken.

The preamble of the resolution states three propositions: First, that the President has severed diplomatic relations with Germany. That is the very matter involved in the resolution; second, that the President has expressed his desire to avoid conflict with Germany; and, third, that the President has de-clared that he will submit the matter to Congress and ask its authority before he takes further action. The two propositions stated in the preamble which do not appear in the body of the proposition, are distinctly peaceful and they were inserted before the body of the resolution for the express purpose of declaring our peaceful attitude and our peaceful intent

Some of us, if we had had the responsibility, would not have suspended diplomatic relations with Germany. Others would have taken that course. But that is not the question before the Senate. That action has already passed into history. before us now is, whether we shall approve the action of the President in severing relations with Germany. And I wish to appeal to those of our friends on the floor of the Senate who And I wish to particularly desire peace to help us get a unanimous vote to support the action of the President because in doing that they will emphasize the two peace-looking sentiments expressed in the preamble and help to present a united front to all the world. It is more important that we stand unanimously in support of the President at this time than that we express our own personal views as to just what should be done to avert the conflict that we all wish to avert.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I think there has been more debate than was needed on this resolution, which, I think, might well have been spontaneously, unanimously, and without debate adopted immediately upon being laid before the Senate, and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], the author of the resolution, having expressed a desire for a vote, I will merely indulge in a few sentences to explain my motives in voting for the resolution.

It has been stated by some Senators on the floor of the Senate during this debate that they would vote for this resolution regardless of whether or not they believed the President was right in his action of last Saturday in severing our diplomatic relations with Germany, perhaps believing that he may have been wrong. It has been stated by some Senators that they would vote for this resolution, while at the same time deprecating the fact that the resolution was brought before the Senate; and at least one Senator on this side of the Chamber has stated that he would vote for the resolution, while at the same time deprecating that it was brought before the Senate and condemning the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] for having introduced it.

I merely want to go on record and make it plain, before the vote is taken on this resolution, that I am not one of those Senators who will vote for the resolution regardless of whether or not I believe the President was right, perhaps believing that he was wrong. I want to take it plain that I am not one of those Senators who will vote for the resolution while at the same time deprecating that it is before the Senate and condemning the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] for having brought it before the Senate. I will vote for this resolution because I believe that the President was absolutely right in what he did; that it was his plain and manifest duty to do what he did; and that it is the duty of the Senate voluntarily and spontaneously to come to his support and uphold him in maintaining the honor and dignity of the Nation.

I believe that President Wilson was absolutely right; I believe that he would have been justified long ago in doing what he did; I believe he would have been justified in what he did at the time of the sinking of the Lusitania. The President has been very patient; he has waited until he arrived at the point, in my opinion, where it was absolutely his duty and where there was no escape from it, to take the action which he has taken. If the President had not done what he did, this Nation would have received, and would have merited, the contempt of the civilized world.

In April of last year the President sent a note to Germany, informing that Government that if certain practices were continued and persisted in or resumed he would break off diplomatic relations with that country. Now, Germany sends him a note, stating that she intends to do those very things, thereby placing the President and the people of this country in a position where they could not fail to meet that challenge if they desired to maintain their self-respect and uphold the honor and dignity of this Nation before the world. action of the President was unavoidable. It was the only thing to do. I undertake to say, too, that the people of this country are behind the President and are supporting him in this matter. The press shows it; the State legislatures, by their action, show it. There is no doubt that the people stand with the President. Should we do less? Are we not as patriotic or our constituents?

If the President had not done as he did, the people of this country would have been put down before the world as a Nation of poltroons and cowards. They would have been put in the attitude of favoring peace at any price, even at the sacrifice of our commerce, our international rights, our rights on the seas, our self-respect, our national honor, integrity, and dignity, and so there was no other course to pursue.

It has been stated here that the President should have sent another note to Germany. If the President had sent another note to Germany, I think he would have made this country absurd and ridiculous in the eyes of the world. It was not a time for notes; it was a time for action.

It has been intimated here that the President should have let the Senate know that he wants this body to uphold him if this resolution is to be adopted. Has the patriotism of this body sunk so low that when the President is engaged in upholding the honor, the dignity, and the self-respect of this Nation we should sit here idly and wait to be told that he would like to have our support before we go to his support? Must we be solicited to do our patriotic duty? This body should rush to our President's support voluntarily, spontaneously, and eargerly when he is uphoding the honor and dignity and respect of our country, as he is. The action of this body should be voluntary, unsolicited, spontaneous, unqualified, and ungrudging in giving the President support in what he is doing. Our national honor is at stake. We should be as jealous of it as our President.

As to the action of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Stone] in introducing this resolution, if I have any complaint at all to make, it is that he did not offer the resolution last Saturday afternoon. If I have any complaint at all to make of the Senate, it is that the Senate did not unanimously and eagerly adopt this resolution last Saturday afternoon, and let the news be flashed around the world that this body upholds the President, simultaneously with the news of his communication to Congress of his action in severing diplomatic relations with Germany. I think it was not only the right but the duty of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] to offer this resolution. From whom could it more appropriately come? He is our leader in matters pertaining to foreign relations; he is our spokesman in matters pertaining to foreign relations; and it is appropriate, fit, and proper that this resolution should be introduced by him. It was not only his privilege but his duty, and if he had not done it within a reasonable time I think some other Member of this body should have done it. But it naturally comes with more appropriateness, fitness, and propriety from the Senator from Missouri, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, than from any other Member of this body. If the action of the President should lead to war, it would not be his fault; it would not be our fault. The responsibility would be upon those who challenge our honor and insist on violating our rights. The President is a patient, peace-loving man. He has shown it; but he cherishes our honor and rights, and is not afraid to defend them; neither should we be. In such matters we should be his loyal supporters, and should make if known to the world.

I will vote for this resolution gladly and ungrudgingly, because I believe the President is absolutely right, because I believe that he did his duty; because I believe he is upholding the honor, the dignity, and the rights of this Nation; and because I believe it to be the duty of this body to go voluntarily and spontaneously to his support in doing so. We should fly to his support. Wait to be told that he would like to have our support? That is unthinkable. Perish the thought! Let us be as one with our President in defying a challenge of our rights from any nation or power on earth. Let no man, nation, or power think for an instant that in matters of national honor this body hesitates or wavers for a second in its loyal allegiance to our leader, our champion, our patient, prudent, time-tried, and soul-tested President.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, when the President delivered his message in joint session in the House of Representatives on the 3d of this month I was asked to give an expression as to whether I approved or disapproved of the President's message. I said, Mr. President, that not knowing the conditions as the President knew them, I was willing to take his judgment, and that it was probably the only thing left for him to do. But, Mr. President, that has nothing whatever to do with the resolution which has been introduced here by the distinguished Senator from Missouri, and I regret exceedingly that it has been brought into this body. This is only a Senate resolution. The Senate can confer no additional power upon the President of the United States that is not already conferred upon him by the Constitution of our country, and to say that we must pass this resolution merely for the purpose of showing to the country and to the world that we have confidence in the President, it seems to me, is not a sufficient argument to ask us to vote for it.

Of course, every loyal citizen of this country will support the President of the United States when he needs our support; but it has been stated upon this floor by the distinguished Senator from Missouri that the President of the United States has not asked for the passage of this resolution.

Mr. President, the fathers of this country very wisely provided that the Congress of the United States alone has the power to declare war. The President of the United States has acted, he has exhausted his constitutional powers, and I have not criticized him. He has done all that he can do under the power conferred upon him by the Constitution. The question will have to be solved by the Congress and not by the President. As much as I am interested in the President of the United States, and willing, as I may be, to follow him when he is right—which I assume he would be in so grave a cause as this, Mr. President—I am more interested in the welfare of the people of the United States than in any one man; and I, for one, am not willing to yield a single iota to any man, whether it is the President or anyone else.

Mr. President, I shall not vote for this resolution. I am opposed to this resolution, because it has no proper place in this body. It does not confer upon the President any additional power whatever. I think I have demonstrated during the short time that I have served in Congress that when the President of the United States needed my support he has always received it. I have not been one of those who have criticized him for the mistakes that have been made in dealing with countries closer to us than Germany, and the Members of the Senate know it.

Mr. President, I do not wish to go into this resolution and discuss it at length. I think it would have been a great deal better if it had never been introduced and if it had never been discussed. The country knows that every Member of the Senate will stand by the President in time of need. This resolution simply provides that we shall, by our votes in the Senate, show that we have confidence in him. If the President of the United States should send a message to Congress asking for appropriations for war purposes or upon a declaration of war it would have to be acted upon by both branches of Congress. I want to be free to vote as I see my duty. I do not wish to bind myself now to vote for any measure, regardless of whether it is in accordance with the wishes of the people whom I represent and the wishes of the people of this great Nation.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am satisfied that the motives of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Stone] in offering this resolution were of the highest and most patriotic character. I think, with reference to many of the questions connected with this situation, his views and mine are very much alike.

I objected to laying aside the unfinished business to take up this resolution. I did it because I believed this resolution to be ill advised, inopportune, and wholly uncalled for. I did it because I feared that just exactly what has occurred would take place. I do not know what others think about it, but I think that the debate to-day is the most unfortunate occurrence that has taken place in connection with this whole matter. It is very unfortunate that divisions should appear among us when we are confronted with the situation that now confronts us.

I am not going to discuss the various issues that may be considered to be involved in the matter, many of which have been discussed by Senators. I simply want to explain my position, in view of the fact that a roll call has been ordered upon the resolution. In my judgment, it would have been far better if no roll call had been asked for, and if the record had been made in such a way as to indicate no special division among us. But the roll call has been insisted upon and has been ordered, and I want to say just a few words.

I have always taken this position with reference to the acts of the President: Whenever the President acts, in our relations with foreign countries, within his powers under the Constitution, his act, as I look at it, becomes the act of the Government and country; and I am for my country right or wrong. It seems to be generally conceded, and I assume, that the President acted in this matter entirely within his constitutional powers. What was done was his act as it was done; but when he did it, it became the act of our Government; and as such, without questioning it in one way or the other, I would stand back of it and uphold and support it no matter what my personal views might be. I consider that my duty, so far as I am concerned, as a citizen and as a Senator.

Like the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Underwood], however, I wish to say that I do not consider that I am bound in any way whatsoever or limited in any way whatsoever by my vote upon this resolution in the course I shall take if, unfortunately, the question of a declaration of war shall be presented to this Congress. Then will come a question that I must pass upon as a Member of one of the war-declaring bodies of the Govern-Then whatever is done will be my responsibility, and I shall pass upon that as I deem to be wise, proper, and patriotic without feeling that I am restricted or limited or bound in any manner or form by this resolution or by my action upon it.

I am going to vote for the resolution, as it is here, simply because the act that it approves, so far as I consider it approves any act, has become the act of my Government, and nothing that I can do or say would undo it in any way.

A few days ago I delivered an address, and I want to repeat just a few words that I used then as expressing my views now. I said then, referring to this issue, that all partisanship should be laid aside. All former allegiance should be smothered. Our Americanism should be supreme. Devotion to and support of our Government, right or wrong, should be the watchword of each one of us. Our country now should have our sole and undivided loyalty. Our Government must assert and maintain the rights of its citizens; and you—referring to the people to whom I was speaking—and I ove it to our Americanism to support the Government, and we will do it.

Every American, however, worthy of the name, will do his part in this critical hour and refrain from exercising his right to travel for pleasure, or trade for profit, in order that his beloved country may not be drawn into this hell of ruin, suffering, and

It would be a crime against humanity, and a travesty upon the people's Government, if national honor may be used by selfish pleasure and lustful greed to involve 100,000,000 of peace-loving people in war. The Nation owes to its citizens protection in their people in war. The Nation owes to its citizens protection in their legal rights, but the citizen owes it to his Government to make sacrifices to keep it out of war. Surely, if the many are expected and are willing to offer their lives to maintain the Nation's honor, the few will be willing to forego pleasure and gain that the Nation's honor may not be attacked. In behalf of the humanity of America I appeal to every citizen to be patriotic in peace as he expects others to be patriotic in war.

Mr. President, I hope there may go out an appeal to the citizens of this country in this hour of danger; and I wish that our press, instead of continually urging war preparations and our press, instead of continuary urging war preparations and all that sort of thing, would lend its influence in an appeal to the people of this country, as was suggested by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] a few moments ago, to stay at home, to refrain from exercising the rights that the Government has asserted it will maintain to travel for pleasure or for profit, and not put themselves not only where they are in danger but where they endanger the peace and the prosperity of their country.

If we should declare war, we would expect the sons of our homes to offer themselves as volunteers to defend with their lives the country's honor. How much more ought we to expect our citizens to stay at home, not because they may not have the right to travel but in the interest of peace and the safety of our country? I should like to see coupled with this resolution a statement by the Senate that while we will assert and maintain the rights of our people, we will appeal to them to make some sacrifices in order that peace may stay with us, in order that we may not be confronted with the terrible alternative of war or national dishonor. I hope that the few of this country that may be tempted to go abroad, whose rights the Nation may have to maintain if they are endangered, will just deny themselves the exercise of these rights and show their patriotism and their love for country by doing this for just a little while. That will insure peace. That will show their patriotism. That will bring to them the consciousness that they have done their will bring to them the consciousness that they have done their duty as citizens and preserved the peace of their country and the happiness of its homes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I am going to be very brief; and I make that statement in order that I may, if possible, brief; and I make that statement in order that I may, if possible, induce Senators to listen to me for just a few moments.

Mr. LANE. That is offered as a bribe, Mr. President.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, the Senate is undoubtedly the greatest debating society on earth. That is a question that we might view from different angles. Some people may approve of it and others may reprobate it; but, for one, I hate to see the Senate become a debating society for moot questions and undertake to decide moot questions. I hate to see the Senate continually called on to express its opinion about matters that are not within its constitutional powers and upon which it that are not within its constitutional powers and upon which it is not called on to act.

I recall that not two years ago it was considered almost lese majeste throughout this country that either House of Congress warning American citizens not to travel on ships of belligerent nations; and the argument was then advanced, with so much force that both Houses of Congress yielded to it by tremendous majorities, that those questions were being settled by the President in a diplomatic way, in the proper exercise of his constitutional functions, and that the Congress had no concern whatever in it and no power with respect to it.

I thought that was true then. If it was true then, it is true to-day; and the Congress of the United States as such, and neither House of the Congress of the United States, is called upon to take, nor indeed can it take, any constitutional, legal action with respect to sending the ambassador of a foreign country away from this country or recalling our own ambassador from a foreign country. Now, if that be so—and no Senator will controvert it—then it seems to me, as an original proposition, that the contention of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] is manifestly sound, and that the Senate of the United States, one of the great constitutional law-making bodies of the Government, ought not to be called on to express any opinion whatever except about matters that come within its powers and about which it can take definite and constitutional action.

So much for that; but the question is here, and must be dealt with. It is just as well, Mr. President, for Senators to realize exactly what we are doing by this resolution, and for the country and the world to realize exactly what this resolution is and what it means.

Leaving out the preamble-and preambles never amount to anything; they always weaken a resolution or a law—the resolution that the Senate is called on to pass is this:

Resolved, That the Senate approves the action taken by the President as set forth in his address delivered before the joint session of the Congress as above stated.

The resolution is that the Senate approves the action of the President. What was the action? The action was that he gave the German ambassador his passports and recalled our ambassador from Berlin. Well, Mr. President, I will say if my opinion is desired in an ultraconstitutional way, that I do approve that action. I approve it for two reasons: First, because the President acted within his constitutional powers in taking it, and if he did not violate or exceed his constitutional powers, it is our duty to approve it, because he is the recognized organ of the Government for taking such action. Above that and beyond that, I approve the action for another and a very different reason, and a very weighty one, I think. To these Senators on both sides of this Chamber who have expressed their devotion to the cause of peace, I desire to say that I yield to no one in devotion to that cause, but it is my judgment that the President could have taken no weightier step, could have adopted no more effective method of promoting the cause of peace than to let the Imperial Government of Germany realize the intense gravity of the situation, to enforce upon that Government the view that this is a matter of the utmost gravity, and that the American people so regard it. If it was necessary to do something more than write notes-and I believe it was-if it was necessary to do something more than employ mere words to drive that conviction home to the German heart, then the President has adopted the only method that he could constitutionally adopt, the only method short of war itself that this country can adopt, to make the German Government realize how serious the situation is, and how seriously our people regard it. If anything on this earth, Senators, can promote peace, if anything on this earth can preserve peace and maintain peace with the German Government, it will be because the German Government and people realize, and it is driven home to them in this way, the gravity of the situation.

Therefore, I say, with all my heart I do approve the conduct and act of the President in directing our ambassador to come home and in sending their ambassador home, so that the Government of that country may understand how important this question is to us, and how serious the situation is to us, and to them.

Now, Mr. President, just one word more and my part in this discussion is over. I would seriously regret to see any considerable number of Senators in this Chamber, on either side of it, able number of Senators in this Chamber, on either side of it, vote against this resolution, not that I would question their motives, not that I would criticize their conduct, not that their conduct would be misunderstood in this country, but for fear that foreign people and foreign governments that do not understand the American institutions, might misinterpret and misread the situation here if it went out to the world that on this issue, thrust in this body unwisely, I believe, but nevertheless here, there was a considerable division in sentiment among the Members of the should express an opinion on what were called the Gore resolution in one body and the McLemore resolution in the other, United States and nullify his attempt to emphasize the gravity of this situation and apprise the German Government of the serious condition of public sentiment here on this question

So I earnestly hope that no considerable number of Senators will vote against the resolution, since it is here and we must vote one way or the other. If they do, I earnestly hope that their position may not be misapprehended abroad because, Mr. President, I believe, and every Senator on both sides of this Chamber must believe, yea, must know, that there is no real division of opinion or sentiment among the American people on this great question or in this great crisis. We do not want to fight about English rights or French rights or German rights; but, Mr. President, if we must fight for American rights, if they can be secured in no other way on earth except by fighting for them, I think the nations of the earth are destined to discover that there will be no real division of opinion among the American people on that issue. If any nation on this earth, great or small, in Europe or anywhere else, thinks that the American people will tamely submit to see American citizens butchered and their rights ignored on the high seas or anywhere else, that nation is about to receive a pretty speedy enlightenment as to what is the real temper and sentiment of the American people. There is no division among us. We do not want to fight about technicalities or about whether ships are armed defensively or offensively. We do not want to fight for English rights, but for American rights every citizen of this country will give his life, if need be. We want peace above all things except the honor of this country.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not indulge the hope of adding anything to the discussion that has already taken

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not indulge the hope of adding anything to the discussion that has already taken place, and were it not that against my advice and better judgment I am called upon to vote upon a resolution which I feel has no proper place here I would say nothing at all. If this resolution is introduced as a friendly act to the President or in the interest of the country's peace, then it seems to me that the President and the people should devoutly pray to God for deliverance from their friends, because I can think of nothing that will have a more opposite effect upon those purposes than this resolution and the debate which has followed its introduction. Prior to its presentation here and since the President's address to the two Houses of Congress there had been no expression in the Senate, there has been no opinion expressed in public by Senators antagonistic to the action of the President. Those who may have differed from the President have felt that opposition should not be publicly expressed. Senators have felt that he had acted in his constitutional authority and had not exceeded that authority, and were hoping that good might come from it. They have remained silent, and by their silence at least have given the nations of the world to understand that there was no division in the Congress of the United States or among the people of this country in their loyalty to the President.

But somehow or other some Senators who seem to be in charge of the foreign affairs of the Senate have seen fit to take some peculiar steps. The other day a resolution was introduced asking the Senate to pass upon a matter which was not within its jurisdiction, indorsing the President's efforts for peace. Today we are asked to indorse an act of the President which presages war. Why any Senator should have conceived it to be his duty to open up this question in the Senate and thus invite discussion is more than I can understand.

I said that I was going to be forced to vote upon this resolution against my better judgment. I know it has no proper place here, and I would have liked to have remained silent both in voice and vote on a question which can not accomplish any good purpose. I urged Senators who were insistent in presenting this resolution to refrain from doing so, because I could foresee, knowing the habit of the Senate in the past, that it would be debated, as it has been debated, and that instead of showing the world that there was harmony here it would be shown that there was a wide difference of opinion among Senators. The result has confirmed my prediction.

I agree, however, with the Senators who have preceded me that when it comes, if it shall come, to action to be taken on the part of the Senate on any matter, however serious, all Senators will be loyal to the Government. Certainly I will. I myself can conceive of no other action that the President could have taken than the one he did take. I have thought many times, and have so expressed myself on several occasions, that our country's conduct of foreign affairs in the past has led up to this fateful hour. It has struck.

Now, instead of allowing the effect to which the junior Senator of Georgia [Mr. Hardwick] so eloquently referred—namely, the effect upon the Imperial Government of Germany by the declar ration of the President of the United States in breaking off diplomatic relations—the Senate in a measure at least neutralizes that effect by this protracted debate.

I trust, Mr. President, that if we shall have greater trials or continued trials in the future, this experiment of bringing irrelevant matters to the Senate will not be repeated. The Senate has its duties to perform and I submit it will not shirk from the performance of those duties if the time to perform them shall come, but to ask at this time Senators to indorse a resolution which is read differently by different Senators and which some feel commits them to a policy which upon reflection they might not wish to approve is not dealing justly with them.

Mr. President, I shall support this resolution on the theory that it is to be an expression by the Senate whether the matter is properly here or not indorsing the President of the United States. I do not care to be registered in opposition to the President of the United States in his efforts to protect and maintain the rights and honor of our country. I have my opinion as to who is responsible for the step that has been taken, but it is not proper nor will it serve any good purpose for me to express that opinion now. The step has been taken. The President of the United States is my President; he has spoken for my country and I shall not knowingly give the impression at home or abroad that I am opposed to upholding his hand in these fateful times, reserving to myself, however, the right to determine later if the question is put up to me whether the cause is sufficient for us to declare war upon a nation which through all our history has been friendly to us.

I regret exceedingly that these circumstances have arisen. I would have been glad not out of cowardice but I would have been glad to have avoided a vote on this useless trouble-making resolution. But it is here and with this explanation I shall vote affirmatively, regretting exceedingly that those who have thought it best to present it had not read the inevitable result.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, now that the sapient and puissant Senator from Michigan has unloaded his tender stomach of overcharged bile I hope he may be given an immediate chance to reluctantly avail himself of the opportunity he seems to dread of speaking by way of a vote. I ask again for a vote.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I have been unable to attend the

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I have been unable to attend the sessions to-day. I was on committee work all day, from 10 o'clock until about 3, and I have not heard the arguments. I find myself compelled to decide on a question which I have not heard discussed either pro or con.

As far as I am concerned personally, I have felt as a citizen of this country that it was the duty of the Congress and the executive department of the Government to keep the people out of war at this time, except in case of repelling invasion. The war between the warring nations is a horror, the greatest that has ever happened in the history of mankind; it has cost suffering and loss of life and loss of money to a degree that perhaps is almost incalculable. I did not want to participate in it. We are 3,000 miles from where it is being carried on, or more than that, in fact, on the average. We will have plenty to do if we attend to our own business. We should occupy a position of strict neutrality with kindly expression to all and the hope that they may quit the useless slaughter and with an offer to freely help them recover themselves when they do quit, quite regardless of either or any of the nations and without prejudice to any one of them. That has been my state of mind ever since the war began.

I love the English and their bulldog grit. In part they are my ancestors. I always did like them. I think I love the French more than any other of the warring nations. They came to our rescue in a time of our early history, and they are such a light-hearted, loyal, patriotic people that I admire them. I admire the Germans for their efficiency and steady industry, their deep, hard study in solving problems of scientific and economic value to the world, in which matters they have led every other nation. I like all of those people. I have visited in all those countries as a medical student and I made my home in the family boarding houses. There was never a better woman in the world than the English woman with whom you go to board. There is nobody more kind than the good, motherly old French woman who takes you into her house and treats you as she would her own child.

When you go over to Germany the good old hausfrau delights in stuffing you, if she can, with good things to eat, like your own mother did, and then assigns you to sleep between great thick feather mattresses, which smother you almost to death, but always with the kindliest intention. No man can visit among any of these people without loving them, respecting them, and being ready to fight to keep them happy and out of the horrors of war. Those are my sentiments and have been at all times. I have commiserated with all of them, and only hope and pray that we, as an independent Nation outside of their borders, with prosperous conditions, might stay at home and mind our own blessed business. We have plenty to do here, and should keep out of that trouble.

In early days where I came from when a row would spring up among men, and they began shooting at one another, of common sense which was practiced by the people who were not engaged in it was to keep out of it, and nobody who was not a born fool ever rushed in between them to become a backstop for bullets. We always left them to fight it out, and thanked God we were not mixed up in it, and then when the smoke had cleared away we gathered the dead up on a shutter and sent for the doctor for the wounded; we regretted the occurrence and went about our business. At this time we are confronted with a similar condition, where one nation has said to us, "We are at war and you must not trade with such and such a country, and if your ships are loaded with cargoes that will be of value to those people whom we are fighting we will confiscate the cargo and tie your ships up in our docks." Then later along comes the other country and claims that the other enemy nation is trying to starve them, which they are, and they place the same restrictions upon us, and draw a dead line around their enemy's country and declare it to be a danger zone and tabooed.

Any American citizen who would go to Europe and walk down between the trenches where they were firing at one another with their machine guns would be an ass, and would deserve to get just what he would get. I would not fight for him. No; I would not take any chance of being shot at for him. That kind of a citizen is of no value or credit to us; he puts this Nation in peril and does not bring anything of value in return to this country after having been nurtured in it to the age of maturity, an age when he ought in ordinary decency to help keep out of trouble by using a reasonable amount of common sense. So I would say to him when he starts for the war zone, "My dear brother, we bid you farewell; you may go there if you want; you can tramp up and down all your life between the firing lines; but I do not assume any responsibility for your happiness or good health. It is right up to you."

After a nation has fought bravely and well as have the others and for what it considers to be as just a cause and for as high ideals as its enemies, and it should come and say to me that there is a certain zone about my enemies' country inside of which no ship will be permitted to pass with ammunition or food, I would say to him, "Very well, that suits me first-rate. I live more than 3,000 miles away from you and our people at home need all the food we have and more than they get and it looks like we might need our ammunition after a while in order to rehabilitate ourselves from a peace footing to one of reasonable war preparation in the event that some other nation may come to dislike us. It is up to you, gentlemen. I will keep my ships at home."

There is many a family in this country to-day, gentleman, who under the high cost of living, due in part to the war, are not getting quite enough to eat. Right here within five blocks of this building where I am talking, or not to exceed 10 squares, and all over the country there are families that are cutting down on their food supply for lack of money with which to pay for it. Our first duty is to them. Prices of food have gone up so high that no more can they eat the amount which is necessary for their proper nourishment. They are also going short of clothing and shoes, both in quantity and quality, and children begin to suffer here at home, all due in a degree and indirectly to this great and unfortunate conflict which is going on upon the other side of the ocean, and I have no heart in it or for it.

I would say to the people of this country or to the gentlemen who want to ship merchandise and other articles of value for profit for the support of these other people, that our people also need them, and it may be that they need them nearly as badly as do the people over there. In England the price of bread is said to be cheaper than it is in this country for the reason that they have cheaper wheat than we have, because they bought it from us when the market was lower. Our first duty lies here; and our people both need and want bread. They are our people, and they are those of our people who will have to fight if we become entangled in your embroilment. Our first duty is to them.

I would say to those who want to go across the dead line, where there are submarines or Zeppelins that drop bombs, "Go, and God go with you; but go at your own risk. I will not fight to save the merchandise of any such American citizens as you are. Go and get killed if you want to, but we, the people, will not fight for you, or the like of you, or for your cargoes of war supplies."

I have been at sea a little, and although I have never served before the mast" I will guarantee to the Senate that I can take a ship out to sea, and if the sinking of that ship will cause war between this country and some other nation I can bring a war home to you and upon this country in 10 days. It would be an easy thing to do, so easy that I fear it will be done by those who would profit from such an incident. We are running a great risk at this time. From motives of selfishness anyone may force this country into a war in a week, if we are going to stand upon our rights to act the fool in any such a manner.

It is the duty of this country, first and now, as it has been its duty for some time in the past, to say to American citizens: "Go yourself or with your ships at your peril; go with the understanding that you are about to cause the loss of thousands of lives of your fellow citizens, who are just as good men as you are, and most of them better, I presume; go if you want to make an excursion into the realms of warfare; but go at your own peril. We will not imperil the happiness and perhaps the very existence of this Nation to fight for such as you." So also to the man who wants to ship for profit I would say: "Do you also go, but at your own peril. I will see you to the 3-mile limit, I will give you a Book of Psalms and a God bless you, and 'a fare ye well to you,' and then watch you fade from view and sink into the horizon, and if you come back, well and good; but if you do not come back I will not grapple either for your body or your cargo. You well know the risk yourself, and you have a right to assume it; but you have no right to push or drag me into your row. The minute you do, you become my enemy, just as much as the foreigners with whom I have no conflict or anything but kindly feeling."

That is where I stand on this question, and where else am I going to stand, not only for myself, but for the people whom I am representing, and whom I believe indorse me in the position which I take here and who have prayed that we be kept out of this war.

So I say, that while I have not had time to be here to listen to this argument, to the argument which might convince me that this is not my proper course to pursue, they are my opinions as one of you, representing a people just as good as any whom you represent, and I am not afraid to express them at any time or any place.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, we have professed from the beginning of this war to occupy the position of a neutral Nation and to be interested alone in maintaining the neutral rights of a neutral Nation. It has seemed to me that that was the proper attitude to occupy, and should be the attitude which we should occupy on to the close of this controversy. A South American statesman said at the beginning of this war that the rights of the belligerents at sea should begin where the rights of the neutrals end. That, to my mind, is the correct rule, and the rule which we should have made and snould now make every effort to maintain. It is a rule which we should apply and enforce toward all alike.

If I understand the purpose of the President in breaking off diplomatic relations with Germany, it was solely and alone in the interest of our neutral rights, the President believing that, by reason of the record which had been made by Germany, her last note was a direct challenge to those rights, and that his action in severing diplomatic relations was solely in the interest and exclusively for the purpose of maintaining those rights. Believing, as I have from the beginning, that it was our duty to firmly and positively maintain and support those rights as against all who should challenge them, I can not do otherwise, of course, than to vote for this resolution as an indorsement of that which the President believed to be the proper way to maintain those rights.

Mr. President, there is no difficulty upon my part in arriving at that conclusion so far as this particular vote is concerned. What most disturbs me is that in all probability, if the worst should come to the worst, we shall no longer be able to keep the position which we have professed to occupy heretofore, and that we may find ourselves, unless we are most circumspect and resolute, an open and avowed ally of one of the belligerent powers or of one group of the belligerent powers. That, in my judgment, would be the most disastrous thing that could possibly happen to this country. I rise, therefore, not so much to explain my vote in reference to the pending resolution as to throw out a single suggestion in reference to that feature of this unfortunate situation.

I have observed from the press, particularly from interviews in the press both at home and abroad, and from letters and telegrams, that there is the belief that this action is a pronounced step in the direction of engaging in this war, not for the purpose alone of protecting neutral rights, but for the purpose of bringing this war to a close by throwing our weight and our influence upon the side of the allies. I read only yesterday morning a statement by one of the most distinguished publicists in this country, published in a paper which has perhaps as large a circulation as has any other paper in the country, this statement which I shall quote. After reviewing the action of the President and what probably might be done, the statement

Should we not rather try to supplement as best we can the entente-war organizations already in operation? This means placing the Navy under British orders; encouraging foreign enlistments; stimulating the export of war material, above all aiding the enemies of the common foe with our innancial resources. In the main, that is what Japan has done. To do otherwise, in my judgment, is to waste our strength.

That view, Mr. President, has found expression not in the Senate Chamber, but by many and some of great influence outside of the Senate Chamber, by people who ought to think along different lines.

It ought to be distinctly understood that we are interested alone in protecting our neutral rights as a neutral Nation, and that what we have done and all that we may do is for that purpose and no other. We are seeking no alliances. We are not consciously or purposely moving to the side of either of the belligerent forces. That is the position we should occupy; it is the position which I shall hold myself free at all times to the extent of my ability to aid in having our Government occupy. What the future has in store no man knows, but I think we ought to brace ourselves against the strong tendency which will now arise to become a partisan in the war. Whatever our individual sympathies may be as citizens we ought not to permit our individual views to direct our Government along other than I think it not only the position which we should occupy in the interest of our own people and for their peace and happiness but it is the position which we ought to occupy for the ultimate influence which we may hope to exercise in the final adjustment of this conflict. I agree not at all with those who would have this Government take up at once the cause of

As I understand, the President's sole object and purpose was to maintain and retain the position of a neutral in this controversy and to defend alone neutral rights, and that is the position which I understand him to occupy and to intend to occupy to the conclusion, and upon that understanding I vote for this resolution indorsing his action severing diplomatic relations. I would vote just as quickly to indorse his action in severing diplomatic relations with any power which should put at defiance our undoubted rights as a neutral. If I supposed for a moment that the President was in any instance to be swerved from his attitude heretofore of conducting this Nation along neutral lines, I certainly should under no circumstances give my indorsement to the action which severed our diplomatic relations with Germany.

Mr. President, as I have said, we have professed to be neutral from the beginning. I am not going to discuss now whether or not we have in all instances been neutral, but I want to record my conviction that when we have deviated, if we have deviated at all, from the line of neutrality, we have made a regrettable mistake. If we should in the future, notwithstanding we may have a controversy with one side or the other, fail to occupy that position and to insist upon the maintenance of neutral rights, regardless of who challenges them, and to insist upon our rights under international law regardless of who inveighs against them, we shall have taken a step that the people of this country will not approve and ought not to approve. Let us have our position clearly understood that we have and can have no controversy with either side except for these reasons and purposes.

Mr. President, I appreciate-I hope to some extent at leastthe conditions which will be presented to the world at the close of this war. The loss of life in the field and in the hospitals, the broken families, the maimed and impoverished, the depletion of credits, and the destruction of property-even these are not all there is to this war. After that comes the bitterness and the hate, smoldering on through the decades, the demoralization of men's faith in the obligations of treaties, in the ties of international friendship, and even in Christianity itself; for this war is the most pronounced threat to return to barbaric methods and brute force in society and in government since the waves of Islam's fanaticism broke and re-formed and broke again upon the iron nerves and redoubtable valor of Charles Martel's men Its deadening, discouraging, disintegrating effect upon all the vital ties and moral ligaments which bind society together, upon all that the human family cherishes and loves, beggars description. But the era of rehabilitation and regenerabeggars description. But the era of reliabilitation and regenera-tion, nevertheless, is to come. That long, patient, dreary task is before the world and must be met. I do not want to see my country seek either to ignore the task or to avoid its portion of the burden. I want it to be prompt with its good offices, its counsel, its sympathy, its patience, its tolerance, with its wealth, its means, both spiritual and material, to help in every way to bind up the wounds of the nations and "to do all which may help to achieve a just and lasting peace." But, sir, I want this and all that it may do to be done as a great neutral Christian nation, drawing from the situation and from the task performed no recompense in the way of promised assistance in the future and incurring no obligation save that which we owe to justice and humanity. I want no alliances, no leagues, no entanglements. I want this Nation to stand alone, except those who voluntarily stand with it, in this crash of nations, firm in its purpose to uphold international law, supporting with all its influence international morality, conserving to the utmost of its powers that influence and prestige which will enable it to serve and counsel in the day of reconciliation and readjustment. What this passion-torn world needs and will need are not more leagues and alliances, but a great untrammeled, courageous neutral power, representing, not bias, not prejudice, not hate, not conflict, but order and law and justice. For these things we have stood for nearly a hundred and fifty years, and our influence has been of incalculable worth to mankind; for these things let us continue to stand, and the time will come in this very world crisis when we may serve all who recognize that our purposes and our policies are just and righteous altogether.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]; but understanding that if present he would as I intend to vote, I feel at liberty to vote and vote "yea."

Mr. GRONNA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. Johnson], but as this is not a partisan question, though a grave one, I feel at liberty to vote and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). The junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson] is necessarily absent on account of illness. I agreed to pair with him for the day. derstand, however, that if present he would vote as I am about to vote on this question. Therefore I feel at liberty to vote and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], who is absent. I understand that if present he would vote as I shall vote. I vote "yea."

So Mr. Stone's resolution was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I intended to have taken some part in the discussion upon the resolution which has just been agreed to. Matters transpiring in the debate led me to desire to procure from my committee room certain of the diplomatic correspondence with the belligerent governments, and I had gone to my committee room to secure the documents when the vote was rung in. I desire to say now that at an early date, and upon an occasion quite as pertinent to the issues involved as the resolution which has just been pending I shall say what I expected to say to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin has said that the vote was "rung in." The Chair would like to know if the Senator from Wisconsin is making any charge against the

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Why, most assuredly not, Mr. President. There was no occasion, I think, for the Chair or any-body else to understand anything of the kind. I had left the Chamber while one of the Senators was speaking to procure some documents from my room, and while I was absent from the Chamber the vote was rung in. I returned as soon as I could, but, of course, the vote was being taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair wants it understood that the Chair has never ordered a vote as long as the Chair has had any information that any Senator wanted to speak. The Chair was not aware of the fact that the Senator from Wisconsin desired to speak.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Why, of course the Chair was not, because I had not yet addressed the Chair, and there was no occasion for any misunderstanding.

Mr. JAMES. The Senator used the words "rung in." The bell was rung for the vote, and that is what I understand the Senator to mean by the expression.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19359) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.

Mr. CHILTON. I move that at not later than 6 o'clock the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. CHILTON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion. The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded

Mr. SAULSBURY. I transfer my pair as stated to the senior

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I am

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GRONNA. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. Johnson] to the Senator from California [Mr. Works] and vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the negative). Since voting I observe that the Senator from New York [Mr. O'Gor-MAN], with whom I am paired, is absent. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] and allow my

Senate concurrent resolution No. 4. (By Senator Napier.)

Senate joint memorial for the protection and maintenance of the oil industries of the State of Colorado.

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of Colorado (the house of representatives concurring), That—

Whereas hundreds of citizens of this State have taken oil-placer claims under the oil-placer mining act and have compiled with the law in good faith by doing the assessment work required to hold and develop said claims; and

Whereas in many cases these lands have been located and held by prospectors, who have expended their time and money for many years in trying to hold and develop these oil-placer claims until the conditions and demand for the product would make it possible to operate the same; and Whereas these lands were located and held under the only law that made it possible for the prospector for oil or gas to acquire the same; and Whereas these locations were made in good faith and held by the locators before any withdrawal of said lands was made or even contemplated by the Government; and Whereas there is now before Congress a bill known as the Ferris-Phelan bill, H. R. 406, providing for the leasing of all oil and gas lands on the public domain; and Whereas lands which have not been withdrawn are affected by said leasing bill in such a way as to jeopardize existing claims of present bona fide locators: Therefore be it Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to amend said leasing bill to give to all locators and assigns who have held the land in good faith and have complied with the oil-placer mining law the preferential right to lease the same on the same terms that may be required from any other applicant, and claims of original locators or assigns having perfected discoveries under the oil-placer mining law as recognized by State courts to be exempt from being compelled to lease such lands from the Government or pay a royalty burden: Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to the Hon. Charles S. Thomas, Hon. John F. Shaffrorth, Hon. Ed. T. Taylor, Hon. Edward Kearing, Hon. Ben Hilliard, and the Hon. C. B. Timber Lake, asking their aid in carrying out the object of this resolution.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I present a telegram from citizens of Jackson, Miss., relative to the pending emergency revenue bill, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

JACKSON, MISS., February 6, 1917.

Hon. J. K. Vardaman,

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read as follows:

Requesting the President of the United States to designate and appoint a day on which funds may be raised for the relief of the Ruthenians (Ukrainians).

(Ukrainians).

Whereas in the countries situated in the eastern part of Europe, the theater of devastating war, there are at least 1,000,000 of Ruthenians (Ukrainians) in dire need of food, clothing, and shelter; and Whereas hundreds of thousands of these people have been forced to abandon their homes and their property, and being deprived of all opportunity to provide even for their most elementary wants have undergone disease, starvation, and indescribable suffering; and Whereas the people of the United States of America have learned with sorrow of this terrible plight of great numbers of their fellow beings and have most generously responded to the appeal of humanity for assistance whenever such appeal has reached them: Therefore be it Resolved, etc., That in view of the wretchedness, misery, and privation which these people are enduring, the President of the United States be respectfully requested to designate and appoint a day on which the citizens of this country may give expression to their sympathy by contributing to the funds now being raised for the relief of the Ruthenians (Ukrainians) in the belligerent countries.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I rise to an inquiry. What do "and so forth," as the Clerk reads the report from the House of Representatives, and the constantly recurring phraseology "with certain amendments" mean? I think the Senate is entitled to have these messages read at length, and I object, and many other Senators, I want to say, on this side of the Chamber object, and I voice an undercurrent of criticism of the liberties taken at the desk with messages and other communications. hope hereafter the procedure will be orderly and regular, and that messages will be read without comment from the clerks or without interpolation of phraseology not contained in the docu-

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask that the unfinished business be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19359) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918,

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask the Secretary to state the amendment which was pending when the bill was laid aside yesterday. I think it was the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Brady].

Mr. BRADY. On page 63, line 6, I wish to offer the following amendment:

Provided. That in the sale or rental of films educational institutions associations for agricultural education not organized for profit shall have preference.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I suggest that the Secretary read the amendment. We could not hear the Senator as he read it.
Mr. BRADY. I will be glad to have the Secretary read the amendment

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 63, line 6, after the word "films," at the end of the line insert:

Provided, That in the sale or rental of films educational institutions r associations for agricultural education not organized for profit shall have preference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment of the committee?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator from Idaho state the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. BRADY. The original paragraph reads as follows:

For photographic equipment and photographic material and artists' tools and supplies, $17.000: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, under such rules and regulations and subject to such conditions as he may prescribe, to loan, rent, or sell copies of films to educational institutions or associations for agricultural education not organized for profit. not organized for profit.

The committee decided to strike out after the word "films," in line 6, the words "to educational institutions or associations for agricultural education not organized for profit," so that it would permit them to sell them only to outside firms. I believe that is a wise provision, with the exception that I am satisfied educational institutions organized for agricultural purposes should have preference. It does not prevent the sale to other institutions or firms at all.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to offer an amendment. Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment. I have overlooked the fact that there is a committee amendment which has not yet been disposed of. It is the seed-distribution proposition. I should like to have it now disposed of and that will be a disposition of all the committee amendments.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——
Mr. PAGE. I do not yield the floor.
Mr. LODGE. I wish to ask the Senator from South Carolina, before we recur to the committee amendments, which, of course, he has a right to do, to allow me to offer an amendment as I am obliged to leave the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont has the floor.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the Senator will allow me to offer my amendment now. It is very brief, indeed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Vermont will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 14, after the word "purposes," the first word in line 7, insert a comma and the words:

And $15,000 for the purchase of lands in the vicinity of the Morgan horse farm near Middlebury, Vt.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, when this amendment was before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry one of our members stated he thought this would be a new and dangerous innovation, a precedent which we ought not to establish because he said the additions to experiment stations in the different States had usually been paid for by the States themselves. Upon investigation I found that this is a mistake, that there are numerous precedents for action of this kind. I wrote to the department asking for a statement in regard to the matter and here is their reply which I wish to read:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY,
Washington, D. C., February 2, 1917.

Hon. CARROLL S. PAGE, United States Senate.

United States Senate.

Dear Senator Page: Referring to your request to Mr. Rommel by telephone this morning for information concerning the purchase of land for the benefit of this bureau for experimental or quarantine purposes, permit me to give you the following information:

Experiment Station, Bureau of Animal Industry, Bethesda, Md.: This is the station where the principal part of the veterinary experimental work with animals is carried on. The original farm of 20 acres was bought July 5, 1899, at a cost of $20,000. An additional 30 acres was bought August 11, 1902, at a cost of $10,000. In view of the fact that it was found necessary to have similar facilities for carrying on field laboratory experiments and investigations in animal husbandry and dairying near Washington, Congress was petitioned to appropriate for the purchase of additional land, and under congressional authority the department bought the experimental farm of the Bureau of Animal Industry near Beltsville, Prince Georges County, Md. This consists of 475 acres. It was bought January 30, 1910, at a cost of $25,000.

The bureau maintains three quarantine stations on the Atlantic seaboard, all bought under congressional authority. The appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1901 authorized the expenditure of $50,000 to purchase and maintain quarantine stations. Under this authority the quarantine station at Athenia, N. J., was established. In 1904 $4,000 was made available for the purchase of additional land at Athenia. The total acreage there is now 50 acres.

In the same year Congress appropriated $10,000 for the purchase of land for a quarantine station of the bureau at or near the port of Baltimore. Under this authority the quarantine station at Turner, Md., was established.

In 1909, under congressional authority, the bureau purchased 31 acres established.

In 1909, under congressional authority, the bureau purchased 31 acres of land at Littleton, Mass., near the port of Boston, at a cost of $4,000.

Trusting that this is the information which you wish, I am,

Very truly, yours,

A. D. Melvin.

A. D. MELVIN, Chief of Bureau.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will allow me, I find that that amount has been estimated for. As far as I am concerned I am willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. PAGE. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from South Carolina will allow me, I should like to offer at this time an amendment on page 69, after the word "elsewhere," in line 9, to insert "demonstration of boys' and girls' clubs at dairy exposition at Springfield, Mass.," and then, on line 10, to change the total amount from "$578,240" to "$593,240," adding $15,000.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I shall have to make a point of order against the amendment in that it is new matter and has not been estimated for.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, I am sorry the Senator from South Carolina feels bound to make a point of order, but I am aware that if it is made I am unable to resist it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If it is an appropriation not estimated for and not reported by a standing committee, the point of order is sustained.

Mr. PHELAN. I desire to submit an amendment.
Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will ask the Senator to withhold that until we dispose of the last two committee amendments. One was pending at the time the Senate took a recess yesterday. I ask that it be taken up and disposed of. It is on page 27, "Purchase and distribution of valuable seeds." The House adopted the provision and sent it here, and, as I said when the matter was under consideration yesterday, I was not present when the committee took action upon it. It is not necessary for me to repeat what I said yesterday. I believe that this is one of the most important items in the bill. There are right now requisitions from all over the country, especially from that part of the country where droughts occurred during the last year to such an extent as to destroy all seed locally. I wish to say a few words as to this talk about its being a graft, and then I shall have no more to say and let the Senate take what action it sees fit.

The people of this country understand that this is the policy of the Government, and it makes no difference who may be elected to the other House or to the Senate, that this policy will be adhered to, and that they will receive whatever seed the Government has for distribution in the natural order of I do not believe that there is a more helpful provision in all this bill than the Government distribution of garden, field, and flower seed. There is not a single institution of learning in the rural districts of which I know in my State that is not asking for flower seed, thereby beautifying the landscape and cultivating the æsthetic taste of the children by the planting of such seed, and in a thousand little gardens the people are using the seed to benefit themselves. I hope the Senate will restore this item.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the acting chairman of the committee if he is speaking only for himself in this request and not for the committee?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am speaking only for myself, as I said at the commencement of my remarks. not present, as the Senator from Iowa, who is a member of the committee, knows. Had I been present, I should have reserved the right that I am now taking to object to the action of the committee. I do not want the Senate even to feel that in my position as acting chairman of the committee I am carrying any other weight on the committee save my personal opinion about this matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before saying a word in opposition to the amendment of the committee, I am going to take the liberty to sound a warning to both sides of the Chamber regarding the present status of the legislation of this session.

The pending appropriation bill has been before the Senate a long time and there are 11 great appropriation bills not yet reported to the Senate. The District of Columbia appropriation bill is ready for presentation, the other great appropriation bills are coming along rapidly, and the revenue bill has yet to be considered. My admonition is—it is not worth much, I understand, but I am going to take the liberty of saying a word along that line notwithstanding-my admonition is that unless we get down to work and throw aside all extraneous matters, including contests over nominations, we are not going to complete the program of even passing the supply bills between now and the 4th day of March. There are only 21 or 22 days remaining to us, and Senators know how rapidly the days pass when we are engaged in controversial matters.

While I have no responsibility at all in this matter, I speak to my associates on this side of the Chamber as well as to my friends on the other side when I say that there is danger that even the supply bills will not be passed by the time this session concludes.

Now, Mr. President, a single word as to the pending amendment. I am not going to argue it at any considerable length. I have said every year when this matter has been before the Senate that I think it a very great mistake for the Senate to strike out this appropriation. I concur in every word that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Smith] has said as to the value of this appropriation to the people of this country. am now sending the seeds that are accredited to me to institutions of learning in New Hampshire, largely to the high schools and the graded schools. I am getting letters so numerous along that line that I shall not be able perhaps to fill all of the requisitions. In addition to that I have sent a very large number of seeds to individual men and women who have written me asking for them.

I will repeat what I have said on more than one occasion, that this is a matter that can be laughed at, or scorned perhaps, but nevertheless if Senators living in rural districts or having little homes in rural towns, as I chance to have, will take the trouble to inquire of the farmers as to whether or not they are having better gardens, or as to whether or not they are having gardens under this distribution of seeds when they would not have any gardens unless these seeds were sent to them, they will find what I have found, that a tremendous amount of good comes to the people of the rural districts because of this comparatively small expenditure.

This day, Mr. President, of high prices, of scarcity of food products, when every foot of land in this country that can be tilled ought to be tilled, when every available vacant lot in every town and city ought to be cultivated for the purpose of increasing the food supply of the American people, is a bad time for us to deny to the farmers, as well as to those living in urban communities, this little patrimony of the Government.

Mr. President, it is a foregone conclusion that the people want this thing; that the people ask for it; and even if the Senate strikes out the provision, I think I can safely indulge in the prophecy that it will reappear in this bill, and that it will become a law. But, however that may be, we ought not to strike it from the bill.

Mr. President, having warned the Senate of the value of time, I am not going to be guilty myself of occupying any unnecessary time in discussing this question. I shall content myself with voting against the committee amendment, and I trust the Senate will vote the committee amendment down.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I rise to indorse what the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] has said with reference to the value placed upon these seeds by the country people. I want also to express my agreement with the Senator with reference to his comments upon the necessity of economizing time. A number of supply bills will be here for consideration in a very short while, and they are going to carry enormous sums. When we realize the fact that the heaviest part of the burden to be put upon the American people by the appropriations carried in those bills will fall upon the people—the farmers—who are given this slight benefaction, I do not think that Congress ought to hesitate to restore this provision of the bill, which was placed there by the House of Representatives. The people pay the taxes and they want the seed, if I am to judge by the letters I receive from the people and the applications that come to my office for these seeds.

I have heard it said in derision here on the floor of the Senate that Senators have received letters from constituents who say, "Cut out free seeds." I myself have received one or two such foolish letters; but if the Agricultural Department is doing its duty, it is selecting and distributing among the people the very best seeds obtainable, seeds that have been tested, seeds that have been developed, and which will bring, when planted and properly cultivated, the largest possible yield from the land.

I do not see why this matter should be a subject of contro-I can account for it upon one theory, and versy every year. one only, and that is lack of information or, perhaps, misinformation on the subject. It may be that the constituents of a few Senators and Representatives from the urban districts have no use for the seeds, but I know, from actual experience and observation, that the people of my State desire them, and I hope that the amendment of the committee may be rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I very much hope that the amendment of the committee will not be defeated. I do not intend to indulge in any sharp epithets with respect to the practice of distributing seeds or to use any harsh language or any particular amount of ridicule directed toward the custom.

I have been interested in hearing what Senators have said upon the floor as to the great desire of the farmers of this country to have these seeds given to them. Permit me to say that I myself live in the heart of a farming district, every one of my neighbors being an agriculturist, and it has yet to come to my attention that there is any great and legitimate demand for a package of garden seeds from the average farmer of the United States. At best these seeds must be distributed over such an enormous area and to such a vast number of people, if the thing is to be done fairly, as to prevent any one person on the list of recipients of seeds deriving any benefit worthy of the name. At most, if they are distributed evenly and fairly, it would amount to about one package apiece, worth approximately

Now, Mr. President, so far as the argument is directed toward the rarity and value of these seeds, permit me to say that they are not rare or valuable in any sense whatsoever. They are seeds in common use all over the country in a commercial sense. The Government itself purchases the seeds from con-tractors or on contract with commercial seedsmen. There is nothing strange or new in the manner of planting them or growing them. There has grown up from the custom without doubt in some communities a disposition to regard this distribution of seeds as the extension of a favor, showing that the recipient is not forgotten at the seat of government; but to contend that they are of the slightest economic value to the development of agriculture in the United States is stretching the matter so far that I can not command words to describe it.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. Does not the Senator realize that there is great force in the argument made here to-day that it is necessary to have these seeds in order to decorate the country schoolhouses with lilacs, sunflowers, and forget-me-nots?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I suppose, if we confined the distribution of seeds to the country schoolhouses and other educational institutions, and made the distribution evenly and thoroughly, that the country schoolhouse or educational institution would receive about 25 cents' worth of seeds annually.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I do not want to be misrepresented about this matter. presume my remarks are what called forth the interrogatory on the part of the Senator from Iowa, but what I said was that there was a demand on the part of educational institutions in my State—high schools and, to some extent, graded schools and academies—for these seeds; that the children were taking the seeds and planting them, and in that way developing a love for that kind of work, which is desirable, besides making some contribution to the food supply of our people. That is what I said, and it is true, so far as New Hampshire is concerned. I can not speak for Iowa or for New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, of course I have the greatest respect for the opinion of the Senator from New Hampshire, but I do think, in all frankness, that it is stretching pretty far to argue that the distribution of these seeds contributes to the food supply of the United States. It is impossible, in my judgment, that that should be so. It may be that in some States the matter is taken seriously, but certainly in the agricultural regions with which I am somewhat familiar and I have spent my life in one-the distribution of these seeds is regarded as somewhat in the nature of a joke. I have seen in the home office of a Representative sack after sack filled with packages of seeds, with the open notice and advertisement to the entire community that anybody who wished to come in and get a package could do so at his leisure and pleasure; and at the end of the planting season three-quarters of them were left.

In that section the people really do not desire them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator inform the Senate as to the locality where, as he states, the seeds are not asked for, because I assure the Senator that the seeds can be used in other parts of the country, where the people will be very glad to receive them?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In reply to the Senator from Utah, I will say that, so far as my observation goes, the farmers of western New York are not clamoring for these free seeds; and the instance which I have related occurred in that part of the country, which is as typical and as purely an agricultural section as exists anywhere upon this continent.

I know that the indiscriminate distribution of any article of value for nothing necessarily excites the appetite of the re-cipient, and in the district or the State which is flooded with any article which is given away for nothing, particularly if it comes from the seat of government, you will find the demand for that article is increased. Small as the cost is, comparatively speaking, of this distribution, I think myself that there is a fundamental error and fallacy back of it and under it.

I have opposed, Mr. President, as I shall always oppose, the distribution of any article or articles of value to citizens of the Republic free of charge. It is demoralizing in its effects, and it is not the function of the Government to engage in such operations. One might just as well say that, in order to be fair with the distribution of things of value to the people of the United States, we should send pairs of shoes to urban residents. They are of value and would be appreciated if received, but my observation teaches me, sir, that the average independent, self-respecting farmer does not demand this gratuity, small though it may be, from this great Government, and that if it is once abolished, if the practice is once given up, we will never hear again any considerable demand for its renewal.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator if he has noticed that one house of the Legislature of Nebraska, which is an agricultural State, has passed a resolution requesting Congress to desist from this practice?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; I listened with great interest to the reading of such a resolution at the Secretary's desk some days ago. I believe there was also such a resolution from the Legislature of North Dakota. I will inquire of the Senator

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That was indicative, at least, that a legislature, composed in large part of representative American farmers, places no faith or reliance in this practice, and has no particular affection for it.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I dislike very much to oppose anything of which the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is in favor, but the committee saw proper to strike out this provision from the bill. Furthermore, Mr. President, it has been stated by the Senator from New York [Mr. Wadsworth] that I had presented a concurrent resolution adopted by the legislative assembly of my State, protesting against the distribution of free seeds. I do not claim that that represents the will of all the people of my State. I take it that it is impossible for the members of that assembly to know the desire and the will of all the citizens of the State. I wish to say that I have received many requests from my constituents for free seeds, and, as stated by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger], I also have received a great many requests from various schools in the State asking for seeds, but the legislative assembly of my State say that they are not only opposed to the free distribution of seeds, but that they are opposed to it for the reason that it is a burden upon the Government in that the distribution of the seeds is carried on by mail, and aggregates, I presume, hundreds of tons. Instead of transporting this class of goods by freight, as ought to be done, the seeds are being shipped through the mails.

It was also urged in that concurrent resolution that the seeds are sent out just at the time when the mails of the country are being weighed, and that the railroad companies are getting an undue advantage, largely from the distribution of the seeds, as well as from the distribution of various periodicals and pamphlets which are being sent out by the Members of Congress

As I said in the beginning, I am sorry that I have to oppose this provision; but I feel that I am in duty bound to respect this provision; but I feet that I am in duty bound to respect the wishes of the people of my State and to vote against it. Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I hope the committee amendment will not be adopted. The Senator from New York [Mr. Wadsworth] has stated that this is a free distribution and that no good comes from it. I believe that great good comes from the distribution even of common seed. There is an evolution going on in nature, by which the planting of seed, even common seed, in different portions of the United States and under different conditions, in different soils and where irrigation exists, sometimes produces a wonderful result. There is no better illustration of that than the Rocky Ford melon, which evidently was a product of a common seed that was planted in very favorable soil, and which grew and has been cultivated and has developed a most wonderful melon.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New York?
Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator from Colorado

if the Rocky Ford melon is an outgrowth of free seed delivered by the Government?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, we do not know. It is the general distribution that does it. We take these packages and send them all over the United States, having cantaloupe seeds in distribution that does it. them. It may have been; I can not tell, but it is evidently the fact that they are scattered over the United States that produces such results. As a matter of fact, take the development of any of the fruits: We know that the peach tree was nothing but a little weed, almost, the fruit of which was bitter, and which by cultivation and development has produced over 500 varieties.

We know that the apple tree came from the original crab tree, and the result was that by cultivation they have produced over 3,800 varieties of apples. Now, when such possibilities exist, it seems to me it is perfectly proper that we should send from one part of the United States to another part of the United States these seeds for the purpose of trying the soil, trying the climate, and trying the conditions under which they might produce better results. I feel, inasmuch as the expenditure is not a very large one, that the result would justify the expenditure on the part of the Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the committee [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. KENYON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). my pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'Gor-MAN] and transferring it to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD], I vote "nay."

Mr. GRONNA (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. Johnson] to the senior Senator from California [Mr. Works] and vote "yea."

wote "yea."

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the call of the roll long enough to ask the Chair to announce that a vote in the negative is in favor of the distribution of seed? Senators do not seem to understand it.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson] and withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote yea.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I make the same transfer as last stated, to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. Kern], and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] and vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). Has the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Clark] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. STONE. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Shields] and vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Goff] to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Broussard] and vote " nay.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.
Mr. WADSWORTH. I have a pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. Watson] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JAMES. I transfer the general pair I have with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks] to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and vote "nay.

Mr. OWEN. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Catron] to the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. Smith] and vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] to the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore] and vote "yea."

Mr. FALL. Has the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr.

CHILTON] voted?
The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. FALL. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Sterling]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and will allow my vote to stand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the committee amendment the yeas are 21, the nays are 26, Senators Jones and Fall being in the Chamber paired but not voting. The committee amendment is rejected.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, on page—
The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendments have not yet been disposed of.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. We have one other committee amendment, and then we will be through.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understood that this was the last.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The Secretary. The next amendment passed over was passed over at the request of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger], on page 16, line 20, where the committee proposes to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$2,700" ominitee proposes to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$2,000" in the case of "one executive assistant in seed distribution."

Mr. GALLINGER. What page is that, Mr. President?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is not my amendment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to state that the committee agreed, when the vote was taken on the first of these increases, that they would not insist on any of the others

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggested that the amendment ought to be rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, there is one other committee amendment, on page 66, line 8. I will have the Secretary state it. He might also read the explanation which accompanies it.

The Secretary. On page 66, line 8, it is proposed to strike out "$122,500" and to insert "$137,500."

The memorandum accompanying the amendment is as follows:

Owing to the continued advance in price, it is urgently essential that additional funds be provided for the purchase of coal during the next fiscal year. The contract price for the current year is $3.46 per ton, and the annual consumption of the department is about 7,500 tons. The open-market price for bituminous coal in Washington at this time is approximately $5 per ton higher than the present contract price. The General Supply Committee recently opened bids for 250 tons of bituminous coal for the new building of the Department of Justice. The only bid received, which was rejected, was $8.75 per ton for runof-mine coal. The District government also recently advertised for bids for 1,000 tons of bituminous coal, and the award was made at the lowest price offered—$8.90 per ton. The central heating plant of the department supplies not only the majority of the buildings owned and rented in the vicinity of the main building, but also the greenhouses, shops, and stables. In addition, it furnishes electric current for light and for the operation of elevators and a great variety of experimental machinery. If the department is unable to purchase the necessary coal, the power plant, of course, could not be operated. This would mean not only the closing of offices for lack of heat, but the probable destruction of valuable plants in the greenhouses and the loss of experimental work dependent upon electrically driven machinery. In view of these circumstances it is urgent that additional funds be provided to meet a possible advance in the contract price of coal during the next fiscal year.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. President, I think the

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I think the Senate will agree that on account of the rise in the price of coal and other kinds of fuel and other things that are needed and have not been contracted for this increase should be allowed, because it is essential to keep these matters in operation.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of objecting; but I should like to ask whether the committee have considered the feasibility of opening up the great coal lands of the West as a method of reducing the price of coal to the users here in the East?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will state to the Senator from New Mexico that I will join with him, under the proper form of bill, to bring about any condition that will help lower the cost of the necessities of life.

Mr. FALL. Would the Senator, for the committee, agree to an amendment now instructing the Secretary of the Interior to restore to the public domain, under the coal-land law as it exists now, the withdrawals of 6,000,000 acres of coal lands in the State of New Mexico?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should be very happy to do that on the proper bill; but this bill happens to deal with the Secretary of Agriculture, and that amendment would not properly apply to its provisions.

Mr. FALL. Then would the Senator agree to an amendment directing the Secretary of Agriculture, who has charge of the forest reserves, to open up the coal lands on the forest reserves to coal-land entry

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, as a matter of course, as I have already stated to the Senator, I would do anything that would look toward ultimately lowering the price of the necessities of life.

Mr. FALL. Do I understand that the Senator would accept an amendment of that character?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It has not been sufficiently considered for me to commit myself to it. I should have to know It has not been sufficiently the merits of it. In the case of the amendment that is pending, its merits are easily seen.

Mr. FALL. Then, Mr. President, may I ask, if the Senator will permit me, that this item may be passed temporarily, so that I may prepare an amendment to-morrow morning covering the matter?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will state to the Senator that that really would not avail, because it would be subject to a point of order, being new legislation on this bill.

Mr. FALL. Of course, if any Senator would make the point of order to prevent a reduction in the price of coal to the consumer there is no object in my offering it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the

amendment

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHELAN. I submit an amendment. Is the acting chairman through with the committee amendments?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. There is a correction that ought to be made.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator from California yield to me to call attention to a committee amendment?

Mr. PHELAN. If I have the floor I shall yield for that

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Before other amendments are offered, this is the very last committee amendment, and it is in the nature of a correction. An addition was made to the bill yesterday to provide for rust and smut in wheat in the western country. That will necessitate, on page 23, line 7, western country. That will necessitate, on page 23, line 7, striking out "20" and inserting "30," so as to make the total conform to the action of the Senate in adopting the amendment. The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 23, line 7, strike out "$20,000" and insert in lieu "$30,000."

The amendment was agreed to.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California.
Mr. PHELAN. Does the Senator from Utah desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to inquire about a committee amendment

Mr. PHELAN. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to have my amendment read.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I supposed it was desirable to dispose of the committee amendments first, and I should like to have one committee amendment reconsidered.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator wishes to make some inquiry in reference to a committee amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. On page 81 of the bill I find inserted by the Senate the following committee amendment:

Hereafter, in the performance of the duties required of the Department of Agriculture by the sections of this act relating to the Bureau of Markets, the Secretary of Agriculture shall have power to administer oaths, subpœna witnesses, and compel the production of books

I do not understand upon what theory we can confer upon an administrative officer of the Government the power to compel the production of books and papers. The only way that it could be compelled of course, if the person from whom the production was sought declined to produce them, would be by a proceeding for contempt. I do not think it has hitherto been doubted that such power could not be conferred upon administrative officers

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. This was submitted to the committee by a member of the committee on the ground that in the enforcement of the law in order to get the proper in-formation to correct certain evils that were complained of by truck growers, fruit growers, and those who ship agricultural products in that form, and in order to enable them to expeditiously do this, this language should be incorporated in

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator from South Carolina think that we can confer upon the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture the power to compel the production of books and

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. So far as the legal principle involved is concerned, I do not know that it was discussed in the committee at all. It was placed simply on the ground that this would entail a considerable delay and loss of time unless they were empowered to act, and also there was the matter of expense. As to the right of Congress to do it, that is another question entirely.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I should have no objection to providing that the Secretary could administer oaths; that he might examine witnesses, and that he might request the production of books and papers.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I accept that amendment, Mr. SUTHERLAND. I certainly would not agree, if I could help it, to any proposition that will permit—

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator offer that amendment?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do offer it. I move that the vote by which the amendment was adopted be reconsidered.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Secretary ought to have the power to call for books. It may be that he ought to cite them before a court for a violation of an order that he might make and have a contempt proceeding, but there ought to be some provision by which the books can be examined. It is said that enormous profits are being made by middle men, and there ought to be an investigation in regard to it. There ought to be not only power to administer oaths but there ought to be some power lodged somewhere to compel the production of books or else the investigation will be of no

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It will be a perfectly simple proposi-tion. We can authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to examine witnesses and request the production of books and papers. Then we can authorize, if we desire to do so, the Secretary of Agriculture to apply to the court to compel the production, but we can not authorize him to compel the production. I suggest that amendment. I offer it for the purpose of letting the matter go into conference where it can be arranged.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Utal that to "call" for the production of books is better than to "request" the production of books.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote whereby the amendment of the committee was agreed to is, without objection, reconsidered; and the Senator from Utah offers an amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary. In line 10, before the word "witness," strike out "subpena" and insert the word "examine," and, in line 11, strike out the word "compel" and insert the words "call for," so that it will read:

The Secretary of Agriculture shall have power to administer oaths, examine witnesses, and call for the production of books and papers.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no objection to it in that form.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PHELAN. I ask that my amendment be read. The Secretary. On page 82, after line 11, insert the follow-

For the purchase, preparation, and irrigation of not to exceed 150 acres of land at Chico. Butte County, Cal., the same to be an additional to the existing 80 acres now used as a plant-introduction field station, $35,000.

Mr. PHELAN. That is a recommendation of the department and has been estimated for. I believe it is not objectionable to the chairman of the committee. If there is any question about it, I am prepared to answer any question that may be raised.

Mr. SMOOT. Did I understand the Senator to say that it was estimated for?

Mr. PHELAN. It was estimated for by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. And recommended by the department.

Mr. SMOOT. It was before the committee and the committee refused to put it on the bill?

Mr. PHELAN. I may say it was not heard before the committee.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator from California did not appear before the committee. The committee had the estimate and it was recommended by the department.

Mr. SMOOT. The House had the estimate also and considered it. I do not see why it ought to go in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. I send to the desk the following amendment to be inserted on page 68, after line 8.

The SECRETARY. On page 08, after line 8, insert:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain horticultural experimental stations in the Mississippi Valley to be located in the principal grape-growing States of Missouri and Ohlo, including the erection of buildings, the preparation, illustration, and distribution of reports and bulletins, and all other necessary expenses, $30,000, as follows: Missouri, $15,000; Ohio, $15,000; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to sell such products as are obtained on the land belonging to the horticultural experimental stations in Missouri and Ohio.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask whether this was estimated for?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It was not.

Mr. SMOOT. And it was not reported by a standing com-

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is true.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President, I make a point of order

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, just a word. There are now 17 of these stations in California. There is one in New Jersey. I understand that the Secretary of Agriculture, because of the present financial conditions, did not feel like recommending the expenditure at this time. This has become a pretty serious proposition in these grape-growing States, and I feel that the amendment ought to be inserted in the bill. I hope the Senator from Utah will not insist on his point of order.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the amendment the Senator from Ohio proposes was offered in the Senate and referred to the committee. For some unexplained, I think unexplainable, reason the committee did not act upon it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from Missouri will allow me, the committee referred it to the Department of Of course, they had to have more or less dependence on the department and the statement of the department I have before me. The committee was governed largely by the statement of the department. The Secretary of Agriculture wrote as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, Washington, January 29, 1917.

Hon. T. P. Gore, Chairman Committee on Agriculture and Farestry, United States Senate.

Dear Senator Gore: Receipt is acknowledged of Mr. Thompson's letters of January 26, 1917, requesting a report on the amendments proposed by Senators Stone and Pomerene to the Agricultural appropriation bill providing $50,000 for establishing and maintaining horticultural experiment stations in the principal grape-growing States of Missouri, Ohio, Arkansas, and Michigan. The amendment proposed by Senator Pomerene authorizes the sale of such products as are obtained on the land of the proposed stations, but otherwise the two amendments are identical.

The work contemplated by the two amendments does not seem to me.

are identical.

The work contemplated by the two amendments does not seem to me to present an emergency and, in view of the present financial situation and of the large deficit which must be met, I do not feel justified in recommending that an appropriation be made for the purpose at this

Very truly, yours,

D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

Mr. STONE. They have these stations in California and in other States

Mr. POMERENE. There are 17 of these stations in Cali-

Seventeen of them, and none in these four States, all of which are large producers of grapes. If they are important in the States where they are located, they are equally important in these States. Why this discrimination should be indulged in by the honorable committee or by the Secretary of Agriculture I am unable to divine. If the amendment is subject to a point of order, I suppose we shall have to bear the burden of our ills. The Senator from Utah who makes the point of order was offering an amendment on the floor of the Senate for some thousands of dollars to find out what was the matter with ducks out in Utah. None of us made any effort to defeat him in his laudable ambition to take care of those winged fruits of the land. I do not see why he should undertake to deprive us at least of an opportunity of testing the sense of the Senate as to whether Michigan, Ohio, Missouri, and Arkansas should be treated upon terms of equality with other States in like cases.

Mr. SMOOT. The statement of the Secretary of Agriculture has just been read.

Mr. STONE. On account of the deficit is the chief reason, the only one; he urges the lack of money.

Mr. SMOOT. There is quite a different situation existing with this item than there was with the amendment I offered a year ago proposing to appropriate $5,000 to investigate the diseases of wild ducks. This appropriation will grow every year. However, if the acting chairman desires to insert this amendment, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I really felt, after I heard the facts, that perhaps when the conferees of the two Houses meet justice may be done. If the Senator will agree to it, I will accept the amendment as far as I am concerned and let the merits of it come before the conference committee.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator a question?
Mr. STONE. Just a moment. I have not given up the floor.

Mr. TOWNSEND. All right.

Mr. STONE. I wanted to say that if the scarcity of money is the trouble in the way we could lessen the deficit by abolishing all these stations and by that means put all the States on equal terms. Now, we do not want to do that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. You could bond the Government.

Mr. STONE. Yes; we could do a lot of things.
Mr. TOWNSEND. The amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio provides for $30,000—$15,000 for Ohio and $15,000 for Missouri—whereas the letter from the Department of Agriculture applied to all four States on the basis of $50,000, an expenditure of $15,000 for Ohio, $15,000 for Missouri, and $10,000 each for Arkansas and Michigan. If you are going to send it into conference it seems to me we ought to pass the proposition in accordance with the recommendation of the department.

Mr. POMERENE. The amendment I originally presented provided for $50,000—$15,000 to Ohio, $10,000 to Michigan, $15,-000 to Missouri, and $10,000 to Arkansas. Because of the objection made by the department, after a conference with some of the Senators who were interested in the matter-and I intended to speak with the Senator from Michigan on the subject-I thought it might be well to change the appropriation to the form in which I have presented the amendment, for the reason that climatic and soil conditions in Michigan and Ohio are substantially the same as those in Missouri and Arkansas. I have no objection to the appropriation as originally contemplated, but that was my reason and the only reason I had.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let the amendment be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the point of order withdrawn or is it not?

Mr. SMOOT. I withdraw the point of order I made against it. Mr. OLIVER. I renew the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes that if the point of order is made the amendment has to go out.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to offer an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 68, line 12, after the word "Porto Rican," strike out "$40,000" and insert "$50,000" and the following language:

Of which sum $10,000, or so much as is necessary, may be expended for the maintenance of a substation for experiments on the introduction and growth of tropical and other vegetables, fruits and fruit trees, and the packing and shipping of their products, in the event that the government of Porto Rico, either by itself or through individuals or organizations, provides for the station a tract of land of not less than 50 acres of suitable land, together with buildings acceptable to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, in relation to that amendment I desire to say that there are many Americans who have gone to Porto Rico, who are developing a fruit industry there. The experiment station to be established has been estimated for by the department, and they recommend this addition of $10,000; but it is made a condition that the people there should donate 50 acres of land and suitable buildings to be placed on it.

It seems to me wise for the Government to do this, inasmuch as it gets such a large donation from individual citizens who are very much interested in the project. A year or so ago I had a separate bill before the Senate providing for the same thing, but I could not get it through in that form.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I notice, in reading the Senator's amendment, that not only $10,000 but the whole $50,000, under the wording of the amendment, might be used for the purpose

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; the amendment proposes to strike out the figures "$40,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$50,000," so as to provide for this additional sum, which will be used for so as to provide for this additional sum, which will be used for nothing else than the purpose indicated.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is, it provides for the appropriation of $10,000 or "so much as may be necessary." It does not say "so much thereof as may be necessary" of the $10,000.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, I will ask that the word "thereof" be inserted, so that it will read "so much thereof as may be necessary." necessary."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I have another amendment of the same character relating to Hawaii. There is a recommendation of the department that $50,000, instead of $40,000, which has been estimated for, should be appropriated; and the same conditions prevail there, except there is already a change there. The amendment provides an additional amount, with a provision that the additional sum shall be used for agricultural extension work in Hawaii. I will ask the Secretary to read the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 68, in line 12, after the word "Hawaii," it is proposed to strike out "$40,000" and to insert "$50,000."

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado if he is a member of the Committee on Agricul-

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. STONE. And the Committee on Agriculture recommended an appropriation of $40,000?

Mr. SHAFROTH. They approved the item of $40,000 when it came from the House, but since then the Secretary of Agriculture has recommended both in the case of the Porto Rican item and the Hawaiian item an increase of $10,000.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is in view of the donation to the Government of certain lands and buildings to carry out the purpose.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That was provided as to Porto Rico, and that amendment has been adopted. The amendment I now offer relates to Hawaii.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I notice that there are about 18 Senators present. Apparently it is the disposition of a goodly number of the 18 who are present to offer amendments increasing the sums carried by this bill. As one member of the committee, I must protest against this situation. I am not criticizing the individual Senators who offer amendments to increase appropriations, but I think it is due to the Senate as a legislative body that it should know something about the constant increases that are being put upon the bill after the Senate has adopted the committee amendments and after the Committee on Agriculture has had an opportunity to perform, and I assume has performed, its functions.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator-Mr. WADSWORTH. Just a moment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have not the slightest interest in this amendment, except for the fact that I am also a member of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, and feel by reason of that fact that there ought to be some interest manifested in behalf of the people of Porto Rico and Hawaii, who have no representatives on this floor. Consequently I have deemed it proper to offer the amendment. I am perfectly willing that the Senator should be heard before the conferees, and if this amendment is not wise I do not want it adopted any more than he does. I have no interest in the matter and I do not know a single man who is going to be benefited by it.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, it is becoming a custom to legiste by conferees. There are a good many things here that I late by conferees. should like to have heard discussed with reference to this bill, for it seems to be the intention to try to put it through now with all these amendments without any discussion of any character that could be called a discussion at all. I think I am going to be compelled, sir, to-

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Before the Senator does

that

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will withdraw the amendment if the Senator is going to call for a quorum. I would rather withdraw the amendment than to see the Agricultural bill defeated.

Mr. FALL. I do not want to defeat the Agricultural bill, either, but I think the Senate would be attending strictly to its business if it were to adjourn over until to-morrow, and we had a quorum here then to consider this bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I want it distinctly understood that there is no effort whatever to rush anything through. The only reason I asked that we might go on with the consideration of this measure was to make an effort legitimately to conserve time.

Mr. FALL. But one amendment after another is being offered by Members after the committee itself has had its amendments all considered.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. So far as that is concerned, the Senator has no right to shut off any of the amendments that as chairman of the committee, offer.

Mr. FALL. I have no right to shut off anything, and I have no desire to shut off anything.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am endeavoring to facilitate the passage of the measure. Senators who have offered amendments to the bill, of course, think they are meritorious, but the Senators present can take what action they see fit in reference to them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator will admit that these amendments were not presented before the Agriculture Com-

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will admit that; but they have come here just as other amendments have come that have been offered upon the floor of the Senate which have not been submitted to the committee.

There is an attempt to get the bill through, and Mr. FALL. I have no desire to stand in the way of the passage of the bill and getting it out of the way, so that other legitimate business may be brought before the Senate; but I do not like to be appealed to just at the very last moment, when we are working to try to pass this bill, to consider the amendments that come in now, offered by members of the committee one after another, each one increasing an appropriation when we can not have any proper discussion of them.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will withdraw the Hawaiian amendment if the Senator will not call for a quorum.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, there are other amendments to be offered, and I appeal to the Senator from South Carolina, as we have had a long and strenuous day and I think this bill can be finished in half an hour to-morrow, that he consent to an adjournment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will suggest to the Senator that I am not attempting to carry anything through. I have seen an amendment that the Senator has to propose, and one other amendment which is also to be proposed, and I think the merits of both, as I have seen them, would make them appeal to most Senators who are here so that perhaps they would not need to be discussed at any length.

Mr. KENYON. They would not appeal to very many Senators at this hour.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think the merits of those amendments will appeal to Senators.

Mr. KENYON. I think the amendment I intend to propose will be adopted, but I think it will require discussion.

Mr. FALL. It undoubtedly will. Here is a pending amendment as to which I have received 100 telegrams from county agents, agricultural colleges, and others in my State, and I know that the Senate has been flooded with telegrams in reference to the proposed amendment to be added to this bill. Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think the amendment the Senator proposes is of such a character that not a single member of the committee will object to it. It is of such a nature that I think the mere reading of it will commend it to every Member of the Senate.

Mr. FALL. Yes; but there is being an enormous pressure brought to bear upon Senators here to have them reject that amendment

Mr. KENYON. And there are not over 18 Senators here now to consider it. Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think that amendment will be incorporated in the bill, because it is, after all, the very provision that we incorporated in the bill in 1914, and which had been in the bill every year since 1906.

Mr. FALL. The acting chairman of the committee will admit that it must be explained; it must be discussed to some extent; it can not be simply accepted, adopted, and incorporated in this bill. I want to ask some questions about it myself, although I am in favor of the amendment; but I want to bring out the truth of the matter in such form that the people who are protesting against the adoption of the amendment can understand the reasons for it.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me a moment, if the amendment to which Senators are speaking is going to take a long time, I ask them to let me offer a couple of amendments which will only take a minute or two.

Mr. FALL. I move that the Senate adjourn. The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 8, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 7, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou Eternal One, to whom we are indebted for life and all its attendant blessings, help us to realize how great is the responsibility resting upon us as free moral agents in the use of the faculties bestowed upon us. If we are at all self-centered, touched by the poison of vanity, remove that and give us wisdom, that we may apply our knowledge unto righteousness, truth, and justice; and in all humility freely accord unto others what we may reasonably claim for ourselves in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The report was read, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1443).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20453) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 3.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same.

ment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "or, where such matériel is not or has not been manufactured by the Government, at a price in excess of 25 per cent more than the estimated cost of manufactured by the Government, and price in excess of 25 per cent more than the estimated cost of manufactured by the Government in the context of facture by the Government: Provided, That whenever in the opinion of the President the situation is such as to justify such action he may waive the limitations contained in this section";

tain space for housing its drafting force, and to that the House agreed.

The second amendment was one changing the language of a provision in the bill as to the price that should be paid for matériel purchased from private manufacturers. Under the House provision this materiel could not be purchased at a price in excess of 25 per cent of the arsenal prices, unless in the opinion of the President an emergency exists affecting the general welfare of the United States. The House agreed to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment changing the proviso so as to permit the waiving of the requirement whenever in the judgment of the President it should be done. It was believed that the President ought not to be required to certify that an emergency affecting the general welfare exists, but that his freedom should be greater.

The third amendment was by the Senate, undertaking to modify the requirement that the arsenal should be worked at a maximum economic capacity and providing that it should only be worked at one full shift a day. The Senate receded from its amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the conference report without being printed under the rule? There was no objection.

The conference report was agreed to.

BRIDGE BILLS.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to set a hearing for the consideration of some bridge bills. There are seven or eight bridge bills that have not been reached on unanimous-consent days, and the friends of those bills are pressing the Speaker for recognition. I ask unanimous consent that they be considered to-morrow morning after the reading of the ournal. It will not take 10 minutes to dispose of them.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that he make his request that unobjected bridge bills be considered, so that we can not possibly get into a position where we will have a long debate.

Mr. ADAMSON. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I understood and intended to mean that it should be only those bridge bills which are unobjected to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman modifies his request and makes it apply to bills unobjected to. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia if any of these bills are for a bridge across the Hudson River?

EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN IN THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I move to discharge the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service from further consideration of House resolution 475, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 475.

House resolution 475.

Resolved, That the President of the United States furnish the House with the following information:

In making appointments, transfers, promotions, demotions, and removals in clerical and other positions in the various executive branches of the Federal civil service, to what extent is sex a factor in the selections and decisions?

In what branches of the service, if any, during the year ending December 31, 1916, did the appointing officials specify sex when asking for certifications? Which sex was specified and in respect to what positions was this specification made? In what branches and what instances was sex not specified?

Are there any positions in any branch of the service to which women who have passed the prescribed examinations would not be appointed or promoted. If so, what branches and what positions?

Are there any pranches of the service in which officials fix limitations as to the salary grades or positions to which women may be promoted? If so, what branches and what positions?

Are any civil-service examinations open to men only? If so, what and how many examinations during the year ending December 31, 1916, were so restricted? What, if any, examinations were open to women only? What, and how many, examinations were open to both men and women?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gen-

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, the Senate amended the bill in only three particulars. The first amendment was to authorize the Ordnance Department to enter into a five-year lease for certain the Civil Service from further consideration of this resolution.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire why the gentleman seeks this information from the President and not from the Civil Service Commission, which is the body that might have the

Mr. KEATING. First of all, the President is the head of all the executive departments, as the gentleman knows. In the next place, the Civil Service Commission would not be prepared to answer all of the questions propounded in the resolution.

Mr. MANN. And in the third place, it would not be a privi-leged resolution if it asked the Civil Service Commission for the information.

Mr. KEATING. That is true. It has been so ruled.

Mr. STAFFORD. It might not be a privileged resolution, but the question that is uppermost in my mind is whether we ought to cumber the President with a request to obtain information that could be obtained from the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. KEATING. I would suggest to the gentleman that the President will probably refer the matter to the head of the department.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

I make the inquiry with a thought to object-Mr. BURNETT. ing. Is this a privileged resolution on Calendar Wednesday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman raises the point too late. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Colorado to discharge the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service from further consideration of the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Stafford) there were—ayes 52, noes 45.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be modified, so that instead of reading-

Resolved, That the President of the United States furnish the House with the following information—

It will read-

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to furnish the House with the following information.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be so modified.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. Keating, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record in connection with some resolutions adopted by the General Assembly of Delaware.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Delaware asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think it fair to call to the attention of Members of Congress a bill that was passed last evening by the Senate in reference to printing in the Record. It may be desirable to have it considered at this session of Congress. I think Members ought to look it up. My impression is that the bill stops all of this leave to print in the RECORD except extension of one's own remarks. I do not object to this.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Delaware? [After a pause.] The Chair hears CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?
Mr. McLAUGHLIN. To ask unanimous consent for a change of reference of a Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. What bill is it?
Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Senate bill 739, for the relief of James F. Cole. It is a bill to remove a charge of desertion, which was passed by the Senate, and when it came to the House it was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands. I wish to ask to have it referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

DIVERSION OF WATER OF THE NIAGARA RIVER.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20047, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Alexander] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20047, with Mr. Alexander in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20047, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20047) for the control and regulation of the waters of Niagara River above the Falls, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pending amendment by Mr. DEMPSEY: Page 2, line 2, strike out the word "revocable" before the word "permits," and, after the word "permits," insert the words "revocable for cause as hereinafter provided or for any national need or exigency."

Amendment offered to the amendment by Mr. Sherley: Amend the amendment by striking out all of the language of the amendment except that which strikes out the word "revocable," in page 2, line 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to withdraw the amendment

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York desires to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I object. Mr. MANN. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?
Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I object.
Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask just a few moments to explain the reason why this amendment ought to be withdrawn or ought to be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The time on both amendments has been

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent I may proceed just for a few minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, is debate exhausted by order of the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not; that is his recollection. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

The Chair hears none.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, this amendment proposes to change this provision of the bill:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to grant revocable permits for the diversion of water for power purposes from said Niagara River above the Falls.

The purpose of the amendment was to strike out the word "revocable" and authorize the Secretary of War to grant permits which were not revocable; thereby turning this immensely valuable water power over to the water-power companies for 50 years. There have never been any permits granted by the Secretary of War for the use of this water except revocable permits. This bill provides that they shall be revocable at will under the following conditions:

Provided further, Whenever it shall appear to the Secretary of War that the diversion of water herein authorized in connection with the amount of water diverted on the Canadian side of the river interferes with the navigable capacity of said river, or its proper volume as a boundary stream, or its sufficiency as a means of national defense, he may revoke any permit.

For these reasons the Secretary of War is authorized by this bill to revoke the permits at will and without assigning any bill to revoke the permits at will and without assigning any cause and without notice to the permittee. Now, it is perfectly apparent to every Member of the House that if the Secretary of War could not revoke permits for these causes at will, that the Secretary of War would not grant any permits to take this water. There is an additional ground upon which the Secretary of War can revoke these permits.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. FLOOD. I will yield. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. What is the connection between the word "revocable" in section 2 and section 4 which authorizes the Secretary of War to revoke these permits when certain conditions are not complied with?

Mr. FLOOD. That is for cause and that is because the permittee has violated this law or violated the regulations laid down by the Secretary of War for the use of this water.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Is it the gentleman's understanding that section 2 is broader than section 4?

Mr. FLOOD. My understanding is if the permittee violates the law or violates the regulations of the Secretary of War which permits him to take this water, that he can be fined or imprisoned, or fined and imprisoned, and the Secretary of War may revoke his permit, and it is for cause stated in this law:

That if any permittee shall at any time fail or refuse, after receiving reasonable notice thereof, to comply with any of the provisions of this act or any lawful order or regulation made by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers in accordance with the provisions of this act, the Secretary of War may, in addition to said penalties, revoke said permit, and thereupon all rights under said permit shall cease and determine.

That is a part of the punishment under this act, and the permittee has notice and he has an opportunity to defend himself against the charge of having violated the law or violated the regulations.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Well, then, in section 2, line 2, the word "revocable" does not mean anything, does it?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes; it does.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. How much more does it mean than the language of section 4?

Mr. FLOOD. It means at the will of the Secretary of War, if he is satisfied himself that the navigability of the Niagara River is being affected by the diversion of this water, or it is being injured as a boundary line, or its capacity for national defense is being affected, he can revoke the permit or permits.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. If the Government wants to take it over, he can revoke it without regard to section 4 at all? That is, if the Government wants to use this power for its own purpose? Mr. FLOOD. Not unless the Secretary of War is satisfied that one of these conditions has occurred.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Probably the gentleman does not understand the information I am trying to get. Section 4 is the section of the bill that provides that when certain provisions of the bill are violated the Secretary of War can do certain things by way of correction, Mr. FLOOD. Section 4 imposes penalty on the permittee for violation of the law.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Not necessarily a penalty, but he can require the company to comply with his orders

Mr. FLOOD. As a penalty for the violation of this statute. Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. That is one condition under which this permit can be revoked?

Mr. FLOOD. That is for cause.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Specified in here?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Now, how much broader is the language we find in section 2 that these permits are to be revocable? How much broader is that than section 4, if any?

Mr. FLOOD. The language in section 2 refers to the language on page 9, line 4, and prescribes when the Secretary of War can at will revoke these permits; that is, when the navigability of the stream is affected, when its use for national defense is affected, when its volume as a boundary stream is affected, and when the scenic beauty is seriously impaired.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does the gentleman hold that a permit can not be revoked by the Secretary of War at his discretion?

Mr. FLOOD. For those causes he can.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is for cause, but can it be revoked without cause?

Mr. FLOOD. Oh, the Secretary of War in his discretion, absolutely, if he thinks the navigability of the stream is affected-

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Suppose the National Government has occasion for this water for itself, could the permit be revoked?

Mr. FLOOD, No.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does the gentleman think we should grant this power away for 50 years, irrevocable, except for cause? Does the gentleman think this Government ought to put itself in that position?

Mr. FLOOD. I say that he could not revoke it at his will. He would have to assign cause.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Is that sufficient cause shown in the bill anywhere?

Mr. FLOOD. We are discussing the revocable permit now. Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is what I am asking now. want to find out the ground on which it can be revoked, and I want to find out whether if an emergency should arise and the National Government should decide to take over these works for any cause on any of the grounds mentioned that forfeits the permit, we would have the power to do it. The gentleman has answered me he does not think we could do it, and now I am asking him if we should grant away this power for 50 years without an opportunity to recapture it?

Mr. FLOOD. There is already a law covering the suggestion made by the gentleman, and we propose to provide for recapture. For certain reasons the Secretary of War can revoke the

Mr. HUDDLESTON. What does the gentleman mean by "at will"?

Mr. FLOOD. For the causes specified in the bill. He does not have to give an opportunity to the permittee to be heard. The causes for which he may revoke this permit are laid down

Mr. HUDDLESTON. And the Secretary of War would have no power to revoke this permit in order to take over these works to manufacture nitrates for Government use?

Mr. FLOOD. That is a matter not of discretion, but he would have to revoke for cause.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is not specified.

Mr. FLOOD. That is not specified.
Mr. HUDDLESTON. Then he could not do that?

Mr. FLOOD. Not under that section.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. But under any section?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes; he can. Mr. HUDDLESTON. Under what section?

Mr. FLOOD. The section we will insert before the bill is passed.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. If he simply passes out of the game. Mr. FLOOD. I am not saying that. And the gentleman is aware that we are to offer amendments to the bill. He has amendments himself, and that question is not very germane to the discussion of whether or not we should authorize the Secretary of War to grant a revocable permit.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman permit me to say that I have no knowledge of any amendments that he desires to offer to the bill?

Mr. FLOOD. We have some.
Mr. HUDDLESTON. I wanted to find out what they were, so that we could act intelligently on this proposition.

Mr. FLOOD. The question before the House now is the question of a revocable permit and whether it is fair to the permittees that the Secretary of War should be authorized to grant a revocable permit. I was simply pointing out that it was fair to them if he could only exercise the power of revocation at will for the causes specified in the section read.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, the statement of the gentleman is absolutely satisfactory to me if he is correct in his conclusions

Now, as I understand, the revocable permits that are referred to in section 2 relate to revocation for the causes subsequently stated. I am afraid that the language does not imply that. Would the gentleman have any objection—I have great confidence in his judgment, and I do not want to antagonize his bill, especially this part of it—to having permits "revocable for the causes hereinafter stated"? I think that is entirely clear.

Mr. FLOOD. That would be satisfactory.
Mr. BURNETT. I think that would clear it up entirely. I would have no objection to it then.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. FLOOD. I shall have to object. The gentleman has already discussed it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Hunpleston] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FLOOD. I object.
The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move as a substitute for the pending proposition to insert, after the word "permits," the words "revocable at the pleasure of the Secretary of War."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, let it be reported.
Mr. MANN. I do not care what it is. I want to get five minutes; that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 2, after the word "permits," by inserting the ords "revocable at the pleasure of the Secretary of War."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the substitute solely for the purpose of getting the floor. Gentlemen were objecting to the consideration of the bill. I was not in the House when the bill came up for consideration last Wednesday, but I could not let go by the statement of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Flood] in charge of the bill without expressing a contrary opinion as to the meaning of the word "revocable."

I apprehend that if we simply provided for the issuance of revocable permits it might then be within the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War to revoke them at his pleasure. But where you provide for the issuance of revocable permits and then go on and define the reasons for revoking the permit it is no longer to be at the pleasure of the Secretary of War. There must be some reason for the revocation. There must be some violation by the permittee of the provisions of the law or some conflict with the legal authority of the Secretary of War; and if the present Secretary of War issues a revocable permit under the terms of this law, if enacted, the ensuing Secretary of War can not say, "I do not like the color of the ink that was used in the granting of the former permit, and therefore I revoke it." Such a revocation at the mere pleasure of the Secretary of War would not be legal, nor, in my opinion, would that power be desirable.

While I offer the substitute, I am not in favor of the substitute which I offer.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.
Mr. SHERLEY. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman's statement. Assuming that he is correct as to the interpretation, what value is left to the word "revocable"

Mr. MANN. Well, it is a preliminary definition that something is going to follow, and probably it does not change the meaning of the law in any respect whatever,

Mr. SHERLEY. Two amendments were pending. One of them was to strike out the word "revocable" and then to add a proviso about national emergencies, which is unnecessary, because it is covered by another law. The reason I suggested the striking out of the word "revocable" was because some gentlemen were undertaking to impress upon the language an interpretation as if it read "revocable at will," which I do not think was either correct or ought to be in the bill.

Mr. MANN. I think it is desirable to have the language in the bill. The Secretary of War might have authority to revoke the permit for some reason not specifically set forth in this bill, and might not have that authority if it were not a revocable permit, although I have some doubt about that.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann].

I do not think these permits ought to be revocable at will or at pleasure. I criticized this bill the other day as being intended for the benefit of the two concerns that are now at Niagara. Mr. Chairman, those concerns are compelled to accept these permits on any terms that we choose to fix. It makes no difference how onerous those terms are, they are compelled to adhere to them. If these permits are granted at all, they will be granted to those two concerns, because other concerns can not come in and subject themselves to the expense necessary. Therefore, there will be no competition with these two concerns that we have there now, and we might as well put their names in this contract and specify that they can continue to go on and develop the power there just as they have done in the past unless we put the words in here that the permits are revocable at will.

These firms are not developing the power at the most efficient head and there is a great waste of power. They realize that, and would like to correct it, but they can not afford to go to the expense of correcting that waste unless they have something definite in hand that will enable them to know what they have. Therefore it is important that they should know that there is a fixed term and period so that they will know what to depend on. This is also necessary in order that any outsider who may come in and get a permit may be permitted to hold it for a reasonable time.

Now, there is no recapture clause in this bill. I do not know what amendments the gentlemen who are interested in pushing the bill in its present form have up their sleeves, because the House has not been taken into their confidence, nor have I, either. They may intend to put in a recapture clause; I do not know. But nobody in the absence of a fair recapture clause can afford to spend one cent at those Falls so long as the permit is revocable at will.

However, we ought to have this permit made revocable at will. I am not willing that the Government shall grant away this water power of immense value, for the long period of 50 years mentioned in the bill, without the power to take it back again if the national welfare should require it; but we can not afford to put in a revocable-at-will clause unless we have a fair recapture clause. That is what we ought to have, a revocable-at-will clause, accompanied by some recapture clause, that will fairly protect the rights and interests of those who make their investment.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HUDDLESTON. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Does the gentleman disagree with the construction that the words "revocable at will" in this bill as it now stands do not have any significance, and that if the bill should pass in its present form the Secretary of War would not have the right to revoke the permit at will?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota that it is perhaps not free from doubt, and that is why the bill should be amended. That is why I objected to the withdrawal of the amendment. Let us make it certain. Why should we leave a thing in doubt when we can make it certain? What I think it means is, "revocable as hereinafter expressed." I think a court in interpreting it would read that into it. But it was argued here the other day by the author of the bill that it was revocable at will, that the Secretary could revoke it at any time he wanted to. Evidently there is difference of opinion on the subject, and why should there be any doubt about it? Now is the time to make the matter sure, and let us make it sure by some such amendment as that which has been offered. Let us either give this permit, or else let us refuse it. Let us give it for a fixed period, or else let us make it revocable at will. Let us not make it doubtful, when we have passed it, whether it means that it is revocable at will or after a period of 50 years.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Is it not true that from the explanation given the other day a number of Members of the House understand this thing to mean that a permit given under this law would be revocable at will?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The explanation given by gentlemen can be interpreted in both ways. They seem to be on both sides of the question. One day they seem to be of the opinion that it would be revocable at will and the next day that it will last for 50 years. Of course this bill must be read all together. That is the only fair way to interpret it. We have the word "revocable" here, and later in the bill we have certain causes specified which authorize the cancellation and revocation of the permit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I move to strike out the last word. I think any court in construing this bill will refer this word
"revocable" to the causes that are stated in the bill authorizing revocation. That is what I think would be a reasonable

"revocable" to the causes that are stated in the bill authorizing revocation. That is what I think would be a reasonable and fair construction of the bill. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Floor] did not call attention to section 5, which provides—

That all permits issued pursuant to this act shall be for a determinate period of not longer than $50\ \mathrm{years}$ — and so forth, which seems to me clearly to imply that the permit shall be for a fixed period and shall not be revoked within that period except for the causes set out in the bill. I should regard any court that would hold to the contrary as departing from the true construction. But I do not know. Good lawyers and able Members here have insisted that it does not mean that.

Why should we not make it clear what the bill does mean, while we are about it? I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Dempsey] ought to be adopted and that we ought to have it in that form in the bill. Then we ought to put into the bill a fair recapture clause that would insure investors in these works that they will get back what they put in, and that the Government should not slaughter them. To leave it in the condition in which it now is will discourage investors from going in there to compete with the Niagara Falls Power Co., and discourage that company from trying to develop their plant to the highest efficiency. discourage them from acting as though they were have a permit for a reasonable period and will put them in a position where they must be ready to get out at any time that the Secretary of War chooses to push them off. That is, if the construction put on the bill by these gentlemen is correct.

I do not believe in leaving out any words if words will make it sure. Let us make it sure. I do not think there is any gentleman who has any other desire than that. Let us make it sure if it is doubtful. Reckoning from certain dead reckonings and various astronomical data, I think that a court would finally reach the conclusion I have pointed out, but it is highly desirable that there should be no chance or hazard about the matter when we can make it plain that this is what we mean by using the language covered by the amendment of the gentleman.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama did not read the whole of section 5, as I notice from looking at the printed bill.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on this amendment is exhausted. Mr. CLINE. I rise in opposition to the gentleman's last amendment. For the benefit of the House and for an answer to the gentleman from Alabama I want to read section 5—

That all permits issued pursuant to this act shall be for a determinanate period of not longer than 50 years—

And that is where the gentleman stopped—subject, however, to all the provisions of said act.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLINE. No; not now-

And neither said act nor any permit granted thereunder shall be construed to establish in any permittee or its successor any vested right.

So that that section plainly covers the entire provisions of this bill. The gentleman says he has no knowledge that any recapture clause is going to be offered. It was stated on the floor two weeks ago that a recapture clause would be inserted, and it was further stated that the recapture clause, known as the Adamson recapture clause, which has passed this House three different times, would be offered to this bill, so that, if the gentleman was here two weeks ago, he knows what proceedings were had with reference to that matter.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. CLINE. No; I will not yield now. We believe, using the expression of my good friend from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley], that the inertia in this proposition ought to be with the General Government. We believe that the Secretary of War ought to have the right to revoke any permit when the navigability of the stream becomes affected by the diversion of the water, when its proper function as a boundary stream becomes affected, when its proper volume as a means of national defense becomes affected, and the Secretary ought not to be obliged to give a reason to anyone for his action. And his decision ought to be final and from which there is no appeal. When any of these three great causes arises, he ought to revoke the permit.

Now, with reference to the fourth clause, in regard to the scenic beauty becoming affected in the opinion of the Secretary of War, he should have the right to revoke it, and we make it necessary that he assign the cause of making it revocable after

Now, Mr. Chairman, for any violation of the provisions of the permit we make it punishable according to the terms set out in the law, for which he can go into the courts and contest whether the permit ought to be revoked or not.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

I will. Mr. CLINE.

Mr. REAVIS. You use the word "revocable" on page 2. Does the gentleman construe that so as to grant authority to the Secretary of War to revoke a permit for reasons other than the causes assigned in the later portion of the bill?

Mr. CLINE. The other clauses on which the permit may be revoked are set out and the penalty for the violation is set out.

Mr. REAVIS. A familiar rule of construction is that where a general power in legislation is followed by a specific provision on the same subject, the general clause gives way to the specific clause. Would not the word "revocation" on page 2 be construed in connection with the limitations on page 4, and would not the Secretary of War be restricted to the causes enumerated on page 4 in declaring the revocation?

Mr. CLINE. I will say to the gentleman from Nebraska that we have set out definitely the grounds on which the revocation may be made for a violation of any of the terms of the permit, But the permittee would not be at liberty to decide whether the volume of water in the Niagara River was affected for navigation purposes; and for the three purposes that I named the Secretary of War ought not to be required to say to the permittee, "I believe the volume of this stream from the navigation standpoint is being reduced, and consequently I am going to revoke the permit." But he ought to have the right to revoke the permit without assigning a cause which could be contested in the court.

Mr. REAVIS. I am not debating whether he ought to have that right of not; I am trying to get your construction of the bill. You use the word "revocation" on page 2 in a general statement. In a later part of the bill you have a specific clause relating to the revocation, whereby it may be revoked on certain conditions. Now, in view of the familiar rule of construction to the effect that the general clause gives way to the specific clause on the same subject, would not the construction of the word "revocation" on page 2, being general, be limited to

Mr. CLINE. It would not, because we set out on page 9 the identical causes upon which, for reasons, the Secretary may

Mr. REAVIS. It was page 9 that I had in mind. My question is this: Under the rule of construction, whereby the revocation on page 2 being restricted to causes on page 9, would it give the Secretary of War the right to revoke permits for any reason other than those on page 9?

Mr. CLINE. I do not think the Secretary of War under a fair construction would have the right to revoke except for the causes assigned and with the exceptions set out in conjunction with it.

Mr. REAVIS. If the Secretary of War may revoke the permit only for causes assigned on page 9, what is the office of the word "revoke," on page 2?

Mr. CLINE. That is to give the Secretary of War power to revoke a permit for causes set out on page 9.

Mr. REAVIS. He would have that under the authority of the language used on page 9.

Mr. CLINE. He would not have for causes set out as triable by the court.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman's position is that the word "revocation," on page 2, gives the Secretary the right to revoke a permit for causes without a court trial?

Mr. CLINE. Yes. Mr. REAVIS. An tion" on page 2? And that is the object of the word "revoca-

Mr. CLINE. It is; in connection with the four causes mentioned on page 9.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLINE. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Under the statement of the gentleman, I do not think there is much disagreement, but in order to make the matter clear, does not the gentleman think that if the words "revocable permits" were stricken out and the words "permits revocable for reasons hereinafter provided for in the bill" were inserted it would express the meaning that the gentleman and the chairman of the committee have stated?

Mr. CLINE. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that we do not want to open the door on that proposition so as to permit the Secretary of War to be taken into court to discuss the full reasons why he revoked permits under the four assign- last two words.

That is the reason we want the word "revocable" to be retained without any limitation.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, if the purpose of the gentleman, as just stated, is the purpose of the committee, it seems to me they have left that vaguely and ineffectively stated, for if I were called upon to construe that I would hold that under this bill the Secretary of War had to show the cause before he could revoke the permit, and if you want him to get in the position where he can act, and the companies must go to court for relief, you have not got it in this bill.

Mr. CLINE. I think we have where there is a violation of the permit, taking it out of the exceptions I have named.

Mr. HARDY. That is the very issue this bill leaves to be determined before you revoke this permit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas to state his position again.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, my position is that the word "revocable" in the context as it is just the same in effect as if you had followed it by saying "for the causes hereinafter stated," because you do follow it later by section 4, defining the causes for which he may revoke. Then the cause becomes a condition precedent that must be found by the court.

Mr. FLOOD. The causes for which he can revoke at will. Mr. HARDY. But you have not got "at will" in the bill.

These are the causes for which he can revoke Mr. FLOOD. at will. That is clear from reading the section, and the other revocation is a penalty, but if it is for cause that would take the matter into court.

Mr. HARDY. If the gentleman wants it clear, why not state that the action of the court shall determine this matter of the existence of the cause.

Mr. FLOOD. I will say to the gentleman that 11 years ago bill was passed with this language in it, and it has been the law of this country for all of that time.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

vield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That bill the gentleman speaks of provided the permits might be granted to the parties now using the water.

Mr. FLOOD. I am not talking about that. That bill provided for revocable permits. This matter has been operated for 11 years under this language.

Mr. HARDY. Has it ever been revoked?

Mr. FLOOD. No.

Mr. HARDY. So there never has been any decision?

Mr. FLOOD. There never has been any decision, but the War Department and the permittees understand what the language means, and it seems to me unwise in the heat of debate to undertake to change language which is 11 years old, and which is understood by all of the parties who are dealing with the proposition.

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman from Indiana stated the situation. He wanted the inertia to rest with the Government. He wanted the other side to have the laboring oar, and the decision of the Secretary to be prima facie and in the first case I do not believe that this bill makes it so. effective.

Mr. FLOOD. I think the gentleman will find that it does. Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following substitute-

The CHAIRMAN. A substitute is already pending. The gentleman's substitute is not in order at this time.

Mr. BURNETT. It is a substitute for all of the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending and an amendment to that amendment and a substitute. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Dempsey].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, let us have the substitute

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment and the amendment to the amendment and the substitute.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment and the amendment to the amendment and the substitute.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I understand I can do that and be in der, and I understand also, that all of these pro forma amendments are conventions, and in substance amount to a request for unanimous consent. I want about two minutes, and will ask unanimous consent to address the committee on the pending amendments for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection. Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that there seems to be some apprehension on the part of some members of the committee over the use of the word "revocable," and desire to call the attention of the members present to-day, who were not present last week, to the fact that the law under which the business at Niagara Falls has been largely developed, not only afforded the same power of revocation that appears in the present bill, but in order to clench the power of the Government over the concerns operating under the act, the law further contained a reservation of the right to amend, alter, or repeal at pleasure the privileges therein conferred. So that the power of the Government, so far as these permittees are concerned, under the act of 1908 was as sweeping and comprehensive as that afforded by the language used in the present bill. The lawmakers specifically wrote into that act the provision reserving the right to alter, amend, or repeal the same at pleasure. It is very desirable that this reservation should appear in our Federal statutes in order to prevent the question of vested rights from arising so as to hinder the exercise of our right of repeal.

No. MANN. That is inserted in this case.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I was merely calling attention to the fact that this reservation appeared in former act under which the companies at Niagara Falls heretofore have done business and developed their industries.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky to the amendment offered by

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

The committee again divided; and there were-ayes 27, noes 61.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "conditions," on page 2, line 7, just as a formal motion in order to make a statement to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Flood], and then I will offer a regular amendment. Lines 6 and 7, page 2, read:

All permits granted by authority of this act shall be granted upon the following conditions.

And then follows three subdivisions of conditions. Then there follow a number of sections which are also conditions. Now, I submit to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Floop] that the arrangement is unfortunate, because it might raise some question as to whether the only conditions are those that are named in sections 2 and 3, and perhaps a simplified form of the bill would be to have the language read "all permits granted by virtue of this act shall be subject to all subsequent provisions herein," and then change the word "first," in line 8, to the words "section 3," and then just number your sections on down. I do not understand the reason for having three conditions in section 2 and then the other conditions named as separate sections.

Mr. FLOOD. Well, the conditions, Mr. Chairman, in subsections 1, 2, and 3—section 3 of the bill then provides how a transfer of a permit shall be granted. It is not a condition upon which a permit is granted.

Mr. SHERLEY. Section 5 is, so is section 6, so is section 7.

Mr. FLOOD. Section 5 reads "that all permits issued pursuant to this act shall be for a determinate period"—well, Mr.

Chairman, that may be a very good suggestion, and I accept the suggestion made by the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. On page 2, line 7, strike out all after the word "granted" and insert "subject to all provisions of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 2, by striking out after the word "granted," in line 7, the remainder of the line and insert "subject to all provisions of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment. I want to ask the chairman of the committee by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, let us get this straightened out so as not to get into a tangle again.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. Is it in order at this point to offer an amendment at the end of the first subdivision, namely, at the end of line 15, page 3? Has that portion of the bill been read?

The CHAIRMAN. All of section 2 has been read, and any amendment to any part of the section is in order.

Mr. ROGERS. I understand all of section 2 has been read?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I want to suggest that if all of section 2 has been read and is open to amendment, I desire to strike out the word "first," in line 8, page 2, and substitute the words "Section 3," and then I shall do that right on down.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state for the benefit of the committee that the Clerk informs him that the bill has been read only down to the end of the first subdivision.

Mr. ROGERS. At the end of line 15, on page 3. The CHAIRMAN. Yes; that would be in order.

Mr. ROGERS. I offer the following amendment, Mr. Chair-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that precedes the amendment offered by the gentleman that I suppose, to be in order, should be offered first.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman withhold his amendment first? Mr. ROGERS. I do not see how we can have these taken up actually in the order they appear in the bill.

Mr. FLOOD. By unanimous consent, an amendment can be offered to any of these subsections.

Mr. MANN. Not if they have not been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Rogers].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Rocers: On page 3, at the end of line 15, insert the following as a new sentence:

"In granting any permit the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, require that the permittee shall furnish all or any part of the electrical energy developed by it directly to a State, municipal corporation, or political subdivision thereof, or to ultimate consumers. Such requirement may be for the entire life of the permit or for such portion thereof as the Secretary of War shall stipulate."

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I discussed that with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Rogers] and also with the author of the bill, and we are perfectly willing to accept the amend-

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, there is a general request here among Members that that be again reported. They could not get the full purport of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amend-

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I do not think we ought to adopt this in its present form, because it does not at all change a very objectionable feature of this bill. On page 2, beginning with line 8, it is provided:

That no permit shall be granted hereunder except to a State or municipal corporation, or political subdivision thereof, or to a public-service corporation or to a public-service agent of a State, duly constituted and authorized to engage in the business of furnishing to the public light, heat, power, or electric current—

And so forth.

Now turn to page 4, and the gentleman will find, at the beginning of line 15, after the semicolon:

And the permittee, after the completion of the works, shall operate the same continuously for the development and transmission of elec-tric current, power, and energy for sale or for other commercial pur-

The words "for other commercial purposes" are exceedingly important. They mean that the permittee may in his discretion sell or not sell electric current. We all know the facts. I read this from a letter written to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON], on the 20th of last month, by Mr. Seymour Van Santwood, chairman of the Public-Service Commission of the State of New York:

HYDRAULIC POWER COMPANY.

It is understood that this company is limited by restriction of Federal authorities to the use of 6,500 cubic feet of water per second, which represents roughly 125,000 horsepower. At the load factor which exists in the case of the Niagara Falls Power Co., this would amount to 700,000,000 kilowatt hours per year.

This company sells mechanical power only, and for that reason is not under the jurisdiction of this commission.

I pause here to comment upon the elaborate arguments and statements that were made a week ago, that all was to be left to the New York State commission up there.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I can not yield now.

It appears that about two-thirds of the power so sold is purchased by persons or corporations who are not subject to the commission's jurisdiction, and there is therefore no data available concerning such power. It seems to be the practice for such purchasers to own or lease the generators and cables by means of which the mechanical is converted into electrical power and conveyed to the point for use.

Now, as I understand that-and my colleague will correct me if I am not correct-it refers to largely what is known as the Schoellkopf Co.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The Schoellkopf Co.-

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is a manufacturing com-

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I am not advised of that; but it has close relations to a great many industrial companies in Niagara who lease this power, and who lease industrial sites from it, and they are so interlocked it is practically impossible to find out who is who.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, at this point I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota makes the point of order there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirty-one gentlemen are present, a quorum.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, a provision of this bill, written

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. CLINE. Has the gentleman finished? Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No; I have not.

Mr. CLINE. I thought you surrendered to the gentleman to make the point of no quorum.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. He did not surrender.

Mr. CLINE. I want to call the committee's attention to this provision:

No permit shall be granted hereunder except to a State or municipal corporation or political subdivision thereof, or to a public-service corporation or to a public-service agent of a State—

Now, what next?-

duly constituted and authorized to engage in the business of furnishing to the public light, heat, power, or electric current.

They can not engage in the business unless they are publicservice corporations. Now, reference was made to one of the power companies up there. The Schoellkopf people, or the Niagara Hydraulic Co., develop mechanical power. They sell that mechanical power to what is known as the Cliff Development Co., who transfer it to electrical energy and sell it to the customers of the Hydraulic Power Co.

Now, the principal purpose of including this provision is to compel all of these companies to become public-service corporations, so that they shall be completely under the control of the public-service agents of the State of New York or any other State that has the right to control the price of the electric energy that they create, so that the provision is clearly covered in this bill. No man and no company and no agents of the State of New York can get a permit under this bill unless they are a public-service corporation if we pass this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLINE. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Is there any preference given under this bill to the existing companies at Niagara on the American

Mr. CLINE. There is no preference given in this bill. If the gentleman will read the first part of section 2, beginning with line 8, he will find that anybody can come in.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Is not the primary purpose of this bill to permit the companies that are there to use an additional 4,200 cubic feet of water temporarily?

Mr. CLINE. Yes; temporarily

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Under a resolution that passed Congress granting the right temporarily?
Mr. CLINE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper] suggested that they had it extended a year or so, until we could get more facts concerning the matter. But the facts are, as I understand, that there are only two companies on the American side.

Mr. CLINE. The gentleman does not want to take up all my time, I know.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Only a minute. I shall ask that the gentleman be given more time if he desires. There are only two companies on the American side at the present time. If it were not for the resolution we passed the other day, authorizing 4,200 cubic feet of water to be taken, they would not have that right, and the primary purpose of this bill is to permit them to use that 4,200 cubic feet. That is the purpose, is it not?

Mr. CLINE. That is not the purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Do you expect other companies to operate there?

Mr. CLINE. We can not forecast who will go there to use that water. We provide that any company can go in and use this water under this bill. Nobody is shown a preference. It is open to everybody.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS). The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Rogers]. The bill does not specifically name the two concerns now operating at Niagara, but the bill is so drawn that nobody else could afford to go in there.

That is the criticism I have made of the bill from the beginning. I do not ask that my construction be accepted, but would like any Member who feels an interest in the matter and is acquainted with the situation at Niagara to read the bill carefully and see whether any other concern can go in there and get any of that power.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Rogers] is a good one, so far as it goes. It proposes to place in the hands of the Secretary of War the power to require these generating concerns to get these permits to sell their electrical energy to the municipalities or public corporations. In other words, it provides for community ownership, municipal ownership, of the power after it is generated, and to that extent I commend the amendment. I think it is enlightened and proceeds in the right direction.

The fault I find with the amendment is that it is based upon the conception that we are bound to have some private interests standing between this water and the municipal owner-ship or the community ownership. If it is fit and right that the communities in western New York should be enabled to avail themselves of the current without a middle man or distributee in the shape of these private concerns, why should they not be me the snape of these private contents. Why do we propermitted to generate the power themselves? Why do we provide for giving some exploiting interest a take-out? Why do we insist that the people shall pay a profit to some private con-Why do we not take a lesson from Canada? It is not an experiment at Niagara; not at all. There is a community experiment going on right there now. It is not going on on the American side, but it is going on on the Canadian side. It is proving a tremendous success; such a success that the people of Ontario are paying for power only from one-third to onehalf of what is paid for it on the American side. Yet the power is just as close to one country as to the other. Why is it? Is it because we are recognizing vested rights? Do we insist that these private interests are entitled to be there? There is no lawyer here but will tell you that they have no legal basis for their position.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. COX. That is very interesting to me. Why is it that they are getting power on the Canadian side cheaper than on our side?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will explain it to the gentleman. In Canada they have a public commission, chartered by the Province of Ontario, and they take power from one of the generating concerns at Niagara Falls, 100,000 horse-power, that they get for $9 a horsepower. They also generate electric energy at nine different plants outside of Niagara, up into Ontario, clear over to the Port Arthur country, a thousand miles away. They are generating it at nine different generating stations, making the power themselves and deliver-ing it to the people of Ontario at the cost of production plus an administration and amortization charge.

Mr. COX. Are they required to deliver it at cost?
Mr. HUDDLESTON. They are required to deliver it at cost plus administration and under a plan of amortization in 30 years.

Mr. COX. In other words, the Government of the Dominion of Canada owns the generating plant?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes; just as the government of a State, through a city, owns an electric plant; just as the State of Ohio, through the city of Cleveland, owns a steam-generating plant in the city of Cleveland that sells current at 3 cents a kilowatt hour, while in Buffalo and Niagara the people are paying 8 cents per kilowatt hour.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Is it not a fact that on the Canadian side the Government went in there and said, "If you will furnish us this power at $9, we will guarantee your securities to a certain extent and become a partner in the enterprise?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Not at all. Mr. LINTHICUM. I think that is so. Mr. HUDDLESTON. I am not so informed.

Mr. FLOOD. I simply want to call attention to the fact— The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made that debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I suggest that the gentleman can be recognized in opposition to the motion made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Huddleston].

Mr. Chairman, I will not ask for any time for myself, but I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Rogers], who offered the amendment, be given five minutes to explain his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts who offered the amendment have five minutes to explain his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I couple with that the request that I may have five minutes to proceed with the discussion of this Canadian situation.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Then I will object.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I object.
The CHAIRMAN. That can not be coupled with the request, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Nothing can be done except by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair puts the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Flood]. Is there objection?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I object.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama objects. Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already indicated that that motion is in substance a request for unanimous consent. If the point of order is made that the gentleman must confine himself to his amendment, he can not discuss anything.

Mr. GARDNER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. GARDNER. After the motion to strike out the last word is voted on and defeated, or even if it is carried, then would it not be in order to move to strike out the last two words, and to proceed to discuss that?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order, technically. Substantially, however, if the gentleman makes that motion, and the point is made that he must confine himself to his amendment, he can not proceed with these general discussions that we have on the motion to strike out the last word, or the last two words. In substance it is nothing in the world but a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. GARDNER. If the Chair will excuse me-

Mr. LINTHICUM. Objection has been made to the author of the amendment explaining it, and now if some one else is recognized to move to strike out the last two words, I give notice that I shall make him confine himself to the discussion of the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers an amendment to strike out the last two words. Now we will await the action of the committee. If the point of order is made that the gentleman must discuss his amendment, he will have to speak to the last two words, and nothing else.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment, and I move to strike out the last four lines of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment, to strike out the last two words. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman objects. It requires unani-

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Do I understand, Mr. Chairman, that I have the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts would, to my mind, be an unwise one to adopt.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not confining himself to the last two

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must confine himself to his amendment.

I rise to discuss the point of order. I think the Chair is slightly in error. A motion to strike out the last two words involves the whole paragraph under discussion. You can not discuss the last two words of a paragraph without liberty to discuss the paragraph. I will say to the Chair that that ruling has been made a great many times in the House. Of course, you can not go to subjects that are not connected in some way with the last two words of the amend-

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield for a question? The CHAIRMAN. What distinction has ever been made between the motion to strike out the last two words and the motion to strike out the last word?

Mr. MANN. No distinction.

The CHAIRMAN. The invariable ruling has been that where a motion to that effect is made, the Member making it must confine himself to the subject of the amendment, the last word or the last two words.

Mr. MANN. He is not confined to the words. There has been no such ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. He is confined to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. He is confined to the effect of striking out the word or the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will proceed in order, and confine himself to the amendment, the Chair will allow him to proceed, but he must confine himself to his amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. The Chair and the "gentleman from Minnesota" are not in agreement as to just what has

The CHAIRMAN. Let the amendment be reported, so that the Chair can see whether he has stated it.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I made a motion to strike out the last four lines. The motion I made, may it please the Chair, was to strike out the last four lines of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman could not do that, because he had previously made a motion to strike out the last two words. He requested unanimous consent to withdraw that motion, but objection was made. The motion to strike out the last two words is the pending motion.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Very well. If they want to vote upon it, I am willing. If they are willing that I should proceed, I am ready to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman wishes to discuss his amendment to strike out the last two words, let the Clerk report the last two words and see what they are.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. The last two words are "shall stipulate."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman rises to discuss the amendment to strike out "shall stipulate."

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. May it please the Chair, this is very unwise, exceptionally unwise, to leave in a law as important as this the words "shall stipulate." The stipulation in any contract should be thoroughly considered, should be weighed carefully, and I assure the members of this committee that no consideration whatever has been given to these words except by a few members of the committee and the author of the bill. It will change the whole effect of the bill if you leave those words'in.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Yes.
Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Does not the gentleman think that it would help it if we changed "shall" to "will"?

that it would help it if we changed "shall" to "will"?

Mr. HASTINGS. Can not the gentleman find some other substitute or synonym for the word "stipulate"?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Yes; "agree" is a good synonym. We are authorizing the Secretary of War to stipulate away the rights of the public in its water powers. That is the question at issue. We are taking from this Congress and the people of this country the right to say what shall be done with the public's water powers and authorizing the Secretary of War to dispose of them to his friends. [Applause,]

No civilized country would for an instant consider the insurance.

No civilized country would for an instant consider the inauguration of such legislation. There is not a progressive country in the world to-day but what has water-power legislation that offered.

would serve as an example for us to follow; but we shirk our duty day after day by turning over to the executive departments of the Government the right to legislate. We are permitting them to "stipulate" as to what we will do with our water powers and what our interests shall be, if any, in the natural resources of the country. This is stipulating with a vengeance. Are we not paying too dear for our whistle? Is a seat in this House worth the price of such a stipulation? Why should we play the part of dupes for the Hydroelectric Trust? Is it conceivable that our constituents will not discover that their rights have been surrendered to their enemies?

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. SLOAN. Does the gentleman think that stipulation would give way to capitulation?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Most assuredly; we would be capitulating to the bureaucracy which is becoming so powerful that the Congress sets up and takes notice every time the Secretary of War comes before us and tells us what he wants to do in reference to water-power legislation. That is the condition we are getting into. It is time that we stopped stipulating and began legislating in the interest of the public. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FLOOD. I would like to know if all of section 2 of this bill has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that it has

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that the bill ought to be read by sections. All bills, except appropriation bills, are read by section before there is any opportunity offered for amendment. I had an impression that there was unanimous consent to read it by paragraphs, but I have not yet had the opportunity to look it up.

Mr. ROGERS. Would not the result of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] be that the paragraph would become a section, and so the principle is very much the same.

Mr. FLOOD. I do not think that amendment was adopted. I was trying to find what the unanimous consent was, but I have not yet found it in the RECORD. My recollection is that the unanimous consent was obtained to offer amendments to any paragraph after we got through reading the entire section, but I may be mistaken about that. If I am not, I make the point of order that the section must be read before the amendment is offered.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise for a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does the Chair propose to stop debate while this question is being looked up?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the bill is required to be read by sections.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. But in case there was unanimous consent that it be read by paragraph—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not undertake to pass on

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I think such an agreement was made in connection with this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If such was the unanimous consent, that controls the consideration of the bill.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this paraaph and on all amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I make the point of order that a motion is already pending.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate is exhausted.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH]

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Dempsey] may be permitted to offer an amendment. I make the motion that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. And I move to amend that motion by adding "after three amendments have been offered to it," if gentlemen desire to offer so many.

Mr. ROGERS. That is in addition to the one now pending. Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. What section are we talking What section are we talking about?

Mr. FLOOD. Paragraph 1 of section 2.
Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the chairman of the committee that I have an amendment that I would like to offer to that paragraph.

Mr. FLOOD, And I would like to have the amendment

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I do not want to offer it unless I can have five minutes to debate it.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the motion to close debate is not debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, what has become of my motion to strike out the last two words?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that that will be put after the motion of the gentleman from Virginia is disposed of. The gentleman from Virginia moves to close debate.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. But, Mr. Chairman, I moved to amend that motion

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, may I make a unanimous request at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I have an amendment I would like to offer to the paragraph, and I want five minutes to discuss it in.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make that as a mo-

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No; I make it as a unanimous request

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that without regard to the motion made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Flood] that he shall have five minutes to submit an amendment and discuss the same.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I wish to amend that by adding five minutes additional.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama will send up his amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Huddleston moves to amend the motion of Mr. Flood by adding to it "after three additional amendments have been offered, and debate had thereon."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, while I do not think that amendment is in order, I do not make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr.

Huddleston) there were—ayes 9, noes 56.

Mr. Huddleston. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers, and pending that I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ten Members present, a quorum. The gentleman demands tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Virginia was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to close debate.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend that motion by inserting the words "after 10 minutes."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama. The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr.

Huddleston) there were—ayes 11, noes 90.

So the amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Virginia was rejected.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend the motion by providing that the debate shall close after five min-utes, which time shall be used by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Rogers].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama to the motion of the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to close debate.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Huddleston) there were—ayes 70, noes 10.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH] to strike out the last two words.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Rogers].

The Clerk again reported the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Rogers].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary in-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Do I understand the last two words were stricken out?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.
Mr. HUDDLESTON. Then I move to amend the amendment by inserting at the end of it the words "may stipulate."
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk report the amendment

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the last two words, "shall stipulate," and inserting the words "may stipulate."

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. That does not state the situation correctly. Those two words, "shall stipulate," were stricken out on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Smith].

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, no; the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota was voted down.

Minnesota was voted down.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The Chair stated that it was agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair did so state, it was an inadvertent statement. The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I withdraw my amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Rogers].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Rogers) there were—ayes 24, noes 42.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I desire to offer to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order was made a moment ago with respect to the reading of this bill by sections. What was ascertained with respect to the unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, on referring to the RECORD I find the following:

Mr. Flood. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments may be offered by paragraph.

Unanimous consent was given, so that I should think the gentleman would have the right to offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send up his amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 1, after the words "shall be," insert the words "just and reasonable and shall be,"

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I would like to have the construction of the Chair as to the scope of the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to close debate, which was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to close debate was upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto. Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does that refer to paragraph No. 2? The CHAIRMAN. It referred to the paragraph which was under discussion.

Mr. FLOOD. That was paragraph No. 1, Mr. HUDDLESTON. The paragraph under discussion was the first paragraph of section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that the motion to close debate related to the first paragraph.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. To section 2?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, in support of the amendment which I have just offered-

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Has not debate been exhausted on the amendments to the first paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. It has. The Chair did not know for what purpose the gentleman from Alabama rose.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I make the point of order that debate is exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been exhausted on all amendments to paragraph 1,

Mr. HUDDLESTON. This is not an amendment to paragraph 1 The other paragraph has not yet been read. Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, there are a number of paragraphs to section 2.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the paragraph.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I am discussing the point of order. Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I make the point of order that

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Alabama is propounding a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, there are a number of paragraphs in section 2. I understand that part of those paragraphs have not been read. I understood debate was closed on the first paragraph in section 2. The CHAIRMAN. It was.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Now, my amendment is to the second paragraph of section 2.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order it has not been read yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that the paragraph has not been read.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The Chair is incorrectly advised.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk advises the Chair that all of that paragraph has been read.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The second paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. That the paragraph to which the gentleman's amendment is directed comes within the motion already made to close debate.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does the Clerk advise the Chair that or is that the Chair's decision?

The CHAIRMAN. That is what the Clerk advises the Chair as to the situation in regard to the reading of the bill. Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment: On page 2, line 8, strike out the word "first" and insert the words "section 3." The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from Alabama offer an amendment' Mr. HUDDLESTON. I did; and it was read and I claimed the right to debate it, which the Chair held I could not have.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has no right to debate because that is covered by the motion of the gentleman from Virginia. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. Huddleston) there were

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ten Members are present, a quorum.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment: On page 2, line 8, strike out the word "first" and insert the words section 3."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 2, line 8, by striking out the word "first" and inserting the words "section 3."

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the ayes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. Huddleston) there wereayes 40, noes 5.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary in-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I sent up an amendment—
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman in a moment, He has recognized the gentleman from Minnesota.
Mr. HUDDLESTON. But I have already sent my amendment

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that that does not give his amendment a prior status. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 3, line 8, after the colon, by inserting:
"Provided further, That all Army engineers detailed by the Secretary of War to gather information and make report to the War Department, in reference to the establishment of rates and service, be placed upon the pay roll of the Hydroelectric Trust during the time such engineers are engaged in such work and be dropped from the pay rolls of the United States Government for such period."

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I understood when the chairman of the committee made his request that simply included the paragraph on top of page 2, and I think a number of the other Members thought so. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr.]

SHERLEY] has suggested an amendment to strike out the word "first" and insert the words "section 3," and it seems that was adopted to the second paragraph on page 2. Now, it does seem an amendment of this importance should have an opportunity to be discussed, and if there is any doubt I would ask unanimous consent of the committee to state the reason for the amendment which I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the situation from the officer at the desk that the paragraph to which the motion of the gentleman from Virginia applied goes down to the end of line 15, page 3.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to discuss the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. FLOOD and Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, I object.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Huddlesson: Page 3, line 14, after the words "actually to," strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert the following: "use the water diverted for the generation of hydroelectric energy and to sell all such energy, except such as the permittee may require in the operation of its generation works, direct to consumers thereof."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division. The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 47. Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was rejected. Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I have sent up an amendment to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 3, line 3, by striking out all of said line.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division. The committee divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 26. Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee proceeded to divide.

Mr. DEMPSEY (while the committee was dividing). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amend-

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I object. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia objects, and the vote will proceed.

The committee divided; and the tellers [Mr. Stafford and Mr. DEMPSEY] reported—ayes 14, noes 31.

So the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment to paragraph 1.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Smith of Minnesota: Amend, on page 3, line 15, after the word "current," by inserting "to the public."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Second. No permit shall be granted until such plans and specifications for the structures, canals, and other works constructed, or proposed to be constructed, for the generation of power, together with such drawings of said construction and such map of location as may be required for a full understanding of the subject, have been submitted to the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers for their approval, nor until they shall have approved such plans and specifications and the location of such construction; and when the plans and specifications for any such construction have been approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, it shall be unlawful to deviate from such plans and specifications, either before or after completion of the structures, unless the modification of such plans and specifications shall have previouly been submitted to and received the approval of the Chief of Engineers and of the Secretary of War.

Third. The permittee shall begin the actual construction of the works and the several parts thereof within one year from the date of issuance of the permit unless that time, for good cause shown, be extended not more than one year by the Secretary of War; and said permittee shall complete said works within two years from the beginning of actual construction unless, for good cause shown, that time be extended not more than two years by the Secretary of War; and the permittee, after the completion of the works, shall operate the same continuously for the development and transmission of electric current, power, and energy for sale or for other commercial purposes, and to the extent deemed necessary by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, unless prevented therefrom by unavoidable accident or delay, in which case, upon showing made to that effect, this requirement may be waived by the Secretary of War.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SMITH of Minnesota: Amend, on page 4, by striking out all of line 16, after the word "shall," and all of lines 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, and 23 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"The permittee, after the completion of the works that lowing:

"The permittee, after the completion of the works, shall, to the extent the public may demand current, operate the same continuously, as provided in subsection 4 heretofore, for the development and transmission of electric current, power, and energy for sale for public use and purposes, unless prevented therefrom by unavoidable delay; and the failure on the part of the permittee to comply with the foregoing conditions and requirements shall be deemed a violation of the provisions of this act."

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary in-The committee, by unanimous consent, agreed to consider this bill by paragraphs, and not by sections. Is it not too late to offer an amendment to this paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that it was an agreement formerly made to read by paragraphs, and that amendments could be offered to the different paragraphs.

Mr. BURNETT. As read.

The CHAIRMAN. All has been read now, as the Chair understands it, down to section 3. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH] has offered an amendment.

Mr. FLOOD. We have read to section 3. is if amendments are not limited to paragraph 4 of section 2 under that unanimous-consent agreement?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would not so construe it. thinks amendments may, under this agreement, be offered to the second, third, and fourth.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I find on page 2166 of the RECORD, containing the proceedings of the last time this bill was under consideration, that the fol-

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has not finished reading the section.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I would like to inquire whether it is not in order to offer amendments to the various paragraphs of the bill without regard to the section? Otherwise we are going to be required to go through three or four pages dealing with different matters without being able to amend, and I suggest that it will make a rather inconvenient consideration of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule for the consideration of a bill like this to consider it by sections.

suggest that it will make a rather inconvenient consideration of the bill.

The Chairman, The rule for the consideration of a bill like this is to consider it by sections. We consider appropriation bills by paragraphs.

Mr. Floon, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments may be offered by paragraphs.

Mr. Dempsex, I will ask the gentleman from Virginia if it may not be understood that in that we have the right reserved to offer an amendment to the first paragraph. We are on the second.

Mr. Floon, Yes.

The Chairman. The rule is that appropriation bills are read by paragraphs and the others by sections. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that this bill be read by paragraphs.

Mr. Stafforn. With a supplemental provision that amendments may be in order to the first paragraph, which has already been read.

The Chairman. With the understanding that amendments may be in order to the first paragraph, which has already been read. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

So I take it that there is no question but that consent was

So I take it that there is no question but that consent was obtained to consider this bill by paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has for the first time been apprised of what the understanding was. After inspecting it, the Chair thinks that it should be considered by paragraphs.

Mr. STAFFORD. We have been proceeding under an erroneous impression since the reading down to line 15, page 3, and I think, in view of the misapprehension of some of the Members, there should be some opportunity to consider these paragraphs by paragraphs and not have the gentleman foreclose the right offering amendments to the paragraphs.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH] have leave to offer the amendment that he proposes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Reserving the right to object, how many amendments? Let us find out how many.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. In reply to that, has the time arrived in this House that a gentleman can not offer amendments to the bill?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If he offers them in good faith, but if he offers them for the purpose of filibustering, no.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I did not understand from the reading of the Record that unanimous consent had actually been given.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it was granted.

Mr. STAFFORD. I read, Mr. Chairman, that the Chairman stated there was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood it that way Mr. FLOOD. There was unanimous consent undoubtedly Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] yield? Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to say to the gentleman that we have not been proceeding under any erroneous construction. The gentleman from Virginia stated that a unanimous-consent agreement had been agreed to.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Virginia stated a while ago that he did not know.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman occupying the chair has just said that he was under an erroneous impression.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do not care what the gentleman said. Mr. STAFFORD. It is only fair that the gentleman have the right to offer an amendment.

Mr. FLOOD. I hope the gentleman will not be cut off from his right of offering an amendment at the proper time. I propose to limit debate on the three paragraphs and the amendments by offering a motion to limit debate.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the request for unanimous consent made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Smith] is recognized.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in offering this amendment is to limit the discretionary power of the Secretary of War. I think-just as much of the Secretary of War as any Member on this floor; it is the principle involved and not the man. But I do believe that in enacting legislation we should do it with some definiteness, and not leave it for the Secertary of War or any officer of this Government to determine what the legislation shall be.

The portion of the bill which I ask to amend is as follows:

The portion of the bill which I ask to amend is as follows:

The permittee, after the completion of the works, shall operate the same continuously for the development and transmission of electric current, power, and energy for sale or for other commercial purposes, and to the extent deemed necessary by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, unless prevented therefrom by unavoidable accident or delay, in which case, upon showing made to that effect, this requirement may be waived by the Secretary of War.

Now, I contend in all seriousness and fairness that the Secretary of War should not be the sole judge in every case; that we can define, as my amendment does, that this power should be used to its full extent so long as there is a public demand for it. Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota, Yes.

Mr. McARTHUR. Is it not the purpose of the gentleman's amendment to make public-service concerns, such as these cities and towns, purchasers of this power?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Oh, no. The gentleman misunderstands it. There has been so much misunderstanding to-day and so little thought given to this important question that I am not at all surprised at my friend from Oregon. Not at all, He is pardonable. I have no purpose in offering this amendment except to get the best legislation we can get. I am just as much in favor of seeing Niagara Falls developed and seeing the companies there get this power as the men who bring in this bill, for that is their purpose, although they will not tell us what the purpose is. They seem to be afraid to trust us with the facts, as is evidenced by their bill, all of which makes me very suspicious of just what the Secretary of War will do when he gets the authority to give the companies a new permit. One would imagine that some sort of an understanding has been arrived at. If not, why not put a preferential clause in the bill?
Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD. What is the gentleman's statement? Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. My statement is that the gentlemen who bring in this bill know that the purpose of the legislation is to give the two hydroelectric concerns at Niagara Falls the right to use the additional 4,200 cubic feet of water.

Mr. FLOOD. I can answer the gentleman. Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. No; I decline to yield.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. No; I can not yield now. I believe this bill ought to carry the preferential right, giving these companies the right to take that power under the law that we pass to-day. Why? Let us be fair. Let us come out of the woods and say that we are enacting this legislation for those companies if they comply with our conditions. But let us make those conditions fair and reasonable to the public.

All that you have done in this bill and all that you have apparently tried to do, whether you intend to do so or not, is to turn over the right to use this 4,200 cubic feet of water to the Secretary of War, to give it to whomsoever he sees fit; not only to give it to a particular grantee, but after the grantee has been given the right he may run it as the Secretary of War pleases, in total disregard of the commission of the State of New York or any other State.

This bill deserves consideration. I take issue with any man who says I am here filibustering against this bill. I am not. I want to see those companies get that power, but under such safeguards and regulations as will protect the rights of the public.

In the past I have tried to get legislation that would give the State of Minnesota and the Twin Cities a preferential right to secure the power at the high dam between the cities, and a number of the Members of this House, especially on the Republican side, who were opposed to the Twin Cities getting this preferential right, are to-day insisting that this bill be passed without any time being given for its consideration. Of course, the bill itself contains no preferential clause, but the Secretary of War is given the right to grant this power to the present corporations. This may serve as an excuse for the inconsistency of my distinguished colleagues that are so anxious that this bill be passed at once without debate or amendment.

My present attitude is, at least, consistent with my former position, as I am in favor of giving to these two power companies the preferential right to get this additional water. They have invested their money. They have equities there. State of New York has equities there. And do you suppose that we, as sensible men, are going to take that away from them without giving them an opportunity to bid for this power? What is there in this bill that requires the Secretary of War to sell this power to the highest bidder and for the best interest of the United States? Not a single line. Yet a number of the Members who are supporting it insist that other power bills that passed this House must contain a provision that the Secretary of War must grant the permit to the party that would make the highest bid for it, or, in other words, pay the most money. Where are these great friends of the public to-day? What has become of their conservation convictions?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. FLOOD. I object, Mr. Chairman. Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire recognition?

Mr. FLOOD. I desire a gentleman over there to have recognition in my place.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from New York [Mr.

PARKER] a member of the committee?

Mr. PARKER of New York. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON], who is a member of the committee, will be

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I applaud the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH] for what he has said in behalf of his amendment. I applaud him. It is sound. The objection am making to this bill is that it ought not to be constructed for the benefit of those two concerns. I dissent, however, from what the gentleman from Minnesota says, that we ought to legislate for their benefit.

Now, I say this bill, whether so intended or not, is so constructed that nobody else can get in under it except those two concerns. If we are going to fix it in that fashion, then we ought to make it just as strong on them as possible. I am not willing to turn the people of western New York over to the mercies of these two concerns. I want somebody, anybody I can get, to stand between them and this system that has been going on up there for years.

Some gentleman may think that the Public Service Commission of the State of New York is amply able to protect the people and to protect that State, but I dissent from that view.

I have before me statements made by the Public Service Commission of the State of New York that throw a considerable light on this controversy, and I regret the disposition that has been shown here that cuts me off from showing the germane facts to this House.

The Public Service Commission of the State of New York has not been able to protect the citizens of western New York. There is some defect there in the commission or in the laws under which they are acting. For instance, Mr. Chairman, they do not know anything about what the Hydraulic Power Co. is

The gentleman from Wisconsin called the attention of the House to the fact that the commission has no information as to what is being done with half of the power that is being generated at Niagara Falls on the American side; and I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that the public service commission in New York has not got the information with reference to the Niagara Falls Power Co. and they have not got it as to the Hydraulic Power Co. I have a letter here from the chairman of the commission, and I want to call attention to some of the statements that he makes. He says that the impression is general that the commission has investigated the situation at Niagara Falls, but that all they have done is to investigate the charges in Buffalo of the Buffalo General Electric Co. That is all. They have gone into it, and that is all they know about. They have some general information which the chairman is unable to say whether it is accurate or otherwise.

They have had no hearings on the general situation. have just simply collected information in a general way, and do not know with any certainty how much power is being generated by either one of these concerns at Niagara Falls, nor what they are charging for it, nor to whom they are selling it, nor whether they are discriminating, nor what they are doing. I am here, Mr. Chairman, to say that they are overcharging the I am here to say that there is discrimination. They are playing their favorites among the consumers of this power, and they will continue to do that unless we step in and stop it.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised at the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Huddleston] complaining that he is being cut off from an opportunity to debate this bill. By dilatory tactics and filibustering methods to-day, he has killed one-half of the time that we have been in session. If he had really desired to discuss the merits of this bill, he would have abstained from these tactics, and would have had all the opportunity he wanted to discuss every line of this bill and every amendment that is offered in connection with it. I think it comes with bad grace from the gentleman to complain of lack of time. [Applause.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, can the gentleman point to anything that looked like filibustering until the gentleman had declined to give me anything like a reasonable time to dis-

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman raised the point of no quorum before he went into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill this morning.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Certainly I did. This is an important bill, and we ought to have the Members here to consider it.

Mr. FLOOD. I refuse to yield any further. I have answered the gentleman's question. He has done nothing but filibuster, and the gentleman with other members of the committee has considered this bill for weeks and weeks. I resent the suggestion that this bill is framed in the interest of two power companies at Niagara Falls. I realize, as every man realizes, that no legislation can be enacted disposing of the Niagara River water that does not give an advantage to the existing companies, but this bill avoids that as far as it is possible to do so; it guards the interest of the Government and the consumers of power.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to the point of order that debate has been exhausted.

Mr. FLOOD. Debate has not been exhausted. The CHAIRMAN. Debate, so far as this ame Debate, so far as this amendment is concerned, is exhausted.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Reserving the right to object-want to discuss my amendment for five minutes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Reserving the right to object, I should like to know when we are to have some time to debate this measure?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. How much time does the gentleman think he ought to have to debate this measure?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I think we ought to have reasonable time for debate. If it is the policy of the chairman of the committee to cut off debate at the earliest possible moment, I shall certainly object.

Mr. FLOOD. It is the policy of the chairman to move to cut off unnecessary and dilatory debate; this I have been trying to do all day.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I object.

Mr. FLOOD. Wait a minute, now. I have the floor. I object to being interrupted by the gentleman every time I say a word.
Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I call for the regular

Mr. FLOOD. The gentleman has asked me a question, and I have a right to answer it. The gentleman asked the question whether it was my purpose to cut off debate. I will make a motion to cut off all unnecessary and dilatory debate, and if those motions cut off the gentleman from Alabama, I can not help it. So far as I am concerned, I do not make any request for any time for myself.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, in view of the vague answer of the gentleman, I must object.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I move, as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, to strike out the word "second," in line 16, page 3, and to insert in lieu thereof "section 4," and I want to be heard on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 3, in line 16, by striking out the word "second" and inserting the words "section 4."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not a substitute. It has no relation to it at all. The Clerk will correct the numbers of the sections.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The first section has been

Mr. MANN. The Clerk will change the other sections when he engrosses the bill, without any action by the House.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I have not with me the amendment offered by the gentleman—

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that the gentleman's amendment is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I want to speak five minutes. That is what I offered it for.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] may proceed for five min-

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota, a member of this committee, may be allowed to address the House for five minutes.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota have five minutes in which to address the committee, Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I object. Mr. RAGSDALE. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I make the point that that point of order is dilatory.

The CHAIRMAN. The question of no quorum is never dilaory. A quorum is necessary in order to do business.

Mr. GARDNER. The Speaker being satisfied that a quorum was present and that the point of no quorum was dilatory, declined to entertain it. There are a great many decisions to that effect. Very likely the Chair is not satisfied; but often the point of no quorum has been held to be dilatory if the Chair was satisfied that a quorum was present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say in passing on the point of order of the gentleman from Massachusetts that if the Chair was satisfied that there was a quorum present he would so announce without counting; but at the time the point was made by the gentleman from South Carolina the Chair was not satisfied that a quorum was present. Some Members have come in since the point of order was made, and it may be that there is now a quorum present; but the Chair is not certain that such is the case; hence a count is proper. [After counting.] One hundred and fifteen Members present-a quorum.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Huddleston] has read an extract from a letter from Mr. Van Santvoord, chairman of the second division of the Public Service Commission of New York State. He has not read the whole letter. I hold in my hand a letter from the electrical expert for the second division of the Public Service Commission of the State of New York, which I shall introduce in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, and it closes in this way:

The Cline bill disposes of any such claim and clears the way for effective action by the commission.

Now, that is the letter, and, as I say, I do not wish to take the time to read it now or give the gentleman's name, but I will tell you his name.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. PARKER of New York. No; I have not the time, and the gentleman would not yield to me. The letter is from an expert. The gentleman would lead us to believe that not one single investigation has been made as to the rates at Niagara Falls. He states that the hydraulic company sells 60 per cent to private concerns. That is true. There is the largest chemical electric proposition anywhere in this country located at Niagara Falls, and all the electrical energy that is developed is subject to the public-service commission. The gentleman speaks about the General Electric Co. at Buffalo. I think the gentleman made the statement that the Niagara Falls Power Co. would not do their own milking. Allow me to quote from a report of the public-service commission a statement as to who owns the stock.

I come from a place as far from Niagara Falls, practically, as does the gentleman from Alabama. I have not one single person in the district that I have the honor to represent who uses that power; but, nevertheless, I can not stand here and hear the gentleman from Alabama say, by implication at least, that the Public Service Commission of the State of New York is not effective and is not efficient. I do not see how the gentleman is going to get any Member to follow his idea that we can employ men for $6,500 a year for which we in New York State pay $15,000. The gentleman can not believe for a moment that you can hire a better or more compètent man for $6,500 than you can for $15,000. Now, the gentleman to whom the gentleman from Alabama refers, Mr. Van Santvoord, is a personal friend of mine; he is a Democrat and belongs to the gentleman's own political faith, and is as fine a gentleman as I know.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I want to call the gentleman's attention to paragraph

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield. Now, I wish to read from a case decided April 2, 1913, in which you find this language:

It does not appear of record that the Niagara Falls Power Co., even directly or indirectly, has any stock holdings in the General Electric of Buffalo. Whether it really owns stock standing in the name of private individuals is not known. There has been no list of stockholders that indicates that this is the case.

I am reading from an official report of the Public Service Commission of the State of New York. The gentleman from Alabama would lead us to believe that no rate had ever been reduced in the State of New York

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. PARKER of New York. In this same report in 1913 there was a reduction ordered of 28 per cent, and this was taken into court on the theory of confiscation and a general reduction of 19 per cent was ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection? Mr. HUDDLESTON. Reserving the right to object, I shall object unless the gentleman allows me to ask him some questions.

Mr. PARKER of New York. I will yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does not the gentleman think this public-service commission is ineffective when the Hydraulic Power Co. is not under its jurisdiction? Does not the gentleman think there is something radically wrong in the law?

Mr. PARKER of New York. No; I do not, I am thor-loughly familiar with the public-service law, because I helped

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Perhaps that accounts for it. Does the gentleman realize that there is nothing in this bill that will force the Hydraulic Power Co. to generate hydroelectric energy and distribute it at reasonable rates?

Mr. PARKER of New York. In answer to the gentleman, I wish to state that he is right as to the Hydraulic Power Co., but if any of the users of the power failed to complain to the public-service commission as to rates, if they are satisfied, whose business is it except theirs?

Now, another matter, it seems to me very important regard-ing this bill, and that is that the United States Government, by a great stretch of imagination, assumes control over the water at Niagara Falls. I believe we have control of it; but an attorney general of the State of New York believed that it is absolutely a State proposition. I do not know, however, of one atom of this power that is used in interstate commerce; it is absolutely intrastate, and the gentleman will admit that. The gentleman must admit that as soon as the power is generated it becomes subject to the laws of the State of New York and not to the Federal Government. You can not enact a law that will make it subject to Federal control.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the gentleman to this fact, that there can not be a permit issued gentleman to this fact, that there can not be a permit issued under this bill to any party or corporation who does not qualify under the public-service laws of the State of New York.

Mr. PARKER of New York. That is in conformity with our State laws. The gentleman talks about monopoly. Let me point out to the gentleman that the Government regulation fosters monopoly. You can not get away from it. If you are going to regulate rates, you have got to foster monopoly, because there are two things that govern prices—one is competition and the other is regulation.

If you say that you have regulation, by the same token you say that you will protect from undue competition, That has been fought out in our State many times. For instance, you say grant this to some other company. Before they can distribute that they would have to go to the public-service commission of the State of New York and get a certificate of public necessity. You say that the Hydraulic Power Co. ought to be under this companies of the public results o be under this commission. I agree with you. They should be under the public-service commission's jurisdiction. The Niagara Falls Power Co. is.

Mr. FLOOD. This bill puts the Hydraulic Power Co. under that commission.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Yes. I agree with the gentleman thoroughly. They should be. The public-service commission knows how much it costs to generate a horsepower. They know whether prices charged to the 60 per cent which are under their jurisdiction are reasonable or not. The gentleman fails to recognize that the State of New York was the first big State in the Union to try to regulate public-service corporations in a comprehensive way. This is practically a New York State proposition, except that the United States has control of the water. [Applause,]

The letter to which I made reference is from an engineer of the public-service commission of the second district of the State of New York, and I quote from it the following:

PROPOSED LEGISLATION REGARDING NIAGARA WATER POWER.

1. THE QUESTION INVOLVED IS GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP V. PRIVATE OWNERSHIP.

OWNERSHIP.

The fundamental difference which exists between the schemes proposed is not what measure of control should be exercised over the power, nor is it whether the control should be exercised by Federal or State Governments. The real difference is between a continuation of private ownership, with extensive and adequate regulation, and embarkation in a scheme in which private capital plays no part, but all of the canals, tunnels, power houses, machinery, transmission lines, substations, etc., are owned by the Government, paid for by Government bonds, and operated by the Government as a business venture.

2. GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP IS NOT TET ADVISABLE.

are owned by the Government, paid for by Government bonds, and operated by the Government as a business venture.

2. GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP IS NOT YET ADVISABLE.

The sentiment of the State and Nation is opposed to a general plunge into Government ownership. It is not necessary at this juncture to-discuss the abstract principle of whether Government ownership of some forms of business is or is not advisable. It is enough to say that until our municipalities and States can achieve efficient and economic building of roads, operation of charitable institutions, and management of ordinary governmental activities it will not be time to embark into projects which are less generally understood and more subject to disaster in inexperienced or inefficient hands. The generation, transmission, and distribution of electricity are highly technical problems, and if governmental ownership is to come at all it would seem that they should be among the very last to be taken up.

There was a few years ago some agitation in New York State for State development of water power, but this has been entirely abandoned, even in the case of powers which are now actually owned by the State. New York is definitely committed to the policy of private ownership, with effective governmental regulation, except that municipalities are permitted to own their utilities if they choose. The number of those who have chosen to do so is not great, and the average results obtained by them are not such as to encourage extensions of the

those who have chosen to do so is not great, and the average results obtained by them are not such as to encourage extensions of the experiment.

The hydroelectric commission of Ontario is the example usually pointed out as conspicuously illustrating the possibility of success in such ventures. It is too early to herald the Ontario scheme as a success. It may be that by destroying private property rights, causing loss of tax revenue, and by securing partial support through direct appropriations supplied by general taxes, the commission has been able to reduce the rates for electricity below those which have been found possible by sound and sane business enterprises. Even the question of how much the rates have been reduced is one which requires careful analysis. It is not fair to compare the kilowatt-hour charge in a rate where a charge based on room area must be paid in addition with the primary kilowatt-hour charge in the case of a rate like that which exists in Buffalo, where the initial rate is comparatively high, as it should be, until the consumer has paid part of the carrying charges on the investment required to serve him, but where a reasonable use of electricity rapidly causes the rate to fall, enabling those who really desire to use current for purposes other than lighting to get it for 1½ cents a kilowatt hour. It is not time to copy the Ontario experiment until a reasonable interval has shown whether adequate provision has been made for depreciation and obsolescence of the property so recently installed, whether the proposition is on a sound and continuing financial basis, and whether the municipalities who are obliged to pay the wholesale rate imposed by the commission, and charge the retail rate fixed by the commission, will indefinitely continue to make good through taxes any deficts which this method may cause.

3. THERE IS NO ADVANTAGE IN GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP.

3. THERE IS NO ADVANTAGE IN GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP.

The Cline bill expressly prohibits capitalization of the right to divert the water, and specifies that it shall not be assigned value in any tax, rate, or other proceeding. This means that under efficient regulation the companies diverting the water will be limited to a revenue which will reimburse them for reasonable operating expenses and pay a fair percentage on the capital actually invested in physical property. It is true that ordinarily the Government can secure capital at a slightly lower rate of interest than a private business enterprise, although this difference will naturally become less as the Government embarks more into general business undertakings. It will hardly be questioned, however, that the private enterprise can considerably distance the public one in efficiency and economy of operation, and the advantage thus gained will usually more than offset the difference in interest rate. The proponents of Government ownership will question the success of governmental regulation. It is certainly quite as likely that dishonesty and inefficiency will be encountered in the management of a Government-owned business as in governmental regulation of private business.

4. THE RIGHTS OF EXISTING COMPANIES SHOULD BE RECOGNIZED.

developed the power from Niagara water and sold it to those who found it useful. The investment in this business seems now to be so wise and profitable that the uncertainty and experimental nature of the development in its early stages is hardly recognized. Engineers not yet past middle age, who participated in the first installation of the Niagara Falls Power Co., find it difficult to remember or to believe that there was grave question among all engineers at that time as to whether two generators could be operated simultaneously on one line, and whether power could be successfully transmitted at 11,000 volts from Niagara Falls to Buffalo.

The companies who bravely faced the doubts of those days and invested their money with faith in the future have developed an art, the progress of which has surprised even themselves, and the power which they have made available has been of the greatest value to the State and to the Nation. They have proceeded under explicit authorizations of the State and Federal Governments. They have violated no laws and have been amenable to every regulation imposed upon them. The property which they possess is theirs by every principle of law and justice, and should not be made valueless by an unreasonable deprivation of the water which alone makes it productive. If these companies have made money, that constitutes no crime for which they should now be punished by confiscation of their property. How many of those who loudly proclaim these people as robbers would not in like situation have made the most of the opportunities presented for building up their personal fortunes?

All of this is not to say that inefficiency should be allowed. The public right to require that every foot of water which is diverted from the Niagara River be utilized to the best possible advantage is paramount to any private interest. The Cline bill, with its requirements that at least 20 horsepower must be developed per cubic foot-second (about all that can be obtained without going down below the rapids) takes c

5. GENERAL CONTROL OF THE DIVERSION BELONGS TO THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT.

In the first instance, the total amount of water which may be diverted in this country is fixed by international treaty, and it naturally devolves upon the Federal Government to see that the terms of this treaty are carried out. The Niagara River is a navigable stream, and it is incumbent upon the Federal Government to see that any diversion of water for power purposes be only in such amount and in such manner that navigation will not be interfered with. The scenic beauty of Niagara Falls must be conceded to be a national asset and the Federal Government is within its rights and duties in preserving that feature.

The persons or corporations to whom the water rights should be granted might perhaps be more properly selected by the State, but as the grants must be made by the Federal Government, and if necessary, be revoked by it, it would introduce complications to have the grantees selected by a different authority. This matter is not of much consequence, as the power will be developed by some one in any case and the ownership of any property is likely to change from time to time.

6. CONTROL OF THE DISTRIBUTION AND PRICE SHOULD BELONG TO THE

6. CONTROL OF THE DISTRIBUTION AND PRICE SHOULD BELONG TO THE STATE.

Regardless of the agency by which the power is developed, and unless a great deal more is generated than can now be taken under treaty restrictions, the power will be used in New York State, because New York State is there to take it and no other State is. The Federal Government has no more real interest in this question than in the case of a water power located in the interior of the State, on a non-navigable stream.

The Federal Government has no suitable machinery established for regulation of such business. The Federal Government should not extend its activities into fields which can be as well covered by the individual States, or by smaller subdivisions.

The State is vitally interested in this subject. The prosperity of its people depends to a material extent upon the availability of power in adequate quantities and at proper prices. The general problem involves the generation of power at other water powers and by steam plants, and its distribution and supply in all the various communities of the State. A large part of this work will in any event be supervised by the State and could not possibly come under Federal regulation. The power from Niagara is only a portion of the whole, and the problems in connection therewith dovetail into others which make up the whole. In an particular community power may be received from several sources, one of which is Niagara. To obtain efficient and satisfactory regulation it is essential that it be in the hands of one authority and not divided. It is fully as important that the treatment be uniform and comprehensive as that it be honest and intelligent.

The State has already developed the machinery by which such regulation may be, and is, carried out, and the officers now exercising those duties have become trained and efficient in the problems of governmental control.

7. THE STATE CAN BE DEPENDED UPON TO REGULATE.

This proposition requires little argument. New York was one of the first States in the Union to take up comprehensively the regulation of public utilities. Its laws and the organization and work of its commissions have served as models for many of the other States.

S. THE PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION IS COMPETENT AND HONEST

missions have served as models for many of the other States.

s. THE PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION IS COMPETENT AND HONEST.

The easiest thing in the world is to direct criticism against public officers. It is simple justice to remember that the problems which faced the commission at its organization were vast and new. In practically every phase of its duties the way had to be sought out and blazed by the commission. The amount of work involved in organizing the commission and establishing its methods can hardly be appreclated.

The commission has not always done right; the men appointed to it have not always been the best men; no one will defend all of its acts or say that there is no room for improvement, but the people of New York State feel that it has done a good work and have confidence in it. No one is hardy enough to suggest that the commission should be abolished and there are few who desire changes of any importance. Senator Thompson has something to say in the way of general criticism (more particularly of the New York City Commission), but it is understood that the legislation to be proposed by his committee is mostly in the line of giving more power to the commission in order that it may be unhampered in its work.

The commission has done a great work in requiring proper accounting, supervising the issuance of securities, and enforcing adequate service. In the regulation of rates, two instances will be sufficient to indicate the nature of the work done. In Buffalo a thorough investigation was made of the situation concerning all rates for electricity, and the commission fixed uniform and equitable rates applying to all current sold. The rates fixed by the commission result in a reduction to the public in cost of electricity of over $500,000 per year. These rates were so adjusted as to allow, in addition to operating expenses, only a fair return upon the actual physical property devoted to the business of furnishing electricity. It is, of course, nonsense to compare the rates charged for the current whi blocks of high-voltage power at Niagara Falls or at the Buffalo city line.

As a result of the commission's investigation and the rates established by it in New York City, telephone users of that city have secured a benefit amounting to $5,000,000 annually. Cases of lesser magnitude, but of equal importance to the communities affected, might be cited indefinitely.

The commission is always open to receive complaints from any justified person and never fails to give such complaints careful consideration. Whether the rates for electricity charged by the power companies at Niagara Falls are too high is not a question which can be answered offhand. The commission has never received any complaints from the purchasers of such power, and it is a matter of common knowledge that purchasers are exceedingly eager for such power at the present prices and can not get enough to supply their needs. As a matter of fact, it might have been a difficult matter for the commission to regulate these rates in the past. The power companies were operating under sweeping authorizations from the State and Federal Governments, and there was a serious question as to whether such authorizations would not have been considered in law as vested rights which the commission would have been bound to recognize and assign values to in any rate case. The Cline bill disposes of any such claim and clears the way for effective action by the commission.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Crosser having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, who informed the House that the President had, on February 3. 1917, approved and signed bills of the following titles:

H. R. 193. An act to provide for the care and treatment of persons afflicted with leprosy and to prevent the spread of leprosy in the United States; and

H. R. 20209. An act to amend section 276 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

DIVERSION OF WATER OF THE NIAGARA FALLS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be recognized in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, debate upon that amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then I move to strike out the last two words. have not addressed the committee to-day.

Mr. FLOOD. I have not been able to express the few sentiments that I have in mind.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Neither have I.
Mr. AUSTIN. I thought I heard the gentleman from Virginia make some talk. Am I recognized? I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection has been made, the effect of which is that the gentleman will have to address himself to his amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not want to go into a farce of that kind. want to discuss the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Flood] each have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent, in this connection, that the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Virginia have five minutes each. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. FLOOD. I object. Mr. AUSTIN. You will not pass this bill until I have a chance to discuss it.

Mr. FLOOD. That is all right. If the gentleman desires to defeat the bill, let him defeat it. We are all trying here to do the best we can to pass it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 3, after the word "foot," insert "and which shall be used in the generation of hydroelectric power."

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, the concern at Niagara that is using the water at the most efficient head sells only mechanical power. That mechanical power it sells to various associated companies. I am not advised as to its relation with them, but those associates rent from it its generators and transmission lines and supply themselves with power in this fashion.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Flood] to the contrary notwithstanding, I have some very important objections to this bill, and some that I think are worthy of consideration. I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] to agree with me that this bill does not prevent the continuance of that situation. He seems to think it is all right. In that I do not agree with him. I think the power at Niagara Falls belongs to the people—his people, if he will. He says it is a New York proposition, and I agree with him that it is to a large extent.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. In a moment. The trouble about the situation there is that the people are not getting the power. That power is going for the sole benefit of a few industrial concerns in the city of Niagara Falls. I think this power is worth more for domestic use, for lighting homes and doing the everyday things of the consumers, the plain people of western New York, than it is for the manufacture of aluminum, carborundum, and one thing and another.

Mr. PARKER of New York, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No; I have not the time. If I could get five minutes more, I would yield to the gentleman. These concerns do not have to be at Niagara Falls. The prosperity of New York does not depend upon their being there. They can as well go somewhere far away in the woods. You can make just as good aluminum on the Columbia River as at Niagara Falls. You can make it anywhere in the whole land where there is water power. You do not have to make it right there, where there are teeming millions of people who are reaching out their hands pleading for power at reasonable rates.

The aluminum company and the carborundum company can not afford to go into competition with the people who want to use the power for domestic purpose

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No. I do not think we ought to have in view the needs of these industries at Niagara Falls.

They are there, and they can just as well be somewhere else. Let us save this power for the people. Let us see that it is generated into electric current and spread over that whole part of the country so that the mass of the people get some benefit of it. What benefit is it to the people now? A few millionaires conduct some works up there and hire a lot of laborers at as low wages as they can get them for, and they roll wheelbarrows in and out of their works, and there is really very small benefit to the people. If the people can only get this power, if it can be distributed for legitimate purposes among the small users of western New York, it would be a priceless boon. They would no longer be exploited as they are now by the Buffalo General Electric Co. I wish I had time to show you the figures I have. I have the contracts, I have a statement from the public service commission, but I have not the time to show it to this committee. It is not of enough importance in considering a little bill like this, so the majority, who control the time, seem to think.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the other paragraphs of section 2 and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. AUSTIN. I would ask the gentleman to yield me five minutes

Mr. FLOOD. In five minutes' time, that to be accorded to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin].

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Does that preclude the offering of amendments?

Mr. FLOOD. Oh, no; just debate. Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Now, I have an important amendment, which is very short, and it will not take over five minutes, and I ask to have a chance to offer it.

Mr. FLOOD. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask that all debate on this paragraph end in 10 minutes, 5 minutes to go to the gentleman paragraph end in 10 minutes, 5 minutes to go to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin] and 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves that at the expiration of 10 minutes all debate be concluded on this section and all amendments thereto.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. Does this include debate on amendments to this section-10 minutes to the entire section and all amendments thereto?

The CHAIRMAN. To the section and all amendments thereto.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. Howard) there were-ayes 65, noes 8.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Huddleston], in discussing this legislation prior to the holidays, when we had the temporary bill up, was asked by me the direct question as to how much the people of the city of Birmingham, Ala., the gentleman's home town, were paying for their electricity, and he said he could not tell and did not know.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. AUSTIN. I appeal to the RECORD.
Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman asked what the Alabama Power Co.'s rates were and I said I did not know.

Mr. AUSTIN. I asked what they were paying for electricity supplied from the Coosa River-

Mr. HUDDLESTON. They are not supplying Birmingham. Mr. AUSTIN (continuing). And the gentleman stated he d not know. To-day he has some figures about the cost of did not know. To-day he has some figures about the cost of power in New York and Canada. Let me read him some figures as to the cost of power in Birmingham, his own city.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman will find it high. Mr. AUSTIN. "Birmingham, Ala., January 30, 1917. M mum price for energy, 7½ cents per kilowatt per hour. Minimum price, three-fourths cent per kilowatt per hour. Steam will price, three-fourths cent per kilowatt per hour. Steam will cost the same. Horsepower is not the unit of measurement in this city. All electricity used here is generated on the Coosa River." I believe the gentleman said it was not generated on the Coosa River.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No; I did not. Now, if the gentleman will yield-

Mr. AUSTIN. No; the gentleman would not yield to me. I tried three different times when the gentleman had the floor and the gentleman discourteously took me off my feet. I had an engineer figure out the cost of power on these figures. It is $48.75 per horsepower; that is the minimum, and $487.50 is the maximum.

I commend to the gentleman his zeal in searching for and investigating the cost of power in the far-off State of New York and a foreign country, but I want to appeal to him to get down and begin business at home in the Birmingham district [applause] and in the city from which he hails, and let him begin his reform there and his work there in the interest of the people who elected him to Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. No; I will not. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Now, I think this House can depend upon the Representatives from New York [Mr. SMITH], a Democrat from the city of Buffalo, which is taking this power, and the gentleman from the Niagara district [Mr. Dempsey], where it is made and used, to look after, care for, and protect the interests of the people who elect them to Congress. [Applause.] They are amenable to and answerable to their constituents, and if the people are being robbed, as the gentleman alleges, the voters of those districts have elected two honorable gentlemen to stand up here and protect their interests and have not commissioned the gentleman from Alabama to be a guardian for them. [Applause.]
Mr. FLOOD. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this measure that we are considering and enacting into law will put these companies under the control of the New York Public Service Commission and that they will be subject to the regulations as to price and other matters of that commission and that now there is no law putting one of them there?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes. I think the people of the immediate neighborhood in New York, Brooklyn, Niagara, and in Buffalo are just as honest as they are in Birmingham or any other section of this country; and if they have public officials that are recreant to their duty or their interests here or in the Public Service Commission of New York State, they have a right to get rid of them at the ballot box. And I refuse to be persuaded or influenced in the belief expressed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Huddleston] that these gentlemen are doing something wrong in recommending this bill to our favor.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have five minutes in which to reply to the lecture of the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I object. Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it an amendment to the amendment? There is a pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama. Is the gentleman's amendment an amendment to that

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota SMITH] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SMITH of Minnesota: Amend, on page 5, line 1, by striking out all of line after the word "and" and all of line 2 and all of line 3 to the word "foot," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "That the greatest efficiency must be attained with the water used, and a failure on the part of a permittee to comply with this condition shall be deemed a violation of the provisions of this act."

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the complaint that comes from Niagara is that the companies that are now using this water are not developing it to its fullest efficiency. There is a head of 208 feet within a short distance of these power plants. By going some 6 or 8 miles a head of 318 feet can be obtained. Now, the Niagara Water Power Co. is using but 135 feet of this 318 feet, and the Hydroelectric Co. is using something more than 135 feet. If this power is going to be turned over to these companies, which is the natural and only result when you give the Secretary of War power to grant it to whomever he sees fit, you are not going to compel these companies to develop this power to its full extent. True, in your bill you provide that the Secretary of War shall specify in each permit granted hereunder the rate of flow per second of the diversion authorized and the efficiency which must be attained with the water used and which shall not be less than 20 horsepower per cubic foot.

Now, gentlemen, when that Niagara Falls power plant was installed, it was not developing from the same amount of water more than two-thirds the amount of power that it is developing now. Why? Because their turbines at that time were not of the modern type; were not of the kind that would develop the greatest amount of power from a given amount of

Mr. FLOOD. This bill remedies that and requires them to develop 20 horsepower per cubic foot.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. That is the point, and I am glad the gentleman has brought it out. You can not fix by law what is going to be the condition 10 years from now in the hydroelectric world, because no science in the world is developing so rapidly as that of the science of electricity.

Mr. FLOOD. We meet that in this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. If within the last 10 or 15 years they have been able to develop a third more power with the same amount of water, is it not reasonable to suppose that the same progress will be made in the next 10 years?

Mr. FLOOD. The Secretary of War is authorized by this bill to require them to develop more power.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. That is my objection. The Secretary of War is authorized to do most everything. Why do you not say that the parties receiving this permit shall develop the greatest amount of power that is capable of being developed, and if they do not do it they will violate the provisions of the

Mr. FLOOD. The Secretary of War will have to determine that.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. He will not. The trouble with the whole bill is that it is simply turning this whole proposition over to the Secretary of War to do just as he sees fit with it, without any limitation. He is to be the court, jury, and next friend of the Hydroelectric Trust.

Mr. FLOOD. We can not allow him to issue a permit with-

Mr. PARKER of New York. The engineer of the public-service commission says that the 20 horsepower that must be developed is about all that can be developed.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. That is to-day, but five years from to-day or three years from to-day it may be that turbines will be invented that will produce twice the amount of power from the same amount of water that the turbine of to-day produces. My amendment requires the permittee to furnish the greatest amount of power that a given amount of water will produce; the bill leaves it to the Secretary of War to say how much power the permittee must furnish from a given amount of water. I am not surprised to find this section in this bill, as it is in line with its fundamental principles, which are: First, to authorize the Secretary to grant to the existing companies at Niagara all the rights of the public in the water power at Second, to clothe the Secretary with such autocratic Niagara power that he can see to it that these companies are protected in their use of this water power from the demands of the public, both of which are very laudable purposes and is splendidly exe-cuted in the measure which we have before us for our consid-

I wish to compliment the Members of the House that are sup-porting this bill upon their loyalty to and patriotism in the in-terest and welfare of the public that they are afraid to trust, but they are perfectly willing to trust a corps of engineers in the War Department, who on account of training, temperament, and lack of knowledge of general business propositions, are out of sympathy with the public.

Now, gentlemen, let me state the effect of this bill. The Secretary of War is authorized to issue permits to whomsoever he sees fit, under such conditions as he sees fit, and after he has issued those permits he is to assist the permittee in conducting his business. He is to pass upon the rate that the public-service commission of New York puts into operation. The rates have to be subject to his approval.

What is the result? Instead of government of the water powers and public utilities of the Nation by the people's Congress you substitute government by the Secretary of War, which means his Corps of Engineers, as he has neither the time nor opportunity to exercise any supervision excepting of the most perfunctory sort.

It has been claimed for this Corps of Engineers that they are especially suited to take over the control of our water-power resources, because they are removed from local influences, but it must be remembered that they are also removed from the body of the people and surrounded by the engineers of the Hydroelectric Trust, who are naturally their associates and companions. This very environment unfits them for that broad and sympathetic public service which the control of our water powers especially demands. As proof of this statement I wish to call your attention to the attitude of these engineers whenever the public rights are in opposition to the interests of the Hydro-electric Trust. At Keokuk a dam is constructed across the Mis-sissippi River. The engineer in charge of this dam has authorized the company to close the sluice gates during the night-time, thus reducing the flow of the water in the river below the dam to such an extent that navigation is oftentimes entirely

Again, four years ago this Congress passed a law directing the Secretary of War to make a survey of the harbor and the river at Chicago and to report to Congress whether or not there was any encroachment by private individuals on either the river or harbor. The Board of Engineers, so we are informed, treated this direction by Congress as a joke, and the other day this Congress was compelled to pass another law, directing that this survey and report be made forthwith. In my own city the Chief of Engineers was requested to direct the boom company to remove its booms from the river, that were no longer needed, and his reply was that if the booms were removed it might endanger by the spring ice the general electric plant that was some distance down the river.

Countless instances of this kind can be cited in substantiation of what I have said in reference to the attitude of the Board of Engineers when public rights are in opposition to the interests of the Hydroelectric Trust. This attitude on the part of the Board of Engineers accounts for the anxiety of the Hydroelectric Trust to secure legislation that will turn over and place in the hands of these engineers the great water-power resources of the country. These facts are known to every Member of the House, because ample proof is furnished from day to day. All that they have to do is to examine the Congressional Record, and for their convenience I will call their attention to pages 2258, 2270, 2347, and 2348 of the Record of this session of the Sixty-fourth Congress. Is that Democracy?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Smith].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate is closed on this paragraph and amendments thereto at the close of 10 minutes. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That no transfer of any permit or rights granted hereunder, except by trust deed or mortgage issued for the bona fide purpose of financing the business of such permittee, shall be made by any permittee, without the approval of the Secretary of War, and any successor or assign of the rights of any such permittee, whether by voluntary transfer, judicial sale, foreclosure sale, or otherwise, shall be subject to all the conditions of the permit under which such rights are held by such permittee, and also subject to all the provisions and conditions of this act, to the same extent as though such successor or assign were the permittee hereunder; and no works constructed, maintained, and operated under the provisions of this act, for the generation, sale, or distribution, of electric current, power, and energy, shall be owned, leased, possessed, controlled, or operated in any manner so that they form part of or in any way effect any combination, trust, or monopoly, or form the subject of any contract or conspiracy to limit the output of electric current, power, and energy, or in restraint of trade.

Mr. HUDDLESTON, Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and amendments thereto be closed in five minutes, and that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Huddleston] shall have

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves that at the expiration of five minutes-

Mr. SABATH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. SABATH. To make a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SABATH. Is it proper for the motion to be made? Under the rules is not the right given to any Member to oppose any amendment for five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Virginia is not in order at this time if anybody directs a point of order to it.

Mr. SABATH. Then, I raise the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Huddleston: Page 5, line 24, after the words "Sec. 3," strike out all down to the word "hereunder," in line 10, page 6, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That without the written consent of the Secretary of War no permit granted, nor shall any approval under this act be assigned or transferred, and no grantee under this act shall create any lien upon any power project developed under an approval made under this act by mortgage or trust deed unless approved by the Secretary of War and for the bona fide purpose of financing the business of the grantee. Any successor or assign of such property or project, or of any rights accruing hereunder, whether by judicial sale, foreclosure sale, or otherwise shall be subject to all the conditions of the approval under which such rights are held, and also subject to all the provisions and conditions of this act to the same extent as though such successor or assign were the original grantee hereunder."

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important amendment, and I hope the committee chairman [Mr. Flood], as well as other gentlemen who really want to see a sure-enough bill written and a bill that ought to be written, will take note of what I am saying.

The Adamson bill does not give the right to create a lien upon the plant and works except by consent of the Secretary of War. This bill does give such a right. This bill as it now is gives the right to the permittee to create a lien upon its plant without the consent of the Secretary of War.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Does the gentleman know that if this bill passes and these companies are placed under the Public Service Commission of New York, it will be impossible for any concern to borrow a cent without the consent of the public-service commission?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is all I want to hear. ter.] I do not yield further. I insist that we ought not to grant in this case more favorable terms to these permittees than are given under the Adamson bill. Does the Adamson bill mean anything, and should we have that clause in it? If so, let us put it in here.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill is giving a special favor to those concerns, allowing them to pledge their plants without anybody's consent. I hope that will be changed. I hope the chairman will insist that it be changed.

Where does the gentleman's amendment Mr. FLOOD. come in?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. If you will give me five minutes more, I will explain. I can not yield otherwise. I can not yield unless I get more time.

Now, I thank the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin] for having me in mind and lecturing me. I appreciate the honor of his condescension. It shows I am rising in importance to be worthy of his attention in this fashion. [Laughter.] I feel grossly flattered. Far be it from me not to blush at the honor he confers upon me.

Mr. Chairman, I do not for a moment call in question the integrity or the ability of any gentleman from New York or any other Member on this floor. But if we are to leave the drafting of this bill to a couple of gentlemen who happen to live in the section of New York that is most vitally concerned, what are we here for? What are we debating this bill about? Just let them get off in a corner, and if they can agree-I do not believe they can-let the balance of us hand it over to them, and let them do as they please. Any such argument is absolutely absurd.

What we are here for is to legislate. I have taken an oath to do the best I can. I have given my word to do the best I can, undeterred by any kind of insinuation or intimidation or anything whatever of that kind.

The gentleman refers to hydroelectric power conditions in Alabama as being pretty bad. I do not hesitate to say that such is a fact. I wish they were better. God knows I wish they were better, and I intend at some time to make them better if I can. I told the gentleman that I do not know what rates the Alabama Power Co. charges. I do not know; nobody knows. I told the gentleman that they charge all that the traffic will bear. I tell him that now. They charge one price in one town and another price in another. So far as Birmingham is concerned, they do not deign to do their own skinning. In Birmingham they farm the privilege out to an intermediary, and the intermediary does what it likes. I am not going to defend conditions in Alabama, and because Alabama has been so woefully mistreated, because Alabama has been so unjustly oppressed, because I know what these power companies will do and the power that they have got and how many legislatures they can control and how the people are unable to cope with them, I am determined to use all the power that in me lies to rescue the people of the State of New York from any such exploitation. The gentleman can take that to his heart. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amend-

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I rose to oppose the amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. I want to reply to the very unjust and unfair speech of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Huddleston] on his State.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and amendments thereto be limited to 10 minutes, 5 minutes to go to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] and 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnerr].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I want a few minutes

Mr. FLOOD. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Five minutes.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I change my motion and move that in 15 minutes the debate on this section and all amend-ments thereto be closed, the additional 5 minutes to go to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves that in 15 minutes the debate on this section and all amendments thereto shall conclude. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the almost single-handed fight that is being made in behalf of the State of New York by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Huddleston] against the protest of the New York Members has attracted my attention; it has refreshed my memory to a certain extent, as I am sure it will have refreshed the memories of some of the older Members of the House, when they recall the celebrated contest on this floor over the Black Warrior River. The Black Warrior River runs through the State of Alabama. In a discussion here on August 9, 1911, there was no division of sentiment so far as the Members from Alabama were concerned with respect to a grant of power to the Birmingham Water, Light & Power Co., "hereinafter styled the company," and so called throughout the bill, which proposed to take over water power that had been created by virtue of the construction by the Government of the United States of several dams for navigation purposes on the Black Warrior River.

The Rivers and Harbors Committee had brought in the bill which proposed "to improve the navigation on the Black War-rior River in the State of Alabama," and which proposed also to grant water-power rights to the Birmingham Water, Light & Power Co. One of the most distinguished gentlemen then sitting in this House, and one of the ablest men who ever came from the State of Alabama, was the predecessor of the present gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Huddleston], the former chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Mr. Underwood. [Applause.] Mr. Underwood was very strongly in favor of this bill, which proposed to turn over to the Birmingham company the water-power privileges resulting from the generation by the Government of water power on the Black Warrior River. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. Sparkman], as chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, called up the bill and then offered a committee amendment, a portion of which I shall read for the information of these newer Members of the House, including the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Huddleston], the successor of Mr. Underwood, who is opposing this Niagara bill. Section 4 of the committee amendment read:

Section 4 of the committee amendment read:

Sec. 4. That the Secretary of War is authorized and empowered to enter into a contract with the Birmingham Water, Light & Power Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Alabama, its successors and assigns, for the purpose of carrying out the stipulations and performances herein mentioned. It shall be provided in said contract that the company, its successors and assigns, shall have the right to construct, maintain, own, and operate, at its own cost, in connection with Dams and Locks 16 and 17, for a period of 50 years from the time fixed in this act for completion of the works herein authorized, electrical power stations and other structures for the development of water power for industrial and other purposes, and for converting to its own use, benefit, and profit the power developed with the surplus water not needed for lockage, including the right to sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of said power: Provided, That the company shall furnish and deliver, free of charge to the Government, at Locks 16 and 17, all power necessary for the operation of said locks and for the lighting of the Government grounds and houses situated at said locks. The said contract shall further provide for the payment by the company to the Government of an annual rental for its use of the water power developed at Dams 16 and 17.

It then goes on and fixes a period of 20 years that this com-

It then goes on and fixes a period of 20 years that this company may operate, paying the Government $1 per horsepower, and then new conditions are to be made, and so forth.

The question immediately rose on the floor when Mr. UNDERwood was supporting this bill as to the right of Congress to turn over to a power company in the State of Alabama this water power created as stated at the cost of the Government of the United States. There was considerable debate upon the question, and a great difference of opinion, when the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Taylor], who was very earnestly in support of the measure, made this statement:

One more suggestion: The State of Alabama has given the waterpower rights to this water company at the head of this stream. The State of Alabama in her policy has already disposed of her rights. The policy of the State of Alabama and of her legislature and the construction of the law by her judges is that the General Government has no power over the water power of a State, and she has already given to this particular company the right to create a water power upon this

So the question presented to the House by the gentlemen from Alabama was that, although the Federal Government had spent its money building locks and dams to improve navigation in the State of Alabama, and the State of Alabama through its legislature had decided that it wanted to control whatever profits arose from the power generated by these Government dams, therefore the Federal Government had no right to interfere with the State of Alabama, but must keep hands off so far as the regulation of the electrical power business within State limits was concerned.

I have not the time to go on further with this discussion now, except to say that one of the most vigorous supporters of this measure at that time was the forceful and popular predecessor of my friend the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Huddleston], the then distinguished leader of the House and now the Senator from the State of Alabama [Mr. Underwood]. [Applause.] If it is wrong to grant any privileges to the State of New York in this Niagara matter it certainly was wrong in 1911 to propose The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Floop] if there is anything in the bill which would prohibit having a generating company and a transmitting company and a distributing company, all making profits between the water and the ultimate consumer?

Mr. FLOOD. I think so.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In that connection, before the gentleman answers the question, I call his attention to the language to which I directed attention a little while ago, on page 4, beginning at line 15-

And the permittee, after the completion of the works, shall operate the same continuously for the development and transmission of electric current, power, and energy for sale or for other commercial purposes.

In other words, they may generate it for sale or not, in their iscretion. A literal interpretation of that would be that they discretion. could use it exclusively for their own private manufacturing purposes. If the one company were large enough, it could use all the water, generate the power, and sell it or not sell it.

That language means, for example, that one company there, the Schoellkopf Co., could, at Niagara Falls, generate its own electric power and keep it exclusively for its own use.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Has the gentleman overlooked the language on page 3, beginning in line 12?—

Every permit shall require the permittee, at all times during its opera-tion under such permit, actually to engage in the business of furnish-ing light, heat, power, and electric current.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But it might furnish it to itself. Under this act it can generate it "for sale or other commercial purposes." It could generate the power and then itself use it I. Is not that a fair interpreation of that language?
Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the company should use the power itself, do you think that would be actually engaging in the business of furnishing light, heat, power, and electric current?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In construing a statute all of its provisions should be considered together. This language is shall operate the same continuously for the development and transmission of electric current, power, and energy for sale or for other commercial purposes.

What does that word "or" mean? The clause cited by the gentleman does not qualify, amend, or repeal or in any way change that. The language I have quoted is an express authority to generate and distribute electric current for sale or not for sale, in the discretion of the permittee. They can take it all for their own private use. Are we to turn Niagara Falls over to corporations to use for their own exclusive private commercial purposes? What does the language "for sale or other commercial purposes" mean? Clearly its only meaning is that the electricity is to be for sale or not for sale, in the discretion of the generating company. If that is not its meaning, let any person put any other rational interpretation upon it.

This is in many respects a well-drawn bill; but it does not require many defects of a vital character to make an otherwise good bill a fatally bad one.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have here some of the testimony taken before our committee. State Senator Thompson, a member of the New York Legislature, said:

In New York Legislature, said:

In New York State in the city of Niagara Falls and in Buffalo and in towns about the vicinity of Niagara Falls power is being sold so that when it is finally distributed to consumers they pay from 7 to 10 cents per kilowatt hour for current in a house.

From what I can see and learn people over there (Canada) in the various municipalities get their power for approximately 3 cents where the people on the United States side have to pay from 7 to 10 cents. That has been going on there for four or five years, and we can hardly ignore that condition any longer, and we ought to proceed on the idea of seeing what we can do for the ultimate consumer in this matter.

Again he testified:

The trouble is not with the generating company at all. They sell the power for $15 a horsepower. * * The difficulty is with the final distributing company and the intermediate distributing company.

There is a big difference between the price generating companies get and which the distributing companies get.

In other words, there is a big difference between what the generating company sells it for and what the ultimate con-sumer pays. The bill as drawn leaves it within the discretion of permittees to sell, transmit, and distribute the power, or in their discretion not to sell it, but to use it for commercial purposes, or, in other words, for their own exclusively private use.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I would not live in a State where the legislature could be corrupted, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Huddleston] insinuated could be done in the State where he lives, I have spoken about corrupting legislatures, and I want gentlemen here to remember what the gentleman from Alabama said, and I want it to stay in the RECORD just as the gentleman said it.

Mr. Chairman, I had something to do with passing the first bill from which originated the Alabama Power Co., giving a private individual, Mr. Lay, of Gadsden, the right to build a dam across the Coosa River. My main purpose was to try to improve the navigation of that stream; and later on we passed through this House-and the distinguished ex-Speaker of the House [Mr. Cannon] made one of his splendid speeches in defense of it—a bill allowing the Alabama Power Co. the right to construct Dam No. 18, which would have opened up 30 more miles of the Coosa River to navigation if it had become a law.

President Taft vetoed the bill. A company that intended to develop the power there had even then contracted for the location of a nitrate plant in the city of Montgomery by which they could have extracted from the air 30,000 tons of nitrogen a year for sale to the farmers. As a result of that veto of Mr. Taft the company went into Canada and are now manufacturing thousands of tons of air nitrogen that the farmers of Alabama would have had the benefit of if our bill had passed.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] read from the remarks of Mr. Underwood, the distinguished gentleman from the district now represented by the gentleman [Mr. Huddleston]. Mr. Underwood spoke for a similar proposition and took the same position in regard to State control that every Member of the Alabama delegation now takes except the gentleman from Alabama who sets himself up as the censor and the criterion by which all others should go. [Applause.]

We believe that the State of Alabama has the right to regulate the powers and their sale to the people. We have a publicutility commission elected by our people, and certainly we believe that they are competent to regulate these rates. believe that the riparian owner has some rights in the stream also. Mr. Chairman, as a result of our law the Alabama Power Co. has established a station in my home town where, by their electric system, the price of power and lights was reduced 25 per cent. [Applause.] All along the Coosa River there are a number of little towns that use it. One town, the town of Leeds, in the district of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Huddleston], has an electric lighting system from this company that they would not be able to finance by themselves. I know that it is said that the coal interests, especially the interests around the gentleman from Birmingham, are opposed to it. I am not charging that the gentleman is influenced by that fact, but we know that the power company has never had a friend among the coal barons, because it comes in direct competition with them.

Mr. Chairman, only a few weeks ago one of the largest coalmine owners in Alabama wanted to buy current from this electric power company to run his own coal mines because, he said, he could do it more cheaply than he could by using his own coal. Yet on account of the fact that we did not get the other bill through, this company with its limited power could not supply the current to these coal mines. Only a short time ago one of the railroad companies in Alabama notified one of the coalmine owners that they were going to requisition the cars of coal of the coal companies that were loaded for the purpose of supply-ing consumers, but because the railroads were public-utility corporations they had that right and did take the cars of coal from the mining company.

Mr. Chairman, no railroad can stop the transmission of the current which this company is sending out to give light and heat and life to the poor people of that country. The gentleman from Alabama talked the other day about the horny-handed sons of toil, and that they did not want this bill. Mr. Chairman, I have had three fights since I secured the passage of that dam bill, and that very charge was made against me every time, and every time my people, the people in the country, not in any city or in the environs of Birmingham, but people in the rural districts, have rallied to my support and defeated those who would cast an aspersion upon me. The gentleman does not represent Alabama, and does not represent its splendid people when he talks about controlling legislatures in the State that gave me birth. [Applause.]

Taking advantage of my leave to print, I desire to say something about the history of dam legislation on the Coosa River. This river flows through three counties in the district which I have the honor to represent. It is formed by the junction of the Etowah and Oostanaula Rivers at Rome, Ga. The Oostanaula is navigable at some seasons of the year for more than 100 miles above Rome. The Coosa is now navigable at all periods of the year for a distance of about 200 miles. But for about 100 miles of obstructions it would be navigable all the year to Montgomery, Ala., a distance from Rome of nearly 500 miles. Just above Montgomery it make a junction with the Tallapoosa River, forming the Alabama River. From there to Mobile Bay is about 250 miles. On account of sand bars the river from Montgomery to Mobile has only a 4-foot navigation.

When I first came to Congress I set about to try to secure navigation from Rome to Mobile Bay. With this accomplished, we will have the longest navigable river in the South that flows into the sea except the Mississippi. The original project contemplated 4-foot locks and dams, and required 32 such locks and dams to overcome the obstructions in the river. I had Chairman Burton and several other members of the House Rivers and Harbors Committee to visit the river, and they were astonished at its magnitude and at the splendid country through which it flowed. However, the large estimated cost of constructing and maintaining so many locks and dams was a serious obstacle in the way of the Government undertaking the completion of the project, and the members of the committee were unanimous in the opinion that the cost should be partly borne by private enterprises constructing large dams for developing hydroelectric power.

Besides, the committee thought that 4-foot locks and dams would be totally inadequate. So the friends of the river in Congress secured a resurvey by the Government to ascertain whether the number of locks and dams could be reduced, and at the same time a deeper navigation be secured. This survey was made by Capt. Ferguson, one of the ablest Army engineers in the whole corps. After months of careful work he reported that by building 6-foot locks and dams we could secure deeper navigation and at the same time reduce the number of locks and dams to 20 instead of 32.

To overcome the obstructions of the shifting sand bars in the Alabama River he at the same time made a survey of the Etowah River above Rome and reported that by constructing two large dams on that river water could be impounded in the Etowah during the rainy season of the year and released during the dry season, and thus secure a 7-foot navigation on both the Coosa and the Alabama Rivers during the entire year. This report was laid before the Board of Army Engineers at Washington and was regarded as feasible, but the estimated cost of constructing the reservoirs and the locks and dams was to be so great that the board disapproved the new project. In the meantime Members of Congress from Georgia and Alabama secured the passage of a bill to allow W. P. Lay or his assigns to construct a dam at Lock 12, on the Coosa River, for developing water power.

The main purpose that those of us who urged the passage

The main purpose that those of us who urged the passage of this bill had was to aid in promoting navigation. The Government was doing almost nothing to make this great river navigable.

Capt. Lay, being unable to spend the large amount of money necessary to build the dam, sold to capitalists who constructed Dam 12 for the development of hydroelectric power.

By the construction of this dam several obstructions were submerged and more than 25 miles of the river was made

Later on the Bankhead-Heflin bill was passed through Congress permitting the Alabama Power Co. to construct another large dam at Lock 19 for the purpose of developing the same kind of power. This bill was vetoed by President Taft. If it had become a law, 30 miles more of obstructions would have been overcome without a cent of expense to the Government.

Thus the obstructions in more than one-half the river would have been overcome, and, as was intimated by some members of the Board of Engineers, the Federal Government might well have afforded to construct the reservoirs and the remaining locks and dams, and the long river would have had perennial navigation. The power company in anticipation of the passage of the bill had already secured a site at Montgomery on which to construct a large plant to extract nitrogen from the air and convert it into fertilizer for the farmers. It would have manufactured more than 30,000 tons of air nitrogen annually right at the doors of the farmers of the South.

When the bill was vetoed the company went to Canada and erected the very cyanamid manufactory that they intended to build in Alabama. Almost our entire supply of nitrogen comes from Chile, and that Government charges a large export tax on it, and our farmers in the South have that tax to pay, in addition to high rates for transportation. Thus we see this instance of what Pinchotism has done for the South and for the defeat of navigation on one of the greatest rivers in the and.

The Alabama Power Co. is right now asking the State public utilities commission to permit it to reduce its rates on electric-lighting current from 12 cents per kilowatt hour to 10 cents, a reduction of nearly 20 per cent, in all the towns it serves. I hold no brief for this company, do not own a dollar of stock in it, and have no interest in it except as it may help to develop the navigation of the Coosa-Alabama River and otherwise benefit the people of my State. Yet I feel it ought to be set before this body fairly and justly. The legislature of our State thought it enough of a benefactor to exempt it from taxation for five years.

The great steel plant at Gadsden is using much of its power to drive its immense machinery; a large cement plant at Ragland is also using it. Lincoln and 23 other towns and cities in Alabama are being served with hydroelectric power from Lock 12 at reduced rates, while Jasper, Wetumpka, and other towns are paying all the way from 12 to 20 cents per kilowatt hour for power and lights generated by coal. Many small towns that are using this power could never have been able to finance plants of their own.

If President Taft had not vetoed the proposition for the dam at Lock 18 many gins, mills, and other small industries would now be using power from that plant.

The development of hydroelectric power at Lock 12 on the Coosa River has established the operation of the electric steel industry in the State of Alabama at Anniston. With hydroelectric power, and only because of hydroelectric power available from the Lock 12 development on the Coosa River, could the electric furnace industry ever have been established in Alabama as it has been established. The Anniston Ordnance & Steel Co. secured an English order for shell steel, and the order has been partly filled and is still being filled, and the operations have proved a success, and so important, indeed, have the results been that from an unimportant beginning three electric steel furnaces are in operation and two additional and very efficiently constructed ones are being added and will be in operation within a very short time.

In the last two weeks this Anniston electric steel business has been refinanced and additionally financed to the extent of $3,000,000, and the electric steel business in Anniston is to be placed upon a permanent basis and to form one of the most important steel industries in Alabama or in the whole South and is the only electric steel operation in all the Southern States. In fact, there is not in Alabama to-day any hydroelectric power of any reliable kind, either as to volume or price, that will serve in a large way the electric furnace industry in any of its lines of useful and highly important productions. Two years ago a Canadian engineer representing New England capital desired 5,000 horsepower, later to be increased to 10,000 horsepower, for the manufacture of abrasives through the electric furnace, using bauxite from Alabama, but they could name no rate that would compare with the rate at Niagara Falls, and the Alabama Power Co. could not furnish 5,000 horsepower for this purpose, let alone 10,000 horsepower. The result was that this abrasive industry, manufacturing material somewhat like emery wheels, was established in Canada, and to-day the bauxite is going from Georgia to Canada at a freight rate of more than $5 per ton.

When the so-called conservationists are willing to forego their unconstitutional views with reference to taxing the people of the States for the use of the water in the States, then and not till then will the water powers daily wasting in our rivers make wonderful contributions to the reduction of the high cost of living through the operations of electric furnaces in producing cheaper fertilizers that will result in cheaper food crops and cheaper steels made out of low-grade ores and scrap iron.

Such developments as those mentioned would have been almost impossible but for the use of the hydroelectric power from this plant.

May I bring to your attention a very concrete example of how it is that the Alabama Power Co., with its great central stations, hydroelectric at Lock 12, and steam station at Gadsden on the Coosa, and its new steam station now completing on the Warrior River, can furnish and is furnishing electric lighting current to the people of Alabama towns at rates that positively can not be afforded by those lighting companies or those municipalities operating their own electric lighting stations with steam coal. At Sheffield the Sheffield Co. has a steam electric station conceded by engineers everywhere who know of the fitness and efficiency of this station to be second to none perhaps in the South. The electric lighting rate now charged by the Sheffield Co. to the towns of Tuscumbia, Sheffield, and Florence is 12 cents per kilowatt hour, and even with this efficient station it is impossible to reduce the lighting rates in these three towns to 10 cents, as the Alabama Power Co. is doing. And, by way of comparison, the Alabama Power Co. has reduced its rates in Decatur and in Huntsville to 10 cents. Its large operations enable that company to absorb the less profitable and, in fact, losing operations at Huntsville and Decatur, but the Sheffield Co. has no way to absorb anything, that company being too small.

Should the rates of this company ever become excessive, how much easier it will be for small towns and small industries to get relief by going before our State utilities commission at Montgomery than to have to come to officials of the War Department at Washington.

But, gentlemen, a more important question than any of these is the fact that these so-called conservationists, who are really obstructionists, are abandoning some of the fundamental principles of State rights and local self-government.

It has been the law from time immemorial that riparian owners of the banks along navigable streams have the absolute right to the use of the water of the stream, subject to the rights of the Government for navigation purposes

As an example as to how the Supreme Court of the United States and the State supreme courts have held on this subject from the foundation of the Government up to the present time, we quote:

WATER COMPANY V. WATER BOARD.

(168 U. S., p. 366.)

The high court says: "The jurisdiction of the State over this question of riparian ownership has been always, and from the foundation of the Government, recognized and admitted by this court.

KANSAS V. COLORADO. (206 U. S., p. 46.)

In this case it was held, in substance, that where the Federal Government is not interested as the owner of riparian lands the only interest it has in the water of a stream is as to its use for purposes of navigation, and it can lay no claim to the use of the water for any other purpose, not even for irrigation.

UNION DEPOT CO. V. BRUNSWICK.

Whether the fee to the bed or only an easement therein are in the riparian owner may be a question of speculative interest, but it is not one of any particular importance. If the fee be in the riparian owner, yet, of course, it must be a qualified fee; that is, subject to the paramount right of navigation. But if it be in the State the riparian owner still has, subject to the same public right, the exclusive right of possession and the entire beneficial interest.

UNITED STATES V. CHANDLER-DUNBAR WATER POWER CO. (229 U. S., p. 51.)

This is the latest decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on this subject. It was rendered May 26, 1913, and among other things that court said:

"That riparian owners upon public navigable rivers have, in addition to the rights common to the public, certain rights to the use and enjoyment of the stream which are incident to such ownership of the bank must be conceded. These additional rights are not dependent upon title to the soil over which the river flows, but are incident to the ownership of the bank."

Ye old-time Democrats, what has become of your old-time democracy?

Ye advocates of State rights, are you going to abandon it to a lot of bureaucrats in Washington?

The Federal power has already trenched too far upon the reserved rights of the States, and Democrats in Congress are to a great extent responsible for these new departures.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.
Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, at this point, as was indicated two weeks ago, and was stated this morning, I now offer the recapture clause in the Adamson bill, which has passed this House three times

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, after line 17, amend by inserting the following:
"That the rights granted herein shall continue for a period of 50 ars from and after the completion of the diversion structures and works in accordance with the plans and specifications approved therefore until and void upon breach of any of the terms or conditions of approval as provided herefore. And provided further, That whenever the Secretary of Wars shall determine that the diversion of water herein authorized as provided herein: And provided further, That whenever the Secretary of the river interferes with the navigable capacity of said river, or its proper volume as a boundary stream, or its efficiency as a means of the river interferes with the navigable capacity of said river, or its proper volume as a boundary stream, or its efficiency as a means of the river that the never the Secretary of War shall determine that the diversion of water herein authorized in connection with the amount of water than the contract of the con

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, is this in the same language as the Adamson bill, so far as the recapture clause is concerned?

Mr. CLINE. The recapture clause was taken word for word from the Adamson bill.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. But there is a great deal more than that clause in that amendment.

Mr. CLINE. The other provision in connection with that has been included so that the Government has the option of winding up the business of the concern or taking it over, as the Adamson bill provides.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Is it the intention of the committee to ask a vote upon this bill to-night?

Mr. CLINE. We expect to. If we ever have a vote upon it, we will have to have it to-night.
Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLINE.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Some one has just handed me a copy of a bill marked "Confidential committee print." Is that the bill from which the Clerk read this clause?

Mr. CLINE. That is the bill, but it is not the entire bill that ts offered

Mr. HUDDLESTON. What part is it that is offered as an amendment?

Mr. CLINE. It is all in italics, beginning on page 6, at section 4.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Then the gentleman's amendment consists of sections 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 of this confidential print?

Mr. CLINE. It comprises the recapture clause.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Is that the gentleman's amendment? Mr. CLINE. Yes; I asked to have those all read, because they have been passed upon so many times by the House. I thought there would be no objection to them. The gentleman thought there would be no objection to them. will remember that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sher-LEY] and several others two weeks ago made some objections to the bill because it did not have a recapture clause.

Mr. SABATH. Is this an amendment offered in lieu of section 4 of the bill under consideration?

Mr. CLINE. It is not in lieu of anything.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama reserves the point of order.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I am anxious to understand it.

Mr. CLINE. This is not offered in lieu of anything, but it is offered as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Is it added to some section?

Mr. CLINE. Added to section 4.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It is added to section 4?

Mr. CLINE. Yes

Mr. HUDDLESTON. At the end of section 4; is that where it comes in?

Mr. CLINE. It comes in immediately after section 4. It begins on page 6 at the end of line 17.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. May I ask the gentleman what is the necessity of completely changing section 5?

Mr. CLINE. No; it does not completely change section 5. Mr. HUDDLESTON. May not I ask the gentleman if it would not be better to offer it to one section at a time? It is so long many of us, I among others, perhaps do not comprehend it fully.

Mr. CLINE. It is offered as an amendment in conjunction with the provisions set out in sections 4 and 5 for the purpose of giving the Government the option of either closing up the business or of taking the business over and reissuing permits to another if it does not desire to do the business itself. I say the recapture clause was offered in connection with sections 4 and 5 providing that the Government should have the option of either taking over the property or leasing it or issuing a permit to another permittee and providing also a means under which it might be transferred from the original permittee to an assignee. It is the same as provided in the Adamson recapture clause. And I will say to the gentleman if the time should ever come that we can get a vote upon the bill it will go to conference, and if there is any difficulty about it in this particular it will be taken care of. It was not the purpose to cover up anything, but was offered in connection with the provisions of the bill following sections 4 and 5.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman realize it is very difficult for us to pass judgment upon this recapture clause, because it has never heretofore been submitted to the House? The gentleman offers for consideration a very important proposition, an amendment that is merely a committee amendment to a bill that is pending in another committee, namely, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. To show the difficulty that confronts the committee, I want to point out one defect that is obvious to gentlemen of the committee upon the mere presentation of it. At the beginning of this session to-day the inquiry was made whether the chairman of the committee or some one could not acquaint the committee with this recapture clause. Here at half past 4 o'clock in the afternoon we are advised of what the recapture clause is.

Mr. CLINE. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin, and to every other member of the committee, that the recapture clause in the Adamson bill has been adopted three times in this House, and it is now in conference between the House and Senate.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to say to the gentleman I have studied the recapture clause as carried in the Ferris bill, and I was under the impression that that recapture clause would be offered as an amendment rather than the recapture clause embodied in this bill. Further, I wish to direct the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there are some corrections which must be made if it is going to be applicable at all. I have just glanced over the first paragraph of the proposed amendment, and I see there are some changes which must be made in order to identify it properly with the bill under consideration. For instance, in line 21, page 6, the committee proposes an amendment which says, "In accordance with the plans and specifications approved therefor under section 2 of this act." The plans and specifications were included in section 2 of the act under consideration, but that has been changed to section 3 by an amendment which was adopted here to-day.

Mr. CLINE. That is a mere typographical error. Mr. STAFFORD. I know; but it is an error nevertheless and just shows that care should be exercised in offering these amendments.

Mr. CLINE. I will say that care was exercised, and in section 2 as provided there are four separate propositions, and they have been numbered as sections 3 and 4 since we have discussed this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I undertsand how that happened, but still, nevertheless, you will find that we have got to go over it very carefully

Mr. FLOOD. The statement I want to make is this: There are three of these bills which contain the recapture clause, and if this one passes and goes to the Senate there will be three in conference between the House and Senate. My idea is to use the recapture clause in the Adamson bill bodily for this bill, and when the three bills are in conference in the Senate the conferees on the different bills will get together and agree to the same recapture provision for all three bills.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. Do I understand the proposed amendment is a substitute for sections 4 and 5?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. Then it is not a substitute for section 5 as far as the text goes?

Mr. FLOOD. No. Mr. ROGERS. Se

Section 5 as it now stands will remain in the bill, but with a different section number?

Mr. SABATH. I do not so understand. Mr. FLOOD. This is a substitute for sections 4 and 5.

Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield for a question and answer.

Mr. ROGERS. So section 5 become unnecessary?
Mr. FLOOD. Yes.
Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is rather sanguine of this recapture clause getting into conference. If my recollection serves me right, the Ferris bill is not in conference and it is not expected it ever will be. The Adamson bill has been in conference for five months, and it is strangulated there, and so I do not know whether this bill will get as far as the Adamson-Shields water-power bill.

Mr. FLOOD. If it does not get into conference, it will not become a law.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are only three weeks remaining, and there is not much prospect.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield. Mr. HUDDLESTON. This proposed amendment fixes the determinate period for 50 years flat, whereas the bill we have been considering provides the permit shall not last longer than 50 years; shall not have a longer life than 50 years.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is correct. I think this amendment should be withdrawn from further consideration by the committee.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I would like to ask the committee chairman if he will yield. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that it is not germane, and that it embraces two sections and is not germane to the section. It seems to me there are a number of sections that are here offered as an amendment to a single section which are not germane to the bill. I do not think any of them are germane. It certainly contains many provisions which are entirely new, and although there may be provisions in the amendment which are germane there is so much that is not germane carried in the amendment it seems to me the whole amendment should fail. Section 4 of the bill, to which I understand this amendment is offered, says: "Any violation of the provision of this act or any regulation or order of the Secretary of War," and so forth. That is the amendment that was offered. It is totally different from the bill that we The bill under consideration prescribes certain conditions in all of which the permit will be revoked, and that is all it relates to. It relates merely to the ground on which the Secretary will revoke the permit. Now, the bill we have here does not confine itself to that subject by any means—I mean the amendment. It does not confine itself to that subject at all. It proceeds to deal with a number of other points. It changes the period of the permit, in the first place; it changes from a permit for not exceeding 50 years to a permit for 50 years.

Mr. FLOOD. May I interrupt the gentleman? Mr. HUDDLESTON. Certainly.

Mr. FLOOD. You have a copy, or a confidential print, that somebody has gotten?

Mr. HUDDLESTON.

Mr. FLOOD. How would it meet your views to offer as the recapture clause of this bill sections 5, 6, and 7, as you see them in the confidential print?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I have not read it, and it is practically impossible that we should gather the purport of it by having it read over to us, with no chance to study or compare it.

Mr. FLOOD. You have studied the recapture rules of the Adamson bill and you have offered a recapture clause from the Adamson bill; sections 5, 6, and 7 are taken bodily from the Adamson bill.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I do not recognize it, I will say to the gentleman. It seems to have in it a good deal the Adamson The recapture clause of the Adamson bill is bill has not got. not in here in this form, so far as I can grasp this. I think for the reason I have stated, Mr. Chairman, the amendment is not germane

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Indiana or the gentleman from Virginia. The Chair will say that this, of course, is a very complicated amendment, and the rule as to germaneness is sometimes a very difficult one of application. Therefore, the Chair is not prepared to rule on an amendment like this without being advised of the amendment and its application to the pending bill.

Mr. FLOOD. I did not catch the statement of the Chair. The CHAIRMAN. Of course, when the Chair comes to a ruling on the question of germaneness it will be difficult for the Chair to make an intelligent ruling on as extensive amendment as this is without being apprised of the nature and relevancy of it to what is contained in the bill itself.

Mr. FLOOD. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE] is the recapture clause, in three sections or more, taken from the Adamson bill, that passed the House. This is a bill to grant the right to use water for power purposes at Niagara Falls, and providing that the charges for the use of this water should be regulated by the Public Service Com-mission of the State of New York, and providing further that under certain conditions there shall be a forfeiture of all rights under this act, a charge for the use of water and for other purposes relating to the use of water for power purposes.

The amendment makes it clearer how the Government can take possession of the property than any other provision in the bill. It is a proper part of the bill and therefore it is germane, although there are some portions of it that I did not understand would be offered as a part of this amendment.

My suggestion to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE] is that he take sections 5, 6, and 7 of the Adamson bill and offer them as the recapture clause of this bill, and leave sections 4 and 5 of the present bill as they stand.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this amendment has been really offered prematurely, because section 4 has not yet been read. Of course no point of order having been made as to that and the discussion proceeding informally, the Chair has not notice of that.

Mr. FLOOD. Then I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the Clerk read to that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Do I understand the Chairman to rule on the matter?

The CHAIRMAN. Not at this time. The Chair directs the formal reading of the bill to that point at which the amendment can properly be added.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. My reservation of the point of order

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand the Chair says the amendment as to the recapture clause is not now before the House for consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not now really in the possession of the House, although it was inadvertently offered. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

the House, although it was inadvertently offered. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 4. That any violation of the provisions of this act, or of any regulation or order of the Secretary of War or the Chief of Engineers, made pursuant hereto, or of the requirements of any permit issued under this act, shall constitute a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,000 nor less than $500, or by imprisonment not exceeding noe year nor less than 30 days, or both, in the discretion of the court; and each and every day on which such violation occurs or is committed, shall be deemed a separate offense: Provided, That where such violation is shared against the company or corporate body the offense shall be of such company or corporate body ordering, directing, or permitting the same: Provided further, That if any permittee shall at any time fall or refuse, after receiving reasonable notice thereof, to comply with any of the provisions of this act or with any of the conditions of the permit, or any lawful order or regulation made by the Secretary of War may, in addition to said penalties, revoke said remains: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may, in addition to said penalties, revoke said receiving reasons and the said penalties, revoke said revoking the permits as provided in the preceding proviso, in a case where the public interest would, in his judgment, be better protected by such judicial procedure, give information of such violation to the Attorney General, who shall institute proper proceedings in the district court of the United States in the district in which any structures or any appurtenant or accessory works constructed or acquired under the authority denoral, and of the united States in the district in which any structures or any appurtenant or accessory works constructed or acquired under the authority of the United States in the district court shall have the power to make and enforce and with the requirements of this act and the lawful regulations and orders,

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment that I offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment he offered. Is there

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, is that the amendment that was read before this section was read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, is that the end of the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the end of the section.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I have an amendment to offer. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Huddleston: On page 10, line 5, after the word "War" add the following: "The Secretary of War may at any time before the expiration of any permit granted hereunder at his discretion cancel same and take over, or authorize any governmental bureau or agency or private permittee to take over, the diversion structures of any permittee and the plant, works, lands, lines, and property used in connection therewith, payment for same to made at such price as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the permittee whose property is taken, or, if they can not agree, such price to be fixed by proceedings instituted for that purpose in the United States district court for the district in which said property or some part thereof is situated, but in no case shall the price exceed the actual cost of the property taken nor the value of the property at the time of the taking, and such price shall not include or be affected by the value of the franchise or good will or profits to be earned on any other intangible element: Provided, That in case of war or other emergency, to be judged of by the Secretary of War, the United States shall have the right hereby reserved to requisition and take possession of any or all of said property and operate the same for its own use and benefit as long as the necessity or emergency continues, and compensation for such use and occupation shall be determined and paid as heretofore provided in this section."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SABATH. This is a very important amendment, and we ought to have a quorum. It seems to me there is no quorum resent. I make the point that there is no quorum present. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Over 100 gentlemen are present, a quorum. Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I have offered is a recapture clause. It is the same in substance as the recapture clause in the Adamson bill, with this important exception: The Adamson bill provides for the recapture after the expiration of the grant or permit; the amendment I have offered provides for recapture at any time. In other words, under this amendment, if adopted, the Secretary of War may, at his discretion, cancel the permit and take over the works of the permittees. If that is done, then the permittees must be paid a fair price for the property taken over and all that is contingent to it—their works, plant, and so forth; the price to be ascertained by agreement, if possible, and if not by agreement, then by condemnation proceedings.

It is further provided by the amendment that the price paid shall not exceed the actual cost of the property taken nor its actual value. So that it safeguards, as fully as my ingenuity will permit me to attempt, the rights of the Government and the rights of the permittees.

The purpose of this amendment is to make this permit revocable—revocable at the will of the Government.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will.

Mr. KENT. I would like to ask the gentleman whether in his amendment there is any specification as to what the Gov-his amendment there is any specification as to what the Government would have to purchase in taking it over?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. There is. I am sorry I have not a copy of it, so that I could read it to the gentleman. But it includes the diversion structures, the plants, works, transmission lines, lands, and other property incident to the generation of electricity and the transmission of it.

I do not want to take away from the generating companies anything that belongs to them. I think if the Government elects are general their permits at any time, we ought to pay them the to cancel their permits at any time, we ought to pay them the value of their property, but there is no reason for giving them anything more. There is not any reason at all for paying them any more, and therefore I have limited the price to be paid them to the actual value of their property, not exceeding its cost.

Mr. FLOOD. That is what the Adamson Act does.
Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is exactly the same as the Adamson provision, so far as the substance of it is concerned, with the exception that the Adamson provision only allows recapture after the expiration of the grant.

Now, there is reason why we should have the power of recap-ture at Niagara Falls, and not under the Adamson bill. The Adamson bill is of general application, applying to the country as a whole, and perhaps it might hamper development to give the power to revoke at any time, because capital could not be induced to invest. But at Niagara the capital is already invested, and it knows what returns it is going to get, and therefore there will be no added risk or hazard. It is an absolute certainty, and so my proposition protects, as fully as can be done, the rights of all parties.

Mr. OGLESBY. Does the gentleman think there should be the right of recapture irrespective of whether there is a breach by the lessees?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I do. I do not think we ought to grant Niagara away without the power to take it back if we find it for the public welfare that that should be done. We can not tell when an emergency might arise that would cause the Government to find it very necessary to take over these works; and if we take them over and pay the company the cost and value, surely they can not complain. They are there, they have already made their investments, there is no hazard to be taken. It is a perfectly simple matter. I most strenuously object to the Federal Government yielding up this great water power for 50 years without the ability to take it back again.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Suppose the Niagara Power Co. should rebuild their plant at a cost of $20,000,000, and one year afterwards, after they had put in all this money, the Government should come in and say, "We are going to take this property over at cost." The money of the investors has been spent. They have had no interest on it, and it would be a practical confiscation of

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The Government would pay for the property.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Actual cost, but no profit.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Why should the companies have a profit if they get their money back? They have had the advantage of this water power. They know what they are doing—

Mr. SMITH of New York. They do not know.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. They have had the property for a year in the case the gentleman supposes. Why should we give them a profit on the investment that they made, other than that which they have earned? Would the gentleman say we ought to allow they have earned? Would the gentleman say we ought to allow them 10 or 25 per cent above the money they have actually spent? How can he justify such a proposition as that?

Mr. SMITH of New York. They should certainly have more than it cost them. They should have interest on their money for that time

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That is part of the cost. That is a part of the investment

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. HUDDLESTON) there were—ayes 10, noes 61.
Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 6. The Secretary of War, in granting any permit for the diversion of water under this act, shall include therein a provision requiring the payment to the United States of a reasonable annual charge, assessed on the basis of the quantity of water diverted. At the end of 20 years and every 10 years thereafter the Secretary of War shall readjust the annual charge as may then be just and reasonable.

Sec. 7. That no permittee under this act, nor any distributor of powers or energy generated by such permittee.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman— Mr. SMITH of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 6.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is too late.
Mr. AUSTIN. I was on my feet demanding recognition to make a motion to strike out section 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 10, by striking out section 6, from line 12 down to and including line 19.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, this bill in its present shape will not pass the Senate. That body has gone on record six times as against the legislative proposition contained in section 6. It has got to reverse itself for the last 8 or 10 years, because it has been against that proposition almost unanimously during that time. In other words, we must, in order to have this bill enacted, see a revolution in the United States Senate on section 6. We have to reverse the decisions of our highest court, the Supreme Court of the United States, for more than 100 years.

We have no right under any existing law, or under the Constitution of the United States, to take from the sovereign State of New York its rights and interests that it has enjoyed since the Constitution was adopted. Here is the National Govern-ment going afield and invading every nook and corner of the land to raise revenue to run the Government. We have actually gone in under recent revenue laws and taken the field of taxation which has been enjoyed heretofore by the respective States. The inheritance tax, the tax on theaters, moving pictures, billiards, and any number of occupations and trades which we have imposed taxes upon have heretofore been enjoyed by the States and municipalities. We have invaded that field. If we do not stop reaching out for direct taxation we are virtually going to rob the States of the opportunity to raise money to pay their expenses unless we tax the people practically to death on their personal property, business, and real estate. We have reached the period in legislation where we have drifted from the field of indirect taxation and invaded the field of direct taxation.

In this bill we are attempting to take from the State of New York, and every State in the Union, in violation of the decisions of the Supreme Court, the rights of the States to own and control the water power in this country. The Government of the United States, according to the decisions of the Supreme Court based upon section 8 of the Constitution, from Chief Justice Marshall down to the 11th of December, 1916, have passed upon virtually the same issue involved in this bill and held that these rights belong to the States.

I know that we have been swept off our feet in this House by the belief that the National Government, because it had the right under the Constitution to look after navigation and commerce, owns the beds of the rivers and the banks of the streams and the waters in the rivers, and has the right to tax and use them, when the Supreme Court has said that the right belongs to the State.

According to a statement of a leading professor in the University of Tennessee—Prof. John A. Switzer—there is over 600,000 undeveloped horsepower within 75 miles of Knoxville, Tenn. Do you think in the face of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States that I am going to stand here and vote for a proposition which robs my State of the power of taxation on 600,000 horsepower; to take from the people of Tennessee and my constituents a source of revenue to run their local government given them by the fathers of the Republic and sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States for more than 100 years? You may put such a bill through this House, but there be passed by an American Congress. [Applause.] Now, what does this bill propose? It proposes to write a law which will force the power companies authorized and chartered under the laws of the State of New York to cancel and violate and destroy contracts which they made with the consumers of power. You have not that right. You attempt to exercise it, and no court of justice will permit you to do it.

is not a man here who will be living when such a bill will ever

They have up that very question in the proposed constitution of Mexico, where they are seeking to adopt a provision which will be a plain violation of contracts in Mexico, and this administration is insisting that these contracts, involving the rights of American business men in Mexico, shall be kept. While we are making at this very time protests against violating contracts in Mexico, the House of Representatives is attempting to write a law to do practically the same thing in the State of New York.

Now, we ought to have water-power legislation for the development of this country, but let us do it fairly, honestly, and in strict compliance with the law and in strict obedience to the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. SABATH was recognized.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I was on my feet before the gentleman from Illinois was recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not see the gentleman. Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I will say to the Chair that I have risen 20 times this afternoon and have not yet been recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman after the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr.

Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How much time will there be upon this for debate?

Mr. SABATH. That can be settled later on.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think there ought to be sufficient debate on this in view of the fact that the constitutional question has been raised, and we ought not to decide it in less than 10 minutes' debate on a side.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin], who has preceded me, is very candid in the reasons that he assigns in favor of striking out section 6, which provides for reasonable compensation to the Government for the use of water for power purposes on the part of the per-The reasons he assigns are that in Tennessee they have water power capable of developing hundreds of thousands of horsepower, and that by adopting this provision we will establish precedent which might be followed in grants or permits given to water companies in his State. There are other gentlemen who are opposed to this provision upon the same grounds, but do not give the candid reasons in opposing this grounds, but do not give the candid reasons in opposing this provision as he has given. As to the other objection he has raised, I believe we should not fear or take into consideration or be controlled by the other body of Congress. It seems to me that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin] is alarmed about the fact that the Senate will never agree to this provision. If the House is to be controlled completely by the action of the Senate, then let us disband and go home and permit the Senate to legislate on all important questions. I do not believe, however, that we should in any way deprive ourselves of the rights and privileges of legislating in this body. I myself am of the opinion that section 6 should remain in the bill, and I believe that any charge that the Government would exact from the companies that are now making millions each and every year would only partially compensate the Federal Government for the millions and millions that it expends upon the improvement of the various rivers in the United States. Section 6 provides:

The Secretary of War, in granting any permit for the diversion of water under this act, shall include therein a provision requiring the payment to the United States of a reasonable annual charge, assessed on the basis of the quantity of water diverted.

In view of the evidence given before our committee, in view of conditions, I believe it will be manifestly unfair and unjustifiable that we should turn over the water to these two companies without any compensation. For that reason I hope that the motion to strike out will not prevail.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I was not surprised at the speech of my splendid friend from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN]. He has kept his record clear, and he has kept the faith letter perfect. He has raised his voice, as he always casts his vote, against any kind of a tax. This tax provided for in this paragraph, if a tax is ever advisable on a water-power project, is proper here. First, as to its legality. Gentlemen, I think, are accustomed to confuse the right of the sovereign power of the United States to levy a tax due to its authority and control over, first, the navigability, and, second, the power latent in the moving water of a stream. A State undoubtedly has full authority and power over some features of water power, but it can not dispossess the United States of these two sovereign powers. The United States can or can not at its discretion grant a permit to make use of the water power latent in these moving waters. If it has the power to give the permit for their use, it has the power to prescribe the rules and regulations and conditions that shall surround that use, and one of those rules and regulations is a reasonable tax to be paid to the sovereignty that grants the right. Second, it does not necessarily interfere with the right of the State to tax that property which belongs to the State. This right is not a State right. This property is not a State property. There exists in certain water-power features something of State property and State rights. The State can tax that. That which belongs to the State the State can tax. We have in that respect the same dual sovereignty and the same dual right to tax that we find in a great many other subjects that have relation between the Federal Government and the respective States.

Mr. Chairman, this power to tax by the Federal Government is the one great strong power our Government will have to control and regulate the operation of these power companies. power to tax is the supreme overwhelming power to regulate and control. It is at the very heart of the merit of the right of sover-eignty acting in behalf of the people to regulate and control any interest of the people. It is beyond conception that if a State taxes these water-power companies, as they certainly will, the Secretary of War will not take that into consideration in levying any Federal tax.

If it be admitted, as I think it will be, that there shall be in the United States the right to tax these power companies abroad over the land as water power is developed, then there is no place where it more rightfully belongs than in this place where we find it here. The great power of Niagara is the greatest power God placed on the face of this earth. It belongs to the sovereign people of the United States and is entrusted by them, to be administered in their interest, to the Government of the United States. If we choose to prescribe limits and conditions under which power companies shall operate power plants, then we are but serving our constituents as we ought.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I sincerely trust whatever may be the views of some other gentlemen in some other body of this Government, that we adhere to the principle already established and we retain in the bill this paragraph, which enables this House, whether we use it much or whether we use it little, the power of regulating and controlling these great public-service corporations. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a motion to fix the time for debate on the section and amendments thereto. move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes. Mr. HEFLIN. I want five minutes now.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I have been recognized. Mr. FLOOD. I will make it 35 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 35 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr KAHN Mr. Chairman, I believe in that kind of conservation which allows utilization with the maximum efficiency and the minimum waste. I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin]. There are a great many power companies already established at Niagara and elsewhere that do not pay anything to the General Government for the power which they obtain. They received their rights long before the question of conservation was discussed by the American people. You put a charge on any new company that is established and the old company can cut the price of its product just to the extent of the burden that the new company has to pay to the Government, and you will bankrupt the new company. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. May I interrupt the gentleman?
Mr. KAHN. No; I have only five minutes.

Mr. FLOOD. But the gentleman has misstated the facts of the bill. This imposes this charge upon all companies who use that water, whether old or new.

Mr. KAHN. I was under the impression, of course, that it imposed a charge on the new companies.

Mr. FLOOD. No; the gentleman is mistaken.

Will the gentleman answer me this question: Mr. KAHN. How under the law can you impose that charge on the companies that are already existing and that have been using the water without any charge whatever?

Mr. FLOOD. The companies that are there had rights which have expired and they have no rights now. Every company has to go in and get rights under this law, and it imposes a charge upon every one of them.

Mr. KAHN. Then, of course, they will all pay for the power, so far as that goes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman yield to me to state this? Mr. KAHN. Yes.

These will be the only power companies in the United States charged this tax. The others on the Mississippi and Coosa Rivers and every other river of the United States

Mr. KAHN. I was just going to call attention— Mr. FLOOD. Not if the other bills pass the Senate.

Mr. KAHN (continuing). To the fact that this kind of legislation intrenches monopoly. It is in the interest of monopoly, because all over this country there are companies that received their patents or grants long before our so-called conservation policies were adopted. Those companies do not have to pay a cent for the water or the power to anybody. They can undersell the newer companies just to the extent of the amount that the Government charges the newer companies for the use of the water, and they will come pretty near bankrupting the latter concerns. The amount of power that is produced throughout the United States is very extensive. The quantity of power that is produced by old-established companies that do not pay anything to the Federal Government is exceedingly large, and this kind of legislation intrenches those companies in their We have gone to the extreme with this conservation I believe that there should be regulation, but I do business. not believe that there should be such regulation or such financial burdens that prevent utilization. [Applause.] I am opposed to such legislation on principle. The business of this country will be materially benefited if we allow the beneficial use or utilization of this water so that the maximum efficiency can be secured with the minimum waste. Mr. Chairman, the development of the West is being seriously impeded by this kind of legislation. I have seen its evil effects in my State and the other States of the Pacific coast. Its entire tendency is to arrest development and to allow great quantities of water to run to the sea without having performed its useful service to man which its conversion into power would have made possible.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, the trouble with a great many Members in this House is that when they serve here some length of time they forget all that they ever knew about local self-government and the rights and the powers that belong to the States. They come here and begin to legislate about matters that belong purely and wholly, singly and solely to the legislatures of the various States. And I am astounded as I sit here and see Representatives surrendering rights and powers that they ought to be safeguarding and protecting for their

We are to-day undertaking by congressional action to take away from the States a right and a power that nearly every Secretary of War since the foundation of the Government has held belongs to the States. We are undertaking this afternoon to surrender a right and a power that the Supreme Court has held belongs to the States. Some gentlemen here are wanting the Federal Government now to go into the business of selling water power. The Federal Government has no jurisdiction, as a matter of right, over the sale of this water power developed by private capital in a navigable stream. Its power stops with the control of the stream for navigation purposes. The right to sell water power belongs to the States.

Gentlemen, the people at home must look with utter surprise and be astounded when they see their Representatives here sur-rendering that which they ought to be safeguarding for the

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HEFLIN. I have not the time.

I am utterly surprised, Mr. Chairman, that Members will take is course. This question ought not to be considered here. this course. Every government on the earth that has perished went down the road of centralization of power. The surrender of the power of the small units, and the States, to the national power, has been the road down which every government that has fallen has gone. Will we not profit by the mistakes of these governments of the past? Will we not steer clear of the pitfalls into which they stumbled and fell? Let us this day go upon record as preserving, as safeguarding, as holding to the States these rights that belong to them, and not as surrendering these rights. [Applause.]

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will yield if I have the time.
Mr. BENNET. I just wanted to ask how the gentleman voted on the good-roads bill, the vocational bill, and on the child-labor bill?

Mr. HEFLIN. I think I voted for all of them. But that is a different proposition altogether. No Secretary of War had

Mr. BENNET. How did the gentleman vote on the cotton-futures bill a few weeks ago?

Mr. HEFLIN. That is a different question altogether. That a question of interstate commerce.

Mr. BENNET. That was left to the Secretary of Agriculture. Mr. HEFLIN. That was a different question altogether, Mr. Chairman. I am surprised that the gentleman from New York wants to surrender the power that that State has and, by right ought to hold, to the Federal Government. I imagine it will be very pleasing to his constituents to know that he is here, instead of safeguarding their rights, smiling while he surrenders them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I have for many years maintained in this House that Congress, having the right, in its discretion, to grant a franchise permitting the use of the waters of a navigable stream to generate hydroelectric power, can in granting that franchise lawfully impose such terms and conditions as, in its discretion, may seem wise and in the interest of the people. This I have often said here, not as a Republican but as one who believed that the welfare of the people of the United States demands the firm maintenance of that principle.

Now, I ask the attention of my friend the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Heflin] to what a distinguished Democrat said during a debate some years ago on this floor on a bill involving this principle. While the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] was speaking a few moments ago I remembered that in that debate a gentleman from Alabama by the name of Richardson maintained, or sought to maintain, the same proposition which his successor from Alabama is now seeking to maintain, namely, that this is purely a local, a State, matter, and that the Government of the United States has no power to require compensation for a privilege of this kind. After Mr. Richardson had finished there arose to answer him-and I remember it well—one of the ablest, most brilliant men I have ever known. I remember, too, that sometimes men used to criticize him merely, as I thought, because he was so gifted; and this re-minds me of what Macaulay said in his discussion of Harley and Montague:

It is soothing to envy to believe that what is brilliant can not be strong; that what is clear can not be profound.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I read from the Record, page 4065, of March 28, 1908:

"Mr. Chairman, there can be no doubt in the mind of any man seeking merely the public good and public right, inde-pendently of any desire for local legislation, of this general proposition, that whenever any sovereignty, State or Federal, is required to issue a charter or a license or a consent, in order to confer powers upon individuals or corporations, it is the duty of that sovereignty in the interests of the people so to condition the grant of that power as that it shall redound to the interest of all the people, and that utilities of vast value should not be gratuitously granted to individuals or corporations and perpetually alienated from the people or the States or the Govern-

"Now, it is admitted-and, of course, I regret very much that in laying down any general law or any rule of conduct I should be compelled to come athwart any desire for legislation in the gentleman's district or anywhere else-but it is admitted that this power to erect dams in navigable streams can not be exercised by anybody except an act of Congress. Now, then, if it can require an act of Congress to permit any man to put a dam in a navigable stream, then two things follow: Congress should so exercise the power in making that grant as, first, to prevent any harm to the navigability of the stream itself, and, secondly, so as to prevent any individual or any private corporation from securing through the act of Congress any uncompensated advantage or private profit."

Who said this? JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, then the Democratic floor leader. [Applause.] Was he trying dangerously to consolidate power in the National Government though professing only a desire honestly to protect the interests of the people? Did he so mistake his functions as a legislator here as to advocate a principle that tends to crush the liberties of the American -the constitutional principle that when Congress has the exclusive power to grant a franchise it has the right, in its discretion, to impose conditions and terms? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin

has expired.

Mr. LENROOT rose.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recog-

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, the ease with which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Heflin] overrules the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States is only equaled by the ease with which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin] misstates those decisions.

Mr. AUSTIN. Well, I challenge that statement.

Mr. LENROOT. I expected the gentleman would, and I say to the gentleman that there is no decision of the Supreme Court of the United States ever rendered that is in the least degree in conflict with the provisions that the gentleman now seeks to strike out of this bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will put them in the Record.
Mr. LENROOT. All right. I will be glad if the gentleman will do so. And he spoke of the Senate of the United States. The gentleman may not be aware of the fact that five or six years ago the ablest lawyers then in that body made an investigation of this very legal question and reported that it was en-tirely competent for the Congress of the United States to make just such a charge as this as a condition of a grant such as is contained here

Mr. AUSTIN. And did the Senate vote on it?

Mr. LENROOT. I have not the time to go into that. If the gentleman is at all familiar with the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States he must know that that court has held that the Government itself can construct these dams and that it has the right to sell any power that is generated by these dams; and if that be so, can it be true that it has not the power as a condition of a grant to some one else, to whom it gives the privilege of erecting these dams, instead of doing it itself, to impose as a condition of that grant that it shall pay a charge?

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have taken a somewhat active interest in water-power legislation since it has been before Congress. I have not been of the opinion that in every case a charge should be imposed, but only in those cases where by regulation the public will not get the benefit of the development.

This situation at Niagara Falls furnishes an excellent illustration of a case where a charge ought to be made. One of the users of this power is the American Cyanamid Co., a manufacturer of nitrates and fertilizers. It was testified by the officers of that company that they are now paying for power about onehalf of the ordinary charge for power in the United States. It was testified by them that they could make money if they had to pay four or five dollars-I have forgotten the exact figures per horsepower more than they are paying. That company is a monopoly. How is the public to get any benefit from the use of this water power by that monopoly except through the imposition of a charge?

Mr. SMITH of New York. That company does not get power from any company on the American side.

Mr. LENROOT. That may be. It is an illustration, however, of the point I am making; and whether it be the American Cyanamid Co. or whether it be some other manufacturing company that gets the power, the illustration holds good just the This is a case where the only way that the public can get any benefit is to have the right in the Secretary of War to im-

The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] says that to incorporate this section in the bill will intrench monopoly. I say to him that if you strike out of this bill the provision for a charge, you do intrench monopoly. You give to the manufac-turer value which has not been created by him, which belongs to all the people of the United States; and the only way the public can get any benefit from that for themselves is to enable the Secretary of War, as a condition of the permit that is herein provided for, to impose such a charge as will give to the public some benefit of the development of the water power.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Who ultimately will have to pay this charge in the State of New York?

Mr. LENROOT. The American Cyanamid Co. charge all that they can get, short of the point where we would be able to import phosphates and nitrates from Chile. That is the measure of what they are charging the public now; and you might impose $2 per horsepower per year upon that nitrate company if it got its power upon this side and the public would not pay one penny of that charge. You would simply reduce the dividends that the monopoly is getting, given to it by the people.

Mr. PLATT. If they have a monopoly, why could they not charge what they wanted to?

Mr. PARKER of New York. Does not the gentleman realize that every one of these companies is under the jurisdiction of the public-service commission of the State of New York?

Mr. LENROOT. Let us see. Here is a power company which furnishes power to a monopoly. Suppose you reduce the rate that the power company must charge the monopoly; you simply increase the dividends of the monopoly. How has your public-service commission of New York safeguarded the public interest by simply regulating the rates that a power company shall charge a monopoly? There is one way you can do it—by regulating the price of the product—and you can not do it in any other way except by imposing a charge.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, I have been greatly interested in this debate. I listened to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Miller], who claims the proud paternity of this particular section, and I also listened with interest to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin], who says that there are some 800,000 horsepower in his State, and he is not going to give up the right of his State to tax that 800,000 horsepower. In the State of Washington, which I have the honor to represent in part, we are credited by the Interior Department with having between 10,000,000 and 11,000,000 horsepower. Hundreds of thousands of this horsepower is in navigable streams. Now, I am willing to grant to the United States the charging of an excise tax on all the horsepower that may be developed in those streams, but I am not willing to grant to the United States that they have any inherent right to tax the water powers generated by the waters of that State. I am willing to concede that in all navigable streams they have control of the water for navigation purposes, but further than that I deny that they have a scintilla of right. I question very much whether they have any right above the Niagara Falls other than the right of saying whether or not the amount of water taken out of the stream would or would not interfere with navigation on the There has been a case decided in Michigan covering that point. Certain parties built a dam across the upper waters of a navigable stream above the point of navigation. The United States Government attempted to enjoin those parties. The case was carried into the courts, and the courts decided that while it did not interfere with the navigation on the lower river and while navigation was not injured the United States could not interfere. Those people still use the water above the point of navigation.

I claim that above Niagara Falls there is practically no navigation for commercial purposes on the little stretch of river from the lake to the Falls, and I question whether the Government has any right over the water there even for navigation. But when they undertake to interfere by making a charge for the use of the water on the New York side they are infringing on the rights of the State of New York. I think it behooves every man in this House who has a water power on a navigable stream to take issue with the United States having any control over them for any purpose except navigation purposes.

plause.] The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Lenboot] said a few moments ago that they—the United States—had a right to put dams across a river. I admit they have, provided they put them there for navigation purposes. But they could be enjoined by a State or any two States in the Union if the stream went between those States, if they should try to dam a river for any purpose not warranted by the needs of navigation, as the Supreme Court would decide they were exceeding their rights if it was for anything other than the purpose of navigation.

If they should build a dam for that purpose, and there was water power created thereby, I have no doubt the courts would say that they should have the right to charge for the use of that power, in case they wanted to make a charge, but they would have no inherent right under the law and the Constitution of the United States, and would be compelled to use or sell the water in compliance with the law of the State or States where the power was used or sold.

Mr. Chairman, one-third of the area of the State of Washington is in forest reserves, Indian reservations, national parks, and monuments that are barred from taxation at the present time and will be for many years to come. If the United States Government now sets up a claim to the inherent right to charge for the use of water power and to tax the individuals, companies, or corporations developing or using the water powers within the State, or waters contiguous thereto, and their contention should be sustained by the courts, then there is but little left to my State untrammeled by the claims of the Federal Government except the air we breathe.

The courts of both State and Nation have ruled for a century that jurisdiction over the waters of the States for other than navigation purposes was a prerogative of the States, and it has only been within the last decade that anyone has had the temerity to challenge that ruling. But of late years a few questionable reformers, in and out of Congress, have set up their ideas as superior to court rulings, and would take away from the various States of the Union the right to control the waters within their States for all other than navigation purposes and turn that power over to the bureaucratic control of some departments in Washington City.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is turning over to the Secretary of War functions that no stretch of the imagination could possibly say were his constitutional or natural functions. The Secretary is an appointee, liable to frequent change, and this bill is putting into his hands power and authority over things of which he probably will know nothing and making it his duty to perform services that the wildest enthusiast here for bureaucratic control will not expect him to personally perform or have any practical knowledge of. Such a law as this is farcical.

Many of the provisions of the bill are unwise and nonsensical. For instance, each permittee must "actually engage in the business of furnishing light, heat, power, and electric current," making it impossible for a permittee to engage in furnishing all of the energy he generates for one or more of these purposes. What good purpose can be served by such an arbitrary provision?

If the Secretary of War is allowed to fix an arbitrary tax at Niagara, will not the Congress allow him to fix an arbitrary tax at the Great Falls of the Missouri, Mont., or Kettle Falls, Wash? There is no provision of uniformity. It is dependent on the whim or the judgment of an appointee officer, is unwise and unsafe, and is an affront to the States, as it is an injustice. I sincerely hope, if it passes the House in its present form, it will not receive the concurrence of the body at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, yesterday in this House we considered the naval appropriation bill, and I sat in my seat as the various paragraphs in the bill were read and watched the amendments that were offered. Not a single amendment met with defeat, and every amendment added from $20,000 to $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 to the bill.

OUR INCREASING NATIONAL EXPENDITURES.

One of the papers this morning stated that yesterday we added from the floor amendments amounting to $15,000,000 to that one bill. The bill as reported is the largest bill ever reported out by the Naval Committee of this House in the history of the Government. The statement astonished me, and I went through the Record and found that the paper that made that statement was in error. We added to this bill yesterday in the House, without a murmur of opposition, over $20,000,000. [Applause.] We propose to keep up evidently through the remainder of the consideration of the naval bill these amendments, and then add $150,000,000 in bonds. In other words, when this bill passes this Congress it will carry in charges against the people of the United States twice as much money as any party in this country was ever able to raise by any system of tariffs on imports.

WHAT THE NAVAL BILL ALONE WILL CARRY THIS YEAR.

When that bill passes and becomes a law it will carry almost as much in bonds and in direct appropriations as we collected four or five years ago from all sources for the support of this Government, except the sale of postage stamps, which merely supports the Post Office Department of the Government.

REVENUE POSSIBILITIES OF OUR RIVERS.

We are asked now by certain gentlemen in this House to commence to-day to give away to the rapidly forming Water Power Trust in this country the very last of our national assets—the power of the moving water of our rivers as it flows down over declivities to the sea. We are developing in the country to-day seven or eight million horsepower of hydroelectric energy and a conservative estimate of the possible development within the next few years would be forty or fifty million horsepower.

Not long ago the Geological Survey issued its statement to the effect that it was possible to develop here in the rivers of this country 300,000,000 horsepower. We can develop there at Niagara by a proper conservation—not the method that is adopted now of using the water—at the Falls and in the gorge below the Falls 7,000,000 horsepower. I do not know what the charge ought to be, but a conservative charge may be ultimately $1 per horsepower. If we are to enter upon the proposition, which seems to be favored now in so many different directions, of conserving all the water that falls, impounding it and using it for irrigation purposes and then using it as it flows down the rivers to the sea, so that hydroelectric energy can be created, the prospects for the future after the period of this generation assumes enormous proportions. [Applause.]

THE FIGHT FOR CONSERVATION OF WATER POWER IS ALMOST WON.

I have been active for a number of years here in the House of Representatives and elsewhere in the movement to preserve for the National Government the possibility of at some time in the future deriving some suitable revenue for the Government out of the privileges we are asked here to grant to corporations and individuals. I have been active in the fight for a regulation of cost of hydroelectric power to ultimate consumers, and I have contended for an adequate recapture clause in all bills which pass this House, a clause which may enable the National Government to take over at some time in the future-50 years from now perhaps-structures which may be erected in our rivers where power may be developed, subject to a proper recompense to the owners of the dams and of the structures immediately connected therewith. The fight we have been making seems almost won. This bill will pass the House with the compensation clause in it, and with the other clauses also included for which we have been fighting so long. In the face of the growing expenditures of this Government, the effort to give away gratuitously this, the last of our national assets, from my viewpoint is indefensible.

A NATURAL MONOPOLY.

The development of hydroelectric energy is necessarily a natural monopoly. There can never be any competition between power plants, as has been suggested by the gentleman from California [Mr. Kahn]. Places where power can be developed in our rivers are widely separated. In order to properly develop hydroelectric power a number of power possibilities close together ought to be assembled. If there ever was a natural monopoly, the development of hydroelectric power belongs to that class. The cost to the ultimate consumer in the absence of some adequate regulation of price by the States or by the National Government must always be controlled by the competition of steam power developed from coal; but after steam plants are put out of existence by electrical power plants in the absence of proper regulation these power plants will have entire communities at their mercy.

THE DEMANDS OF THE STATES.

The demands of States upon the National Government are increasing. Appropriations from national funds are demanded for building of roads within States, for improvement of rivers and harbors within States, for the elimination of the boll-weevil and the gypsy-moth pests within States, and for a multitude of other things, and yet gentlemen on this floor advocate to-day that we must leave to the States alone the right to collect revenues from power possibilities in our navigable rivers. The effort now on the part of States is to place on the National Government enormous burdens which the States should assume and at the same time deprive the National Government of the right to collect its revenues from such possible sources as we are considering in this bill. This bill ought to pass with this provision for compensation in it. We can not give away to private monopolies this great national asset which belongs to the people of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, this section of the bill provides that the Secretary of War may levy a "reasonable annual charge," and for this reason I hope the section will be stricken out. Granting, for the sake of argument, that Congress has the right to authorize the collection of a tax upon the developed water power of navigable streams, what excuse is there for a delegation of this important function to the Secretary of War? Why not settle the matter here and now? are elected to legislate for the people of the United States, and questions of this character ought to be settled here in Congress-in our committees, which surely have enough brains and patriotism to settle them-without passing them on to the Secretary of War or any other Cabinet official. [Applause.] What is a "reasonable annual charge"? Fifty cents, or $1, or $2, or what? Is the Secretary of War any better qualified to determine this question than the committees of Congress? I am not speaking disrespectfully of the present Secretary of War, but am objecting to the growing tendency here in Congress to confer legislative power upon Cabinet officials. From time to time new Secretaries of War will be appointed, and we may get one, perchance, who may be a crank on this or that phase of the water-power question, and who will unjustly raise or lower the charge per horsepower. We have entered upon a mad career of delegating legislative powers to Cabinet officials, who must of necessity depend upon the reports of subordinates, and the whole machinery of the Federal Government is becoming top-heavy with bureaucracy. Congress has come to be a joke in the minds of many people, because we are emasculating ourselves and placing too much power in the hands of bureaucrats.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McARTHUR. Certainly.
Mr. MADDEN The gentleman admits that he himself does not know what the charge ought to be?

Mr. McARTHUR. Yes. I admit that, and I do not think the Secretary of War knows, either. I do think, however, that a committee of this Congress is competent to prescribe the rates of taxation-at least maximum and minimum rates-rather than delegate this important power to a Cabinet official who changes every four years, or oftener.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the orderly way to do it is to have some executive officer who has facilities to ascertain its value and fix the price.

Mr. McARTHUR. I do not agree with the gentleman; but my time is limited and I must pass to another phase of this question of taxation of water power. We are setting a bad precedent here by this legislation. Congress will soon be called upon to enact general water-power legislation, and those who favor the Federal tax will point to the Niagara River bill as an example and argue that all water power developed from navigable streams should bear a Federal tax. The unfairness of such a tax becomes apparent when we stop to consider that water power already developed pays no tax at all, while that which is to be developed, under the terms of such measures as may be enacted, must be handicapped by a tax. The products of the old and the new establishments must compete in the open market and the old concerns will enjoy a subsidy equivalent to the amount of the tax on the new industries and will be able to undersell them to that extent. Competition of that character can not continue long, for the concern that bears an unequal burden of taxation will go to the wall. If we are going to tax water power, why not do it in the shape of a revenue bill providing for a tax upon all concerns-those already in operation, as well as new ones that may be built and operated from time to time? In this way, all concerns will be treated alike. On the other hand, if we tax only the new industries, what becomes of our time-honored doctrine of "equal rights to all and special privileges to none"?

Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared to admit that the Federal Government has any legal right to tax water power. eral Government enjoys the right to regulate navigable streams for the purposes of navigation, but from what source does it derive its authority to tax the power of falling waters lying within a particular State? I am not discussing the Niagara bill, but have in mind general legislation and the contentions of gentlemen in this House who believe that any water-power bill passed by this Congress should provide for a Federal tax. The right to tax water power, if it is to be taxed, should be with the State. not with the Federal Government. I have argued against taxation in any form, unless water power heretofore developed shall also be taxed, but I realize that there are many who do not agree with me. If, then, for the sake of the argument, we are to levy a tax upon water power, why not leave the question to the States? This Congress has invaded the field of State taxation by levying on inheritances, excess profits, capital stock, they pool halls, billiard tables, motion-picture houses, and scores of other fields that should be left to State and municipal taxation. Now, it is proposed to levy a Federal tax on water power. All of this is invading the field of local taxation to such an extent that the burden of sustaining city, county, and State government is gradually shifting to the man who owns real estate—to the farmer and city property owner. The burden is becoming almost unbearable, so why not allow the States in which waterpower projects are located to exercise the taxing function?

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] sounded a note of warning about the surrender of power to the Central Government. He holds that such tendencies will destroy local self-government and menace the future welfare of the Republic. The gentleman is quite right, but time will not permit me to dwell longer upon that phase of the question.

Mr. Chairman, gentlemen have indulged in the old talk about "monopoly." It is an old bugaboo. They do not seem to realize that New York State and practically every other progressive State in the Union have public-service commissions that safeguard the people against monopoly and exorbitant prices. The cry of "monopoly" is very much like the cry of "fraud" that we so often hear after election day. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All debate upon this section and all amendments thereto is exhausted. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr.

AUSTIN] to strike out the section.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Austin and by Mr. Heflin) there were-ayes 55, noes 85.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That no permittee under this act, nor any distributor of power or energy generated by such permittee, shall unreasonably discriminate in service, charges, or otherwise between those to whom it shall supply power or energy, or who shall apply for same, and all such discrimination shall be unlawful and all contracts therefor, whether heretofore or hereafter made, are declared to be violative of public policy and void.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After section 7 insert as a new section:

"SEC. 8. That each approval under this act shall be conditioned upon the acceptance by the grantee of all the terms and conditions of this act and of terms and conditions specified in the approval, which acceptance shall be expressed in the approval as a part of the contract entered into."

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment. That is not an amendment to this section and it is not in order just now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is in

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is copied word for word from the Adamson bill, and it seems to me to be a very important amendment. It is not phrased in exactly the language I would have used, but I copied it literally, word for word, from the Adamson bill, and it seems to me that we ought to adopt it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. Huddleston) there wereayes 28, noes 83.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by inserting after section 7, which ends with line 2, on page 11, the following:

"Sec. 8. That at any time after the expiration of any permit made hereunder, upon six months' notice of intention to do so, given either before or after the expiration of the permit, the United States, or any person authorized by Congress, may take over such works used by the permittee for the generation and transmission of electrical energy which are dependent for their usefulness on the continuance of such permit: Provided, That by 'transmission' there shall be understood the wires, conduits, poles, or other devices used to convey electrical energy to the point of its application; but that nothing herein contained shall obligate the United States to purchase any property beyond such generating plant and transmission lines: Provided further, That the United States may also purchase, at its discretion, such lands and other property of any permittee acting under the terms of this act as in the judgment of Congress may be deemed advisable upon condition that it shall pay before taking possession, first, the reasonable value, not exceeding the actual costs of the works, constructed under the approval of plans and specifications, rights of way, water rights, lands, and interests therein purchased or taken over by it; and, second, the reasonable value of all other property taken over, including structures and fixtures acquired, erected, or placed upon the lands and included in the generation or transmission plant and which are dependent as herein above set forth, such reasonable value to be determined by mutual agreement between the Secretary of War and the permittee or owners of such property; and in case they can not agree, by proceedings instituted for that purpose in the United States district court for the district in which said property or some part thereof is situated, but in no case shall the amount exceed the actual cost: Provided, That such reasonable value shall not include or be affected by the value of the franchise or good will or profits to be earned on pending contracts or any other intangible elements.

"That in the event the United States does not exercise its right to take over, maintain, and operate the properties as provided in this section, the Secretary of War may renew the approval of plans and specifications, either original or modified, upon such terms and conditions and for such periods as may be authorized under the applicable laws that may be in force at that time, or the Secretary of War is authorized, upon the expiration of any permit under this act, to approve terms and conditions under which a new permittee may operate such properties for such periods as applicable laws may then authorize upon the further conditions that the new permittee shall pay the original permittee for the properties as provided in this section.

"That where, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, the public interests requires or justifies the execution by any permittee of contracts for the sale and delivery of water power or electrical energy for periods extending beyond the life of the permit, but for not more than 20 years thereafter, such contracts may be entered into upon the approval of the said Secretary, and thereafter, in the event of the exercise by the United States of the option to take over the plant in the manner provided in this section, the United States or its new permittee shall assume and fulfill all such contracts."

During the reading of the above amendment, Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, the three sections which constitute this amendment have been read to the committee in the amendment which the gentleman from Indiana offered before.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman any request to make? Mr. FLOOD. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading be dispensed with now.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. What is it; to adopt an amendment without

Mr. FLOOD. It has been read.
Mr. MANN. Not to Members now present.
Mr. FLOOD. Well, if there is any objection that settles it.
Mr. MANN. I think it better be read.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the amendment.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, this is taken word for word from the Adamson recapture clause, and contains no other verbiage of the bill which I included in the amendment when I offered it

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I notice there are eight sections in the amendment which the gentleman

Mr. CLINE. No; sections 5, 6, and 7.
Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. How much of the confidential print have you incorporated in the present amendment?

Mr. CLINE. Sections 5, 6, and 7 in the amendment. Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. The confidential print commences with section 4.

Mr. CLINE. That included, as I stated before, what we wanted to incorporate in the bill so the Government could either take the plants over or could revoke the permit and compel the permittee to remove the property they had

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. And the gentleman eliminates that? Mr. CLINE. I have eliminated that, and simply include the recapture language of the Adamson bill.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. This commences with section 5 of the confidential bill.

Mr. CLINE. Five, 6, and 7. The gentleman from Wisconsin can advise the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Is it the gentleman's intention to complete this bill to-night?

Mr. CLINE. Yes; we wish to do that, if we can get it to a vote.

[Cries of "Vote!"]
Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I trust that this amendment may be added to this bill. I believe that the next few years will show economic and social changes in this Nation that will warrant the adoption of this amendment. Recently the three greatest electricians of the world have predicted that within the next decade an increased use of electrical power will take place such as the ordinary mind can not even imagine to-day. This is preeminently the age of electricity. Electrical power has come to be the greatest power in the world within a very few years. This great hydroelectric power at Niagara Falls, in my judgment, under the disgraceful greed that has been shown is practiced by the hydroelectric companies who have already been given permits to all this water power, and in simple fairness to the interest of the people who consume the power should be taken over now and operated by the Government. I am confident that within 10 years the great majority of the people of this country will demand and insist upon the ownership and operation of such great hydroelectric powers as this by the Federal Government. This water power is a natural monopoly, and the interests of the public will be abused as long as it is permitted to be operated for private gain.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE].

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. McARTHUR, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FI.OOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALEXANDER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 20047) for the control and regulation of the waters of Niagara River above the Falls, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with a recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage. The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I want to inquire whether it is the intention to have a vote to-night?

Mr. MANN. I will say there is not. The gentleman need not inquire over there. I know how to stop it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no request.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I wish to offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. That can be offered after the third reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a minute. It is the intention of some of the gentlemen to offer a motion to recommit and to insist upon a roll call, either through a point of no quorum or otherwise, as I understand. Unless we can get unanimous consent after the third reading is ordered I shall demand the reading of the engrossed bill, which will put it over until to-morrow, anyway.

The SPEAKER. Get unanimous consent for what?

Mr. MANN. To postpone the vote until to-morrow, after the vote is taken ordering it to a third reading.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Before the third reading, I ask unanimous consent that the further consideration of the bill be postponed, to come up immediately after the reading of the Journal to-

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, the bill H. R. 18565 is a bill that ought to be on the Private Calendar instead of the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. What is it?

Mr. BURNETT. It refers to the sale of certain land in Alabama to the heirs at law of Thomas Tumlin, deceased. It is a private bill. I ask that it be placed on the Private Calendar. The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KITCHIN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks that the House stand in recess until 8 o'clock under the special order. Is there objection?

There was no objection; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House (at 8 o'clock p. m.) resumed its session, and was called to order by Mr. SAUNDERS as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Private Calendar.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I ask unanimous consent that we begin the Private Calendar at No. 443. That and the succeeding bills have been on the calendar since the beginning of this session of Congress, and after examining the calendar it appears that if we get through with them we will then be able to go back and start over again. The bills preceding No. 443 have been on the calendar before and have been objected to on previous occasions

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Delaware asks unanimous consent to begin the calling of the calendar at the point indicated.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What number?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. No. 443.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Private Calendar?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes.
Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Reserving the right to object, it seems to me this is hardly fair to those who have had bills pending on the calendar for the last four or five or six months.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Will the gentleman yield right there? I only do this after consulting Members on both sides. The bills that the gentleman from Idaho refers to have already been called and objected to more than once. I think it is only fair to take up the new work more recently reported.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I do not think it is true that all the bills preceding the number to which the gentleman refers have been objected to, and it seems to me that if we start at the beginning of the calendar those which are not objected to can soon be disposed of. We should not overlook meritorious bills that have been on the calendar for four or five or six months to take up those more recently reported.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Nobody is more anxious than I am to have these bills considered, but the later bills on the calendar are new ones, and if we get through with them to-night we will possibly have another session for the consideration of the Private Calendar before we adjourn. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. If you will take up Private Calendar No. 352 and consider it, I will not object; but I certainly do not think it is fall to those who have had bills on the calendar for a long time, and who have been waiting patiently for them to be reached, to begin at the point indicated by the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. If the gentleman wants to couple with my request a request that we take up No. 352, I have no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I will not permit any favoritism to be played here this evening.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I do not think there is anyone else here who will object to my bill being considered.

Mr. STAFFORD. Others will come in later and will desire the same thing.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. That is a Senate bill, and it will undoubtedly have a chance to pass before the session adjourns. Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Before this evening's session adjourns?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. There are a good many bills on the calendar following the number which the gentleman has mentioned, but I will not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. Miller] to begin the calling of the Private Calendar at No. 443?

There was no objection.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

STEAMSHIP ESPARTA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3681) for the relief of the owners of the steamship Esparta.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask to have the bill reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owners of the British steam-ship Esparta against the United States for damages sustained by them in and on account of the collision between their said vessel and the United States lighthouse tender Magnolia on October 26, 1905, in the Passes of the Mississippi River, below New Orleans, be referred to the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Louisiana, with jurisdiction and authority to determine the liability of the United States therefor, and, if found liable, to render judgment against the United States for any damages sustained by the owners of said steam-ship Esparta. ship Esparta.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

ABSALOM C. PHILLIPS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7487) for the relief of Absalom C. Phillips,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.
Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?
Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, this is a very modest bill, and from the proof that I have in my possession there is no question about the equitable right of this man to recover. The bill is for only $447.16, and the Committee on War Claims, after hearing the proof, reported unanimously in favor of the bill. Mr. Phillips is a Union soldier, living in Newton County, in my district. He is a Methodist clergyman, a poor man, but a man of excellent influence and high character. He was appointed or elected second lieutenant of his company on September 9, 1863, and at once began serving as second lieutenant. and went abroad to recruit the company, Company E, Second Regiment Arkansas Volunteer Infantry, of which he was elected or appointed second lieutenant. He served in that capacity from that time on until the close of the war, and was a brave and able officer. He did not get his commission as second lieutenant until February 24, 1864. This bill is merely to pay him the difference between the salary of a second lieutenant and that of a first sergeant during these months when he was actually serving as second lieutenant, but during which time he did not have his commission.

Mr. MANN. And under the law he could not have a commission. There are probably thousands of these claims. There have been a great many before Congress which have not been paid.

Under the law a man could not get a commission unless the company was recruited to a certain strength. I do not think we ought to open up these claims now and commence to pay them after all these years. There are many, many of them.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Supreme Court has held that if a man is appointed to a position and performs the work that falls to him under that appointment, the fact that he did not get a written commission does not preclude him from collecting the salary due him under the appointment.

Mr. MANN. The law expressly provided that he could not have a commission or the pay.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not understand it that way.

Mr. MANN. That is undoubtedly the case. I have had these cases many times

Mr. TILLMAN. Here is a man who actually performed this service, and he certainly is not to blame if he did not get his commission. He performed the service, recruiting his company, wore the uniform of a second lieutenant, many times served as captain in the absence of his superior officer, and is not responsible for his failure to get his commission until some months after his promotion.

Mr. MANN. No; but the law is responsible. The law did not permit the commission to be granted to him until the company was recruited to a certain strength. There are many of those cases. The law specifically provided that they could not commission the new officers unless the companies were at a minimum strength. His company was not. He could not be granted a commission until his company was recruited to the minimum strength.

Mr. TILLMAN. He certainly is entitled to this relief, which is both just and equitable. I ask to be allowed to challenge and refute the facts as understood by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I think he was in luck to get the commission in the end.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. MANN. I object.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.
Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] is probably familiar with the Eastland disaster as it occurred on the Chicago River, although I would like to direct his attention to certain features in connection with this bill.

Mr. MANN. I have read all the reports and all the opinions in the case very carefully, I will say to the gentleman, and I do not think it is a debt of the Government.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I do not say that it is a legal debt, but it is a meritorious and equitable bill. I will say to the gentleman I have investigated the precedents, and I find precedents similar to this. For example, in Thirty-fifth United States Statutes, page 1525, is an act for the relief of S. R. Hurley passed in the Sixtieth Congress. Mr. Hurley was a member of a passed in the Sixteeth Congress. Mr. Hurley was a member of a posse of men who in July, 1905, under the direction of a deputy collector of internal revenue, were engaged in discovering illicit stills in the mountains in the vicinity of Jean, on the line between Kentucky and Virginia. The operators of the stills opened fire on the officers, which was returned, and two of the illicit distillers were killed. Hurley and five others of the posse were indicted by the State of Kentucky, and of course had to make a defense.

The indictment was prosecuted at the instigation of the distillers, who were determined that the men be convicted if possible, but they were acquitted. A bill was introduced to reimburse Hurley for his expenses in carrying on his defense. Congress, after submitting the matter to the then Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Cortelyou, and to the then Attorney General, Mr. Bonaparte, passed the bill. Both the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General recommended the passage of the bill. The Attorney General said, among other things, in his letter recommending its passage:

Hurley appears from these papers to have been put to considerable expense in and about his defense to a criminal prosecution and a civil suit based upon the foregoing facts. This department thinks it advisable, as a matter of public policy, as well as of justice, for the Government to protect officers who have faithfully performed a dangerous public duty and by reason thereof have become involved in expensive litigation.

Now, as the gentleman from Illinois says he has read the report of the committee, which goes into this matter very fully, he will notice that these men went from Grand Haven, Mich., voluntarily to Chicago at the request of their superior officer, the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Redfield. They testified volun-tarily in the hearing which was conducted there, even after they were unjustly arrested by the State authorities of Illinois, handcuffed, and marched through the streets of Chicago. Afterwards they were released upon a writ of habeas corpus, the grand jury of the State of Illinois returning no indictment against them, but they were indicted by the Federal grand jury twice and were put to a great deal of expense. The Federal district judge in the city of Grand Rapids, for the western district of Michigan, after a full hearing, held there was no evidence that tended to show that they were guilty of any of the charges in the indictment. To use his language:

The evidence in this matter wholly fails to establish probable cause r believing any of these defendants guilty of any crime charged in the indictments.

These expenses were incurred by them in the performance of their duty as officers of the Federal Government. I have other precedents here which I would be glad to call to the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] if it would cause him to withdraw his objection to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman, I think I am familiar with the greater portion of the precedents but I will be very glad to examine the rest of them. I have a great deal of sympathy for these inspectors and did not join in the feeling against them, but I do not think we are under any obligation to pay these legal expenses. I think they got off pretty well. would be very thankful if I had been in their place to get off as well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
Mr. MANN. I will examine the rest of the precedents.
Mr. MAPES. I think the gentleman from Illinois must take the finding of the court as conclusive that there was no reasonable cause for the indictment against these inspectors

Mr. MANN. I would think more of them if they had submitted to trial, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MAPES. But they would have had a great deal more expense if they had been required to go to Chicago to defend themselves, and they were strictly within their rights in resisting the warrant for their removal to Chicago.

Mr. MANN. Very likely. Mr. MAPES. I would li I would like to read for the benefit of the gentleman and the House a part of the opinion of the court-

Mr. MANN. I have read the opinion of the court. tleman can read that for somebody else's benefit, not mine. I

Mr. MAPES. Perhaps this particular part may have escaped the attention of the gentleman: Mr. MAPES.

Aside from the fact that the vessel capsized and the testimony of one witness whose theories are shown to be incorrect by actual experience and indisputable facts, there is no satisfactory evidence to sustain these allegations of the indictment. Every other witness competent to testify upon the subject has said that the ship, if properly handled and navigated, was seaworthy and was capable of carrying in safety the number of people on board of her at the time of the accident. She was not in a leaky condition and was not lacking in necessary and proper equipment. She was constructed with water-ballast tanks, and if a sufficient number of the tanks had been filled with permanent water ballast she would not have been top-heavy with any load which she was authorized to carry.

Mr. MANN. Let me say to the gentleman that there are many people in Chicago who believe that the General Government ought to recompense the families of those who lost their lives, as they think, because of the negligence of these two inspectors. I do not agree with that. I do not think the Government is responsible. I have said that to these people, who have some sort of a union or organization in order to try to get the General Government to pay because of the negligence of these inspectors. I do not think we are responsible. I do not think we are responsible for the inspectors getting off scot free. I have some doubt as to whether they are guilty or not guilty.

Mr. MAPES. These inspectors were officers of the Government and were performing a public duty.

Mr. MANN. They were officers of the Government charged with the performance of a public duty. Some people do not think they performed it. I do not think that has anything to do with this question.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman reiterates that so much, I am afraid he has imbibed some of the prejudice against these inspectors which the other people of Chicago have to which he calls attention.

Mr. MANN. I do not see how we can recompense these inspectors unless we recompense probably the families of the people who lost their lives. There were a great many of them.

Mr. MAPES. I submit that the cases are very much different. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

In line 4, strike out the comma, after the word "Bonner," and the words "in and to" and insert the word "for."

In line 9, strike out the period, after the word "Bonner," and insert a comma, and insert the words "upon his paying to the Government the sum of $1.25 per acre."

Be it enacted, etc. That Riverside Military Academy and its bondsmen be relieved of all responsibility on bond given to the United States by the Riverside Military Academy for the loss of two cutters and their outfits, valued at $1,608.77, which property was destroyed by a storm on the night of December 31, 1915.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4417) for the relief of George L. Thomas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, a bill similar to this in every respect passed the Senate last night and is now on the Speaker's table-S. 2749. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill be substituted in lieu of the House bill on the calendar.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. It is S. 2749.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

An act (S. 2749) for the relief of George L. Thomas.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of George L. Thomas, postmaster at New Bethlehem, Pa., in the sum of $5,711.93, and to certify the said credit to the Auditor for the Post Office Department, being the amount of money-order funds embezzled by Ella E. Latimer, an employee in said post office, without fault or negligence on the part of the said George L. Thomas.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have a little information on this bill. I would like to know what it is about.

Mr. EDMONDS. The Thomas bill?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; the bill that was read just now.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Thomas was postmaster at New Bethlehem, Pa. During his postmastership or during the preceding postmastership the young lady who had charge of the moneyorder fund embezzled this amount of money.

Mr. SABATH. Was not he or she under a bond?
Mr. EDMONDS. She was under a bond.
Mr. SABATH. Well, what became of the bondsmen?
Mr. EDMONDS. The bond was not sufficient to cover the amount she embezzled.

The Secretary of the Treasury says:

There is no evidence in the Auditor's office tending to show that Postmaster Thomas did not exercise proper supervision over the affairs of his office. I believe, therefore, that the bill is meritorious, and I recommend that it be given favorable consideration.

Mr. SABATH. What was the total amount of the embezzlement?

Mr. EDMONDS. Six thousand one hundred and eighteen dollars and eighty cents.

Mr. SABATH. What was the amount of the bond?

Mr. EDMONDS. Evidently about $500. I suppose it was that. This Miss Latimer was indicted and was sentenced to jail for 30 days and required to pay a fine of $6,118.80, which she did not do. She made false entries in the cash book.
Mr. SABATH. How large a city was this?
Mr. EDMONDS. I do not know.

Mr. SABATH. That is a rather small bond for a postmaster.

Mr. MANN. That was not the postmaster's bond.
Mr. SABATH. Whoever the clerk was who handled the funds, the bond should have been sufficient. I would like to know if the money was recovered from the bondsmen.

Mr. FOSTER. No. Mr. SABATH. If there is a defalcation and people come down here for relief, and if bond is given, it ought to be enforced and paid.

Mr. EDMONDS. Miss Latimer's sureties have since refunded $375.

Mr. HASTINGS. Did the Post Office Department recommend it?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understand a suit is pending to recover this amount from the bondsmen. The Post Office Department says, however, that there was no fault on the part of the postmaster. The money was embezzied by a classified clerk of the civil service, employed under the bond fixed by the Post Office Department, without the fault of the postmaster. At least, that is what the inspector reports. Of course, the postmaster's bondsmen are liable.

Mr. SABATH. I do not like to impose hardships upon innocent people, but a great many bonds are given, and when there is a default some of these companies that advertise that they pay their obligations do not meet their obligations. I would like to know whether this surety company has paid its obligathat the postmaster will have to pay it if we do not relieve him, not the surety company. This case is a good deal similar to the Chicago case that we had a few years ago, that we passed, relieving the Chicago postmaster of $173,000.

Mr. SABATH. I know; and we have relieved the surety companies of that obligation.

Mr. COX. I agree with the gentleman that he is striking at very vital point. The Post Office Committee has done its best in the last four or five years to get rid of this very evil by a law whereby the bonding company will be taken out of this and a fund contributed by the employees themselves

Mr. SABATH. I say that there are some companies that pay their obligations. I wanted to know if others do or not.

Mr. HASTINGS. Do I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Edmonds] to say that this clerk who embezzled the money was tried and given only 30 days?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is what the report says. She was sent to the Armstrong County jail for 30 days and sentenced to pay a fine of $6,118. Since then $375 has been refunded. That was in the Federal court.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

W. L. ROSE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17304) for the relief of W. L. Rose.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment? Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Yes.
Mr. EDMONDS. I would like to call attention to the fact that while our committee has not brought out these claims for lost clothing as a general thing, in this case every man on this boat was reimbursed except this man, W. L. Rose, and it seemed only just and fair to the committee that we should reimburse him in common with the rest of them.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a great many bills of this character on the calendar, and more constantly coming, on the assumption that the United States insures the clothing and personal effects of officers and employees of the Government who go upon the sea. I do not think we do insure them. Nobody thinks we insure them if they get hurt on the railroad. We have not got to that point yet, but soon will, if we go on the assumption that we insure their personal effects when they go upon the sea. They can insure them themselves, if they want to, or, if not, they can do without the insurance.

Mr. EDMONDS. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that when there is a loss of clothing or personal effects by anybody connected with the Navy, the Navy Department pays for it, and there is a fund intended for their relief in this respect.

Mr. MANN. I know we have started to do that, much to my regret and against my will. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ISABEL E BOCKWELL

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6207) for the relief of Isabel E. Rockwell.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read as follows:

like to know whether this surety company has paid its obligation and paid the bond?

Mr. MANN. Well, there is a suit pending against the postmaster or his bondsmen to recover this amount, and I am told

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, cut of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Isabel E. Rockwell, widow of John V. Rockwell, deceased, late rural mail carrier on route No. 1, of Carpinteria, Cal., the sum of $1,500.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, strike out "$1,500" and insert "$990."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed. EUGENE FAZZI.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17406) for the relief of Eugene Fazzi.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Eugene Fazzi the sum of $5,000 as compensation for the loss of a foot on March 8, 1916, while in the discharge of his duty as a deckhand on the steamship General Joseph E. Johnston, in the service of the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army

With the following committee amendment:
Page 1, line 6, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$720."

tee amendment.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I hope this committee amendment will not pass. Eugene Fazzi was a young man, I should say, about 25 or 26 years of age. While employed on the steamer General Joseph E. Johnston, in the service of the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, on a slippery day last March his leg was caught in a rope with which they were trying to fasten the boat to the wharf. His leg was severed above the knee and fell into the Hudson River. Since that time he has been unable to obtain any employment whatever. He has never received anything from the Government except an artificial leg that he can not use as yet. We hope he will be able to use it later. He has made application for employment in a number of positions but has failed to receive any. machinist, and on account of the loss of his leg, and the liability under the workmen's compensation laws, they will not accept him for employment. I endeavored to get him a position as a telephone operator in the Government service. He was refused. I asked the Civil Service Commission to suspend the civil-service rules so that he could get such a position, and they refused. think that to give a young man in his twenties, crippled for life, only $720 for the loss of a leg is an outrage, and I think the amount for which I introduced this bill, $5,000, is a very small amount. I hope the committee amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. OVERMYER. Will the gentleman advise us how long this man was in the service?

Mr. BROWNING. I do not know, and it does not make any difference. If he was there only one day, he was in the discharge of his duty, the same as a man going to war and getting killed or wounded. He never told me how long he was in the service.

Mr. COX. How much would he get under the Federal employees' liability act?

Mr. BROWNING. I have not the least idea. Under the old act he is not able to get anything.

I do not think it would apply to him.

Mr. BROWNING. I do not think so, either.

Mr. COX. I am just wondering whether he would get more under the Federal employees' liability act than he would under the amendment set out in this bill.

Mr. BROWNING. I should think he would. I do not think $720 for a young man who is crippled for life and unable to get a position is any kind of compensation when his injury was received through no fault of his own.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Under the law this man would not receive anything; and the committee in acting on this case followed the policy that has been pretty generally adopted by the committee in regard to making allowances in cases of personal injury; that is, to allow one year's salary. The committee were informed that this man was receiving compensation at the rate of $720 a year, and that is the amount that the committee have allowed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the new law would not that be for more than a year?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Perhaps so; but this man would not receive anything at all under the compensation act. He did not fall within the class who received compensation.

Mr. STAFFORD. My impression is that in the case of a permanent injury his compensation would run as long as he lives,

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. In a case of total disability I think, perhaps, it would be 66% per cent of his salary for a period of two years.

Mr. BROWNING. Under the last compensation act he would have to apply before the 4th of March, even if the case came under that law. It allows persons injured one year's time in which to apply. He was injured, I think, on the 4th of March, 1916.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Has he never worked since? Mr. BROWNING. He has never worked since, and has been unable to get a position.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. It is a pretty heart-rending task to serve on this committee, on these personal-injury cases. But to substantiate what the chairman of the committee has said, I want to state to the gentleman that in only two cases last year, and those where there was total disability, where people were strapped on their backs and helpless from paralysis, have we ever allowed more than a year's salary.

Mr. BROWNING. That does not make it right.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. One was for $3,000 and the other was for $5,000.

Mr. BROWNING. Here is a young man in the early prime of life, 25 or 26 years old, deprived of the capacity to earn a living for the balance of his life on account of this accident, which occurred through no fault of his own. Capt. Bernard. who commanded the steamer, has written me to that effect, and has sent me a great many letters to try to have this bill passed to allow the compensation stated in the bill as I introduced it.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The gentleman from Delaware says that that has been the policy of the committee. I think it has been because we found in the past that the House would not stand for more than one year's salary. I think now in a case like this the House might be a little more liberal.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think there have been a number of cases in which they have been more liberal.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I do not think there have een cases where we ever allowed more than one year's salary.

Mr. STAFFORD. Since Congress passed the workmen's compensation act has the committee been guided in their allowance y the amount that would have been allowed the claimant by the terms of that act?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. No; in matters like this, for a gratuity, we have been following the same policy adopted prior to that time.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out "$720" and inserting "$2,500."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi has the floor.

Mr. BROWNING. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thought he had finished.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I demand the regular order.
Mr. BROWNING. Then, Mr. Speaker, I make a motion to amend by inserting "$2,500."

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman from New Jersey know that that will probably kill the bill, either in this body or in the other body? We have occasionally, not wisely, passed bills giving a larger amount than would have been allowed parties that came within the law. I think invariably-there might be an exception-the Senate committee turned it down. There is no probability that this bill will ever become a law with the amount changed, either in this Congress or in any other. think it is a question of whether the gentleman wants to get $720.

Mr. BROWNING. I will admit, Mr. Speaker, that $720 would come in very handy to this young man. The family is in destitute circumstances

Mr. MANN. His family is in the same fix that thousands of others are.

Mr. BROWNING. I think that $720 is a ridiculously low sum to pay any young man who has lost a leg.

Mr. MANN. But there is a possibility that he may not get anything at all.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest that once or twice we have passed a bill providing for more than one year's compensation, and when the bill reached the Senate-I remember one instance in particular-the amount was cut down to one year's salary.

Mr. MANN. And in some of these cases there have been objections made to the bill, and it has not been considered at all.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that under the New Jersey compensation law this man would get about $2,100.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but he is not making the claim under the New Jersey law.

Mr. BROWNING. Of course not; he was serving in New York in the Government service.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, in the Sixty-first Congress I entered my protest against Congress passing bills of a similar character. At that time, I think, a committee of this House reported a bill to pay a widow $500 for the loss of her husband in the Government service. Now, I said then that it was a reflection upon our sense of justice to ask us to put that contemptible valuation upon a human life.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. As I said, it is a hard task to have to report these bills, but we have to live up to the policy of Congress in the past.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will never live up to a wrong policy adopted by a previous Congress. We ought in the consideration of these cases to let our high sense of honor and our conscience dictate our course and not the previous action or policy of any administration or any Congress. Put ourselves in the place of one of these unfortunates, the one whose case is now under consideration, with the loss of his leg, without fault on his part, in the discharge of his duty in the Government service. There is not a man on the floor of this House who would sit on a jury and bring in a verdict similar to the amount carried in this bill. If you did it, you would forfeit the respect of your friends

Now, let us lay aside what somebody else has done, what some other Congress has enacted, what bill has been passed giving a year's compensation in payment of the life of a Government This man is a cripple for life. I do not know whether he has a dependent mother or a wife and children.

Mr. BROWNING. He has a dependent mother.
Mr. AUSTIN. He has a dependent mother. Now, I do not believe there is an enlightened State in this Union which has a compensation law on the statute book fixing so small an amount for the loss of a limb. If a State of the Union can pass legislation which is just and fair, why can not a combination of 48 States, representing the richest Government on the face of this earth, measure up in these matters with the action of a small State in the Union, with a limited population and limited taxable resources and wealth. Let us administer justice here just as though we were on the bench in a court of justice.

Mr. WILSON of Florida. Does the gentleman make a distinction between whether there is a liability or not? He speaks of a jury's verdict. We sue in the courts because there is a liability incurred. This is not a liability. It is almost a gift. Mr. AUSTIN. No; it is not a gift. How can you say in all fairness that it is a gift when a man in the discharge of his duties in the Government service, without any fault on his part, loses his limb?

Mr. McCRACKEN. Is not it a fact that this country is considering whether or not it might go to war with another country because the rights of humanity are involved, and has not this man a right to his life and liberty from the time he entered the service of the United States Government on a Government transport, and do we not owe him a duty at this time?

Mr. AUSTIN. Of course, we owe him a duty, but it is no recompense to pay him $720. It is an insult to our sense of justice to ask us to vote this sum.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. GARLAND. Just now we are on the point of taking over factories, and we will have a great many employees asked to go into the Government service. Whether that situation affects this or not, this is true, that we are now attempting to get men to join the Army and Navy. Is this kind of reward for an injury any incentive for a man to join?

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, it is not justice; it is not fair; it is not right. You can not lay your hand upon your heart and remember your conscience and say such a settlement is just.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. FARR. It was stated a little while ago by some gentleman that this injured man would receive 66% per cent of a year's salary if he were subject to the provisions of the McCiller description. salary if he were subject to the provisions of the McGillicuddy compensation measure enacted at the last session of Congress. He would receive 663 per cent of his monthly wage continuously as long as he was disabled, under the McGillicuddy Act, and that is the law the provisions of which, in justice, should influence us to-night in this sad case.

Mr. ALMON. That would be retroactive. Mr. FARR. I know that; but I think we ought to work under the more liberal and humane provisions of that law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the workmen's compensation act he would in case of partial disability receive a monthly compensation equal to 66% per cent of the difference between his monthly pay and his monthly wage-earning capacity at the be-ginning of such partial disability. Of course, in this case he is not totally disabled. He is totally disabled from performing the work that he performed prior to the injury, but there is no disguising the fact that a man with a cork leg can perform some work, such as that of watchman or guard; but that percentage would apply for life.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to say this: There is not a man in this House who would be willing to lose his leg and be paid a compensation of $50,000 for it, and it is no excuse to say here that if we increase this amount the United States Senate will reduce it. I can take that record and defeat any Member of the United States Senate before the people, if that is his estimate and his idea of justice, and you can defeat any man in this House who will go before an enlightened constituency and take that position.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I do not rise to disagree with my friend, but I want to ask him to permit us to vote upon this, because we have only an hour and a half left to go over the rest of the calendar, and I am sure the House has been influenced by his speech and is ready to vote.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am ready to vote.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, somebody spoke to-night saying that the United States Senate is not willing to allow this payment. I have in my hand a copy of the Washington Times of to-day, in which it says that the Senate to-day passed a bill providing for the payment of $2,500 to one Jennings because of the amputation of his left arm, due to an accident while he was employed as a painter at the Washington Navy

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I remember a little incident which took place in this House in a former Congress, to which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin] referred a moment ago, and I think my recollection of it is a little more accurate than his. An emnibus bill was reported to the House carrying a number of cases for personal injuries. When the first item came up in the House some one moved to increase the amount to $5,000. I think it was the gentleman from Tennessee AUSTIN], although upon that matter his recollection would be better than mine. The House increased the amount to $5,000, and then it increased the amount in each of the other cases to $5,000. I remember the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] had a bill on the calendar providing for the payment of six or seven hundred dollars to some one, and he started to ask to insert his item in the omnibus bill. I said to him, "You better not do that; you have a chance to get your bill enacted into law, while this bill has not the chance of a snowflake in hades," and it never was passed, and people who were provided with something in it have not gotten it, and that will be the

Mr. HELGESEN. To the disgrace of the Government.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says to the disgrace of the Government. When I came here nothing was paid on these accounts, and then we passed a law providing that people in certain hazardous occupations should receive an amount not exceeding one year's salary. You may say that was not enough, but certainly it is not fair to give to some one who does not come within the terms of that law more than we would give if he enjoyed the benefit of the law. It would not be fair to say that you could give to certain people engaged in hazardous occupations a year's salary under the law and say that people who did not come within that law can get a great deal more than those who do enjoy its benefit. That would not be fair. That is what the committee has taken as its standard. We have increased the amount since then by the McGillicuddy Act, and is what the committee has taken as its standard. it may be that after a while we will go back and from the very beginning of the Government pay to everyone, or his or her heirs, an amount equal to that which we pay now to those who are injured while in the Government service. I doubt whether we ever will, and I am sure we will be asked to go back a great many years. After all, you have got to draw the line somewhere.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. AUSTIN. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 45. So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to make it $2,000— Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to my friend from Tennessee, as well as to other Members of the House, we all know there are a great many of these bills that are very meritorious. I represent one claim here where a man—a United States deputy marshal performing his duty—was killed by some Indians and left a widow and a small child without any means of support whatever. The committee has cut it to one year's salary, yet it will be a godsend for them if they can get that. There are a great many equally meritorious bills on this calendar. Now, if we are going to spend the evening in useless debate, if we are going to waste time in presenting amendments that will not and can not be adopted, practically filibustering, we will do a great injury to many deserving people; and it does seem to me, in view of the statement of the minority leader and in view of the statement of the committee, which has been fair, that we ought not delay the consideration of these bills at all. We have only had, as I recollect it, about one or two opportunities of this kind, before to-night, during the past 8 or 10 months, and now if some few gentlemen take up most of this evening trying to get a little raise to some two or three bills that probably ought to be raised; but if they can not do it, for Heaven's sake let our other friends go ahead, let us take what the committee will give us and get some of them through rather than filibuster or waste the whole night here and never get anything for anybody. This may possibly be the last time this calendar is called this session of Congress, and I appeal to the gentleman's sense of fairness to let us proceed.

Mr. AUSTIN. How did the gentleman vote on this proposition?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I voted against that amendment. Of course I did, because I thought it was the safe and proper thing to do, just as Mr. Mann, of Illinois, did. If the gentleman is going to try to load these bills down this way, he will kill all of them. They will have no more chance than a snowball in Mexico. I hope the gentleman will not take up the time of the House longer.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I deny the gentleman's statement that I am filibustering on this bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Well, sir-

Mr. AUSTIN. I think I have some rights as a Member of this

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Somebody will make a point of no quorum if this proceeding keeps up much longer.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think I can come in here and offer an amendment and discuss it without being charged with an attempt at

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Well, you have already offered one amendment to this bill, and the House has voted that down.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; and you will have another.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; and then somebody will make a point of no quorum, and where will the gentleman's bill go and where will all the other claims go? They will be killed by useless discussion and amendments.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to be taken off my feet or withdraw my motion because the gentleman is anxious to reach one of his bills. I have got some bills on this calendar,

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. My bills are already passed over and can not be reached to-night, but there are many other gentlemen who have meritorious measures that they want to reach to-night if possible.

Mr. AUSTIN. They can speak for themselves.
Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I can say to the gentleman right now, we will get nowhere in about five minutes at this rate.
Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman will get nowhere in endeavoring to run me off the floor of the House by charging filibustering. If there is any filibustering, the gentleman is in it.

Now, the attention of the House has been called to the fact that the Senate last night unanimously passed a bill voting $2,500 for the loss of an arm of a Government employee. Does this House want to stand on record as fixing the estimate of $700 for the loss of a limb?

I know these sums were insignificant in the Sixty-first Congress. You were attempting to fight them and appealing for justice to create a sentiment in Congress against that policy, and as a result that Congress did wake up and pass a general bill, the McGillicuddy bill, to increase the amount. The agitation of this question and the calling of attention to the injustice and unfairness of it will have its effect whether in this Congress or not. Justice will not down. It is not justice; it may be temporarily called justice, but the time will come when the sentiment of this country will demand an increased amount covering the loss of a life or limb.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I am in sympathy with the argument the gentleman makes, and I think the House generally is, but I would like to ask whether the remedy for this would not be to repeal the act of May 30, 1908, known as the workman's compensation act, which fixes the amount of compensation as a measure of damage to be paid in a case of this kind?

I ask the gentleman this because I am representing a colleague to-night who has a bill here for the relief of the foster mother of a man who was killed in the service, for which only $480, or a year's compensation, is to be paid. Is the remedy not in repealing existing law, which fixed such miserable compensa-

Mr. AUSTIN. I think we will get an amendment of that law when we call public attention to this character of cases here in the House of Representatives.

Mr. BROWNING. We have an amendment to it now.

Mr. AUSTIN. In the very case the gentleman cites, under the Federal compensation law Congress has fixed $400 as the valuation of a human life. Now, can you beat it?

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. AUSTIN. Yes. Mr. SABATH. Is it not a fact that by the House adopting the compensation bill in the last Congress it recognized the fact that formerly the compensation which we have allowed on claims was too small?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that that law expressly provides it will only affect people injured after the act takes effect?

Mr. AUSTIN. The House did recognize the fact, I presume, that the pay we allowed at that time was too small.

Mr. MANN. If we wanted to provide for these cases, why did we not do it on the new basis?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; but we legislated last year. We are legislating on these cases now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.
Mr. AUSTIN. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were-ayes 30, noes 43.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

JOHN SIMPSON.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3743) to reimburse John Simpson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

The oill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100 to John Simpson, of Pulaski County, Ky., to reimburse him for damages arising from the destruction of a creek ford due to backwater created by the construction of Lock and Dam No. 21 on the Cumberland River, and which payment is recommended to Congress by the Chief of Engineers, with a renewed recommendation therefor, in his annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915 (pp. 1085, 2837, and 2838), which is printed as House Document No. 91, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time,

was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES W. CROSS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4807) for the relief of James W. Cross

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the DUTIES ON FLAX-PREPARATORY MACHINES.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4384) providing for the refund of duties collected on flax-preparatory machines, parts, and accessories imported subsequently to August 5, 1909, and prior to January 1, 1911.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object-

Objection is heard, and the The SPEAKER pro tempore. Clerk will report the next bill.

JAMES M. MOORE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11498) making an appropriation to compensate James M. Moore for damages sustained while in the service of the Government of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and the same is hereby, appropriated the sum of $5,000 in payment of James M. Moore, late of Company L, Twenty-eighth Regiment United States Infantry, transferred from Company M, First United States Infantry, for injuries sustained while in the service of the Government in the Philippine Islands as a teamster in a runaway accident on May 20, 1907.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Line 4, after the word "of," strike out "$5,000" and insert "$840."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out all after the word "Moore," in line 4, down to and including the word "Infantry," in line 7, reading as follows: "Late of Company L, Twenty-eighth Regiment United States Infantry, transferred from Company M, First United States Infantry." He was not in the Government service when the injury occurred.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HORACE G. KNOWLES.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 20185) for the relief of Horace G. Knowles.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. MANN.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this man was minister to Nicaragua, and in waiting here, the same as Ambassador Fletcher has been waiting here on account of troubles in Mexico, he was allowed certain compensation by the Department of State, and could have gotten the amount claimed in this bill, but he did not send in his draft until after the amount had been covered back into the Treasury out of the appropriation; and the Department of State has no objection to the passage of this bill.

Mr. MANN. Well, the law allowed this man to be paid three months' salary. The department offered to pay him that amount, and he was very stubborn about it, and he told the department to "go to," and they went. Now he has gotten on his knees and wants us to pay it. He took his choice about it, and we are under no obligations to pay it.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I will say to the gentleman that he is not on his knees.

Mr. MANN. If he is not on his knees he ought not to have s money. [Laughter.]

his money.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. While I do not believe in getting down on your knees to any Government department, even to Congress, I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. MANN. I think I am obliged to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ESTATE OF JOHN C. PHILLIPS, DECEASED.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8573) for the relief of the estate of John C. Phillips, deceased.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker-

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask that it be passed over. Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina rose.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Is objection raised?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object. Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Is the gentleman determined to object to it?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have examined it. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JANNA STOPPELS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19978) for the relief of Janna Stoppels.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know something about this bill.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as I reported the bill from the committee, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that it appropriates no money but enables a mother of a deceased soldier, a widow herself, to obtain what is due the beneficiary or soldier under the law, namely, six months' pay and whatever was coming to him at the time he died. It grows out of the recent Mexican trouble.

Mr. SABATH. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Janua Stoppels, mother of William Stoppels, late of Company L, Thirty-second Regiment Michigan National Guard Infantry, shall be regarded as the duly designated beneficiary of the late William Stoppels under the act approved May 11, 1908, as amended by the act approved March 3, 1909.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next

CHARLES LEE BAKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 6154) for the relief of Charles Lee Baker.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois withhold his objection in order to permit me to make a statement?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I will. Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a meritorious one and should be passed.

Charles Lee Baker was born February 16, 1872. He was 26 years old when he entered the military service as a contract surgeon July 9, 1898. He has had 17 years of service as contract surgeon and member of the Medical Reserve Corps Military record: Contract surgeon, July 9, 1898, to May 31, 1899; September 1, 1900, to August 25, 1908. First lieutenant, Medical Reserve Corps, August 25, 1908, to present date.

Disability: Dr. Baker's disability is deafness incurred in the service in line of duty. He has been receiving the best medical treatment for several years, but without practical results which warrant his indulging the hope of being restored to a normal condition. Capt. R. H. Goldthwaite, of the Medical Corps, in his official report on Dr. Baker, says:

There is no prospect of any marked improvement in hearing, and under field conditions further inflammation of middle ear and further loss of hearing is to be expected.

As an indication of the degree of deafness in Dr. Baker's case, Capt. R. H. Goldthwaite, Medical Corps, United States Army, further states in his official report that the hearing is as follows:

Whispered voice, 1 foot for right ear and 3 feet for left ear (20 feet is normal).

Ticking of watch: Right ear not even heard on contact; left ear heard at 3 inches (3 feet is normal).

The official indorsement of the Surgeon General of the Army is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, SURGEON GENERAL'S OFFICE, June 8, 1916.

TO THE ADJUTANT GENERAL OF THE ARMY:

1. Recommending favorable consideration.
2. Lieut, Baker is now sick at the Walter Reed General Hospital, Tokoma Park, D. C., with chronic otitis media incurred in the line of duty. He has had nearly 17 years of service as contract surgeon and member of the Medical Reserve Corps.

(Signed) W. C. Gorgas,

Surgeon General United States Army.

The official indorsement of the Secretary of War is as follows: JUNE 10, 1916.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS, United States Senate:

Referring to S. 6154, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, a bill for the relief of Dr. Charles Lee Baker, which is returned herewith, I have the honor to inform you that it appears from the records of the War Department that Dr. Baker was born February 16, 1872; that he served as a contract surgeon from July 9, 1898, to May 31, 1899, and from September 1, 1900, to August 25, 1908, and has served as a first lieutenant in the Medical Reserve Corps since August 13, 1908.

In view of the fact that Dr. Baker has served for more than 16 years in the Medical Department of the Army and has contracted a disability in the line of duty, I recommend that the bill in question be favorably considered.

Very respectfully,

(Signed) W. M. INGRAHAM, Assistant Secretary of War.

Dr. Baker's disability renders him unfit for further duty in the service or in civil life in the practice of his profession. This disability was incurred while serving in the Philippines and in the Hawaiian Islands-about one-half of this time having been spent in the foreign service. Provision is made by Congress for disabilities incurred in every other branch of the service. A surgeon in the Medical Corps would be no less efficient if he were transferred to the Medical Reserve Corps, and vice versa.

There is no doubt that the War Department expects and receives the same standard of service from its surgeons in either corps. It is only right and equitable that Dr. Baker's disability, incurred while serving 17 years as a surgeon, shall merit the same reward as if he had served in the Medical Corps instead of the Medical Reserve Corps. The difficulty in Dr. Baker's case is that there is no statute which permits retirement as a member of the Medical Reserve Corps. Dr. Baker has always been a first lieutenant in the Medical Reserve Corps, the lowest rank provided by law for medical officers. This bill authorizes the President to transfer him as a first lieutenant to the Medical Corps and then retire him.

In addition to that, this bill passed the Senate and was reported to this House. The Committee on Military Affairs, to which the bill was referred, unanimously reported the bill back with a recommendation that it be passed.

After 17 years' service it strikes me, and especially when the individual is incapacitated by reason of these disabilities, that it ought to be the pleasure of this House to pass this bill, and there should be no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I dislike to object to bills of this character. It is a hard case. But there are a great many hard cases where men in the Government service are injured. Personally I am not in favor of extending the retired list in the Army beyond what the law allows. In fact, if I had my own way about it, I would considerably restrict the retirement laws of the Army and the Navy. There is no one who would not like to get on that retired list. I would like it myself, but I never will. The mere fact that some one has served in the Government service for years is no reason for putting him on the retired list of the Army.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MANN. Not now. This man was a contract surgeon.
He was not a Regular officer of the Army. If he had been a Regular officer of the Army, he would have been placed on the retired list. But the law does not put contract surgeons upon the retired list, and I do not see any reason why we should make an exception in favor of one man when we do not provide for the others.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not draw this distinction, that this man was injured in line of service while serving in line of military duty. The Secretary of War, in making his report on it, asserts that such is the fact, and so does the Surgeon General, and it seems to me that under those circumstances a distinction exists that the gentleman has not drawn.

Mr. MANN. Lots of clerks working for the War Department not eligible to the retired list are injured or else by reason of age become incapacitated in the service, but we do not put them on the retired list. They would like to be put there, and it may be that they should be.

Mr. McKELLAR. But this man was performing the service of a medical officer in the Regular Army.

Mr. MANN. He was performing the service of a contract surgeon

Mr. McKELLAR. Let us admit his service was probably the same as would have been performed by a Regular officer.

Yes; but he had the same rank and pay as a Mr. MANN. Regular officer.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if the same rule governs the Senate as governs this com-

Mr. MANN. No rules govern the Senate committee or the Senate in reference to matters when some Senator is personally interested.

Mr. McKellar. I want to say to the gentleman that this is a meritorious case. I am confident of it both from reading the report and from having seen the officer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

WILLIAM O. SARBER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4359) to amend the military record of William O. Sarber.
The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object, I should like to know something about this bill, either from the committee or from the gentleman who introduced it.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, the report shows that this soldier enlisted in 1862 for three months, and was honorably dis-charged. He again enlisted in March, 1865, and was charged with desertion July, 1865, after the war was over.

Mr. SABATH. How long was he in the service the second time?

Mr. FIELDS. From March, 1865, to July, 1865.
Mr. SABATH. The first time only three months?
Mr. FIELDS. The first time three months. He served out his first enlistment. On his second enlistment, after the war was over, a number of soldiers, 20, I believe, went away, as many others did, subsequently returning for their discharges.

It seems from the testimony that there was some difficulty between this soldier and his captain, and when the 20 men who had been away for some 20 days returned, the captain said to this man, "If you go to apply for your discharge I will have you arrested and court-martialed," and he was thereby intimidated and did not apply for his discharge, while it seems that the others who were with him went and applied for their discharges and received them.

Mr. SABATH. What are you aiming to do by this bill?

Mr. SABATH. What are you aming to do by this bill.

Mr. FIELDS. To hold that he was honorably discharged.

Mr. SABATH. I object—

Mr. GALLAGHER. I can tell the gentleman something about this bill. It was introduced by the gentleman from Illinois

SYLVESTER HANNAN, ALIAS HENRY EDWARDS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9402) for the relief of Sylvester Hannan, alias Henry Edwards. The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws, Sylvester Hannan, alias Henry Edwards, late of Company K, Twelfth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and Company D, Third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of Company D, Third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, on August 1, 1862.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "sixty-two," insert "Provided, That no pay, pension, bounty, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The committee agreement was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JOHN W. CUPP.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 147) for the relief of John W. Cupp.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CHARLES LYNCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14763) for the relief of Charles Lynch.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I should like to know about this bill.

Mr. TILSON. This man enlisted to serve for three years, and served faithfully to within less than three months of the expiration of his term of service. The regiment had been sent home to be recruited up and was returning to the front. When on board a boat at New York preparatory to sailing this soldier was permitted by the company commander to go over the gangplank to get some tobacco. While away from the boat making his purchases the boat pulled out. He came back to the dock in time to see the boat backing out into the channel. He waved his arms frantically, but the boat continued out to sea, and he was left on the dock.

Mr. FIELDS. The boat carrying all his baggage and everything?

Mr. TILSON. Yes; he left his baggage, equipment, and everything else, except the uniform he wore, on the boat. He was approached by an alleged friend, who said to him, "If you are caught with this uniform on, you will be arrested and all sorts of evil things will happen to you, but if you will come with me I will see you well out of it." So this man went away with his new-found friend to Boston. There, 12 days after he had been left in New York, he enlisted in a Massachusetts Cavalry regiment and went right away to the front again.

Mr. GALLAGHER. How much bounty did he get?

Mr. TILSON. That was the only question that came up which caused the committee to hesitate. We investigated and were unable to find that he got any bounty. He gave positive testimony that he received none. It appeared to the committee to be one of those cases where a bounty shark had exploited an ignorant soldier. We were unable to find evidence, however, that any bounty had been paid to anyone, though it is quite possible that it was paid to the alleged friend. The fact remains, however, that the soldier reenlisted, went to the front, and served until the 9th of August, 1865. You will note that he served the entire war through with the exception of 12 days. He got an honorable discharge for his last service, but on account of his first service being technically "not faithful," being marked as a deserter, he can not now receive a pension. He is now old and crippled and sorely needs a pension. We believe his long service entitles him to it.

Mr. SABATH. Any man who was left in New York was mished enough. [Laughter.] I shall not object.

Mr. MEEKER. Do I understand this man went ashore to get some tobacco

Mr. TILSON. That is what he testifies, that he went ashore to get tobacco.

Mr. MEEKER. Should not that be held up as a warning to everybody against the horrible habit of using tobacco? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring the rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Charles Lynch, who was a private in Company A, Ninth Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 16th day of July, 1864.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "sixty-four," insert the following: "Provided, That no back pay or pension be allowed prior to the passage of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a

Mr. MANN. I should like to ask a question. This bill pro-

That no back pay or pension be allowed prior to the passage of this act.

We passed a bill just ahead of this providing-

That no pay, pension, bounty, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

I understand that under these bills a man gets a pensionable status even if we provide that no pay, pension, bounty, or allowance shall accrue by reason of the passage of the act.

Mr. TILSON. The purpose of this bill is to give the man a pensionable status, but that amendment is put in in order to prevent any claims for back pay, bounty, or anything of that kind.

Mr. MANN. It does not have to say "back pay." Suppose you say "no pay or pension," does not the man get a pensionable status?

Mr. TILSON. He gets a pensionable status. Mr. MANN. That is what I want to know.

Mr. TILSON. That is what this bill is for, to give him a pensionable status.

Mr. MANN. I notice that the Committee on Military Affairs report no two bills with that amendment in the same words. I do not see why they do not adopt a standard form.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill has been ordered to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM H. KEYS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17411) for the relief of William H. Keys.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, this is a bill to pay the funeral expenses of a former employee in the House. He was an employee in a former Congress and it appears that the heir is a nephew of the deceased. I notice that in the bill as reported they strike out six months' pay and appropriate to pay William H. Keys, sole dependent heir of Robert Keys, the deceased, an amount not to exceed $250 to defray the funeral expenses. There is nothing in the record that shows that he is dependent. Did he pay the funeral expenses?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. This is to pay the funeral expenses, which amounted to more than $250. An itemized account was rendered to the committee and for the information of the gentleman I will say that this man, who was an employee around the House for a number of years, left an estate very much involved, and this man is the sole heir, or was at the time he died, and being a minor was a dependent heir.

Mr. MANN. Was he receiving his support from this House

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. At the time the man died he was a minor and lived with Robert Keys. The committee fully investigated the accounts and it was found that it cost more than $250 to bury this man.

Mr. MANN. I do not think we ought to say "an amount not exceeding $250 to defray the funeral expenses." This man did not pay the expenses. I have no objection to paying $250, that being the amount of the funeral expenses. Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I have no objection to the gentleman from Illinois offering an amendment.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection. The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William H. Keys, sole dependent heir of Robert Keys, deceased, the sum of $380, being an amount equal to six months' salary of the said Robert Keys as an employee in the Doorkeeper's department of the House of Representatives at the time of his death, and an additional amount not exceeding $250 to defray the funeral expenses of the said Robert Keys.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the words "the sum of $360, being an amount equal to six months' salary of the said Robert Keys as," and strike out, in line 10, the word "and." after the word "death," and the word "additional" before the word "amount."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend further by striking out, in line 10, the words "an amount not exceeding," and, in line 11, the word "defray" and insert, after the sum of "$250," the words "an amount equal to," so that it will read "to pay $250, an amount equal to the funeral expenses of the said Robert Keys."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

FRANK PINKLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17692) for the relief of Frank Pinkley.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

STEPHEN J. HAFF.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R.

12317) for the relief of Stephen J. Haff.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object, I would like little light on this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can not we have the bill read? The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to consider Stephen J. Haff, late of Company I, Ninetteth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, as having been honorably discharged as of September 8, 1864: Provided, That no pay, pension, or bounty shall accrue by reason hereof prior to the passage of this act.

The following committee amendment was read: Line 5, strike out the letter "I" and insert "D.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. I reserve the right to object.
Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, this soldier enlisted in 1861 and served three years with credit. At the end of his term of service he reenlisted as a veteran, and while he was home on a furlough he met an officer with whom he had had some trouble, and they had more trouble. He returned to headquarters and was given a pass to go to his regiment. He met this officer on the way, and they had some very bitter words. The result was that the officer struck the man in the face and he knocked the officer down and kicked him. The officer threatened him

The man got on the train with his with all sorts of things. pass and ticket, and while on the train the guard came and said, "If I were in your place I wouldn't go to Washington."

Mr. SABATH. Did this man serve in the Army?

Mr. HICKS. Yes; he served three years, and after that he enlisted and served again.

Mr. SABATH. I withdraw the objection.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM BLAIR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 20161) for the relief of William Blair.

20161) for the relief of William Blair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, a bill for the relief of William Blair passed the Senate, S. 6595, and is now on the Speaker's table. I understand that it makes an appropriation, whereas the House bill only refers the matter to the Court of Claims. I state that for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. What does the Senate bill call for? What is the appropriation?

the appropriation?

Mr. MANN. I think it calls for $18,000.
Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, what is the request of the gentleman from Delaware?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I was merely informing the House that we had a similar bill on the Speaker's table from the Senate, and I was about to ask unanimous consent to take it up and consider it at this time unless some one objected to it

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] that Mr. Blair claims to have been damaged in the sum of $38,236, and it is very evident that he was damaged in a considerable sum. Just how the Senate arrived at the conclusion that $18,000 is the correct amount to pay I am not exactly certain, but my recollection is that the department authorized some one connected with the department to make an investigation, and my recollection further is that this person after making the investigation stated that he thought $18,000 would cover the damages.

This damage arose through dipping some cattle that belonged to Mr. Blair, the dipping being done by a Government inspector. He prepared the dipping fluid in a bad way, and I think it was shown that he was perhaps drunk at the time. He made the fluid entirely too strong, and killed quite a number of cattle and injured several hundred head.

Mr. SABATH. What became of the inspector, the man who

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. My impression is that he left the country—skipped out. That is my recollection now. I rather think it will be proper to pay the damage of $18,000.

Mr. SABATH. And what the gentleman is asking is to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. That is what our committee

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Have we this bill before the House? If not, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill be considered in lieu of the House bill that is now on the calendar.

Mr. SABATH. I object to the request of the general Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague withhold that for Mr. MANN. Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague withhold that for a moment? I think he might well be entitled to make the objection, and yet I think the Government will make money by passing the Senate bill.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the objection.

Mr. MANN. This is a case where the Government is clearly responsible. The man dipped a lot of cattle for ticks, and the dipping fluid was too strong with arsenic. Some young doctor had been employed through the civil-service regulations, and although he had been warned he made the mixture too strong. The result was that it killed a lot of cattle and took the hide off a lot of others. There is no question that the Government off a lot of others. There is no question that the doterminer is responsible. The House bill proposes to refer the matter to the Court of Claims. The Senate bill, as I recall from reading the report, makes an appropriation of $18,000, possibly eighteen thousand and some odd dollars. The inspector of eighteen thousand and some odd dollars. The inspector of the Government who made the estimate of the loss fixed the amount at $18,293,30. There is no possibility that if there is a suit in the Court of Claims there will be any less amount found than the Government admits its liability for, and the found than the Government admits its liability for, and the probability is that there will be a considerably larger amount pause.] The Chair hears none.

allowed by the Court of Claims, the claimant claiming some $40,000 or $50,000.

Mr. SABATH. Will the ge he secures this information? Will the gentleman inform me from whom

Mr. MANN. From the report itself. The gentleman will find the estimate of the inspector in charge on page 14 of the report on the House bill. There is no possibility that if we refer the matter to the Court of Claims there will be a judgment smaller in amount than the amount of the appropriation, and I think it wiser, though it is of course an unusual thing, to pass the Senate bill with the amount fixed, and give the man his money, than to send it to the Court of Claims and after a few years give him a good deal more money. It is probably better for him to get the money now, and it certainly is better for us to pay it now.

Mr. SABATH. In his original claim it shows that he made a claim for 77 steers at $66, and the report of the inspector shows only 59 head.

Mr. MANN. That is a question of whether they were damaged or not.

Mr. SABATH. It shows that his original claim was not honest.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it was honest; but there is a difference of opinion. As I recall it—and I have not read this since it was reported—the inspector charged the man with an increase in value of $7 a head, which is purely problematical.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. There were about twenty-five hundred head of cattle in this bunch, and there is a little discrepancy in the calculation.

Mr. SABATH. I mean as to those that were killed. The original claim was for 77 steers where the inspector found only 59. They allow for wintering, and so on, for 940 steers at $7 per head, and for summering 937 steers at $3 a head.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman will find the complete statement of the claimant on page 18 of the report. After deducting $4.80 per head, as he does, as a credit, he makes a claim in the end of $33,274.85. His original claim was $42,-289.25. Undoubtedly we would save money by passing the Senate bill.

Mr. SABATH. Was there any evidence taken or given before the committee?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. There were quite a number of affidavits, letters, and statements made by parties. are all mentioned in the report.

Mr. MANN. It is admitted by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Bureau of Animal Industry. The gentleman does not need any more than that.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. MANN. Let the Senate bill be read first and see what it is. My recollection is from reading the record it is eighteen thousand and some odd dollars.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill be read in lieu of the House

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the House bill may be tabled and the Senate bill be taken up for action in the House. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let the Senate bill be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 6595) to reimburse William Blair for losses and damages sustained by him by the negligent dipping of his cattle by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture.

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $18,000, to reimburse William Blair, of Hominy, county of Osage, State of Oklahoma, for losses and damages sustained by him through the negligence of one of the veterinary inspectors employed by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, in dipping cattle belonging to said Blair, in Osage County, Okla., on or about the 27th, 28th, and 29th of August, 1915, said sum to be paid to said Blair in full for all losses and damages so sustained by him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the motion of the gentleman from Delaware? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The House bill (H. R. 20161) was ordered to be laid on the WILLIAM I. WOOD.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17305) for the relief of William I. Wood.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Re it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of William I. Wood, late postmaster at Corinna, Me., in the sum of $106, due to the United States, being money-order funds lost in a fire which destroyed the Bangor, Me., post office April 30, 1911.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman desire to Mr. GUERNSEY. No.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

L. W. DRAGOO.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4416) to reimburse William Dragoo, formerly postmaster at Smithfield, Wetzel County, W. Va., for money, money orders, and postage stamps stolen.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object-Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ASBURY SCRIVENER.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15999) to correct the military record of Asbury Scrivener.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Asbury Scrivener shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of Company F. Second Regiment District of Columbia Volunteer Infantry, on April 28, 1864.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all the matter just read after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Asbury Scrivener, who was a private in Company F, Second Regiment District of Columbia Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 7th day of August, 1864."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended to read: "A bill for the relief of Asbury Scrivener."

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I would ask unanimous consent for one minute in which to make a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MILLER of Delawere. Mr. Speaker, two days ago we passed the bill H. R. 11150, a bill for the relief of mail con-. The bill is now on its way to the President for his There are 36 bills on this Private Calendar covered in tractors. that bill for the relief of mall contractors. I ask unanimous consent that those bills be stricken from the calendar and instead of reading the list I have I will send it to the Clerk's desk for the Clerk to read.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman certain that the President will approve the bill?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I have no advance information on that, but it is our desire to clean up the calendar, and these bills are all included in that omnibus bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand they are all included in that, but I thought perhaps the gentleman was a little bit previous in making that motion.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. There is absolutely no objection to this. The individual Members who are interested in the bill, the gentleman from Mississippi and myself, have worked on this matter since the opening of Congress and we want to clear up the calendar.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have the memorandum sent up and read or have it put in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I want it put in the RECORD.
Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I said that the bills are all contained in the memorandum which I have sent to the Clerk's

Mr. MANN. But I want the memorandum inserted in the RECORD; I do not care whether it is read or not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will be directed to be done.

MARTIN V. PARMER.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2880) for the relief of Martin V. Parmer.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to be informed as to what this bill calls for.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, this soldier enlisted on the 1st day of December, 1861, and served until he was wounded in the Battle of Chickamagua, 1863. The records of the War Department show that he was in three or four different hospitals from that time on, and reculisted August 4, 1864. The proof then shows that because of his disability from his wounds received in the right forearm that he was transferred to the reserves, being unable to perform military duty. While in that condition he received word that some band of marauders were disturbing the country around his home in Nebraska, I believe, and he asked for permission to go home to protect his family, as he was not able to render military service at the time.

He did not get it immediately, but he did go home for the protection of his family. In view of his two and one-half years of service, and the fact that he was wounded in the service, and was in some three or four different hospitals, the committee thought it a proper case.

Mr. SABATH. I think it is a meritorious case, and I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Martin V. Parmer, late of One hundred and thirty-eighth Company. Second Battalion Veteran Reserve Corps, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company on the 4th day of August, 1864. Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PETER KENNEY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1553) for the relief of Peter Kenney

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have some information on this bill.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, this soldier served from August 19, 1861, to October 12, 1863, when he was wounded in the Battle of Gettysburg. He was in the hospital for a long while, and when he was able to leave the hospital he was given a furlough. He went home during his furlough, and cut his foot with an ax, as the testimony shows, and was not able to return to his command until after his regiment was mustered out.

Mr. SABATH. He served about two years and a half?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes, sir. And was wounded in the Battle of

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Peter Kenney, late of Company G. Fifth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 5th day of February, 1864: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

GARDINER L. EASTMAN.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill S. 5203, for the relief of Gardiner L. Eastman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Gardiner L. Eastman, who was a private of Company H, Thirtieth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on or about the 16th day of June, 1865: Provided, That no pay, pension, bounty, nor other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF ANTOINE BAYARD.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill S. 2222, for the relief of the heirs of Antoine Bayard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the hill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the heirs of Antoine Bayard, late member of the Mississippi Militia, during the War of 1812, a duplicate bounty land warrant for 120 acres, in lieu of warrant No. 34205, heretofore issued under the act of March 3, 1855, which has heretofore been lost and has never been used.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

REUBEN SEWELL.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1869) correcting the military record of Reuben Sewell.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know from the chairman something about this bill.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say for the gentleman's information this bill refers to one Reuben Sewell, who enlisted September 1, 1861. He served three months and then reenlisted for further service, and served throughout the entire Civil War. After the Civil War he enlisted again for military service in the West, fighting Indians. There is some discrepancy as between this man's record and his military record, which shows that possibly he did not report for duty for a period of a couple of months. He says he went from Washington City to visit his folks in Philadelphia, and that he was not away from his service; that he performed his service entirely throughout the entire Civil War, and he is only asking for what he feels he is entitled to.

Mr. SABATH. Was he charged with desertion?

Mr. McCRACKEN. So far as the records of the department are concerned down here—they infer there is a desertion, although it is not absolute.

Mr. CRAGO. The records of Pennsylvania show that he served two enlistments.

Mr. McCRACKEN. He served two enlistments. Mr. SABATH. It is only a question as to two months? Mr. McCRACKEN. That is all.

of that regiment, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of the last-named company on the 25th day of July, 1864.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend at the end of the bill, after the word "sixty-four," in line 4, page 2, by inserting "Provided, That no pension or allowance shall accrue prior to the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Tilson]. Mr. STAFFORD. Let the amendment be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "sixty-four," on page 2, line 4, insert: "Provided, that no pay, pension, bounty, allowance, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Tilson].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time and passed.

The title was amended to read as follows: "A bill for the relief of Reuben Sewell."

ALLEN HYATT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15852) for the relief of Allen Hyatt.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers. Allen Hyatt, who was a private in Company H. Eighty-fift Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States on the 23d day of June, 1863: Provided, That no bounty, pay, pension. or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next

AQUILA NEBEKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5632) for the relief of Aquila Nebeker.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether anybody is looking after the bill or not. I see the report on the bill states that "this bill is substantially the same as the bill H. R. 14836, which was favorably reported by the House Committee on Public Lands at the last session of Congress, but which was not passed because of the congestion of legislation in the House at that time." Was that bill reported at the last session?

Mr. MAYS. That is what the report says. Mr. MANN. I know; but is that correct?

Mr. MAYS. I do not remember that it was, but it passed the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Gentlemen making reports of that kind ought to be careful. That is the principal reason given for the reporting of this bill. It says that a similar bill was reported at the last session of Congress, and that the House bill was not passed because of the congestion of business. The fact seems to be that no such bill was reported at all.

Mr. MAYS. It passed the Senate.

Mr. MANN. But the House bill was not passed.
Mr. MAYS. The Senate bill was similar to this one.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Mr. McCracken. That is all.
The Speaker pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.
Mr. Mann. Report the committee amendment.
The bill as amended was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to accept title to the following-described lands, either in whole or in part, upon certification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the lands are chiefly valuable for national forest purposes and approximately equal in value to the lands to be given in exchange therefor: The south half of the southeast quarter of section 3; the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 10; the north half of the northeast quarter of section 15, all in township 12 north, range 4 east; the south half of the northwest quarter and the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of the southwest querter of section 14, township 13 north, range 4 east; lots 1, 2, 3, and 4 and the south half of the northwest quarter and all of the southwest quarter of section 4; all of section 9; and the north half of section 16; all in township 14 north, range 4 east of Salt Lake base and meridian, situate in the Cache National Forest; and to issue to Aquila Nebeker in lieu thereof patents to the following-described areas, or such parts thereof as are approximately equal in value to the lands conveyed: The south half of the northeast quarter and all of the southeast quarter of section 11; the southwest quarter of section 12; all of section 13; the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 23; and the north half of section 24; all in township 13 north, range 4 east of Salt Lake base and meridian: Provided, That the lands conveyed to the Government shall thereupon become parts of the Cache National Forest and subject to all laws and regulations applicable thereto.

With committee amendments as follows:

With committee amendments, as follows:

Amend, page 2, by inserting after the word "are," on line 11, the words "found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be," and on page 2, line 24, after the word "thereto." by inserting a colon and adding the following: "Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall jointly report to Congress, in detail, the factors upon which the valuations were made."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH DAVIS.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 352, an act for the relief of Elizabeth Davis.

ASBURY SCRIVENER.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we may vacate the order by which we passed the bill H. R. 15999, which was a bill to give a pensionable status to Asbury Scrivener, and that we add as an amendment to the bill the provision that "no bounty, pay, pension, or other emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of the bill."

- Mr. FIELDS. Yes; I was intending to do that.

Mr. MANN. And that the bill be passed with that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the request will be acted upon. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ELIZABETH DAVIS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Mississippi again give the number of that bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. It is Calendar No. 352 (S. 3617), an act for the relief of Elizabeth Davis.

Mr. MANN. Whose bill was that?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. That of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH]

Mr. MANN. I think there was an agreement to return to it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Yes; I believe so.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Stephens] asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 352, Senate bill No. 3617, an act for the relief of Elizabeth Davis. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I stated at the beginning of this session that I do not believe we had the right to play favorites. There was no agreement whatsoever. I do not think it is a good policy to inaugurate, to call up bills out of their order and pass them. It is a discrimination against other bills.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. There was a distinct understanding

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman says there was a distinct understanding. The RECORD will show that I said at the beginning of this session that I did not believe in playing favorites. I stated that expressly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The Clerk will read the next bill.

CLAIMS UNDER BOWMAN AND TUCKER ACTS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1878) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, and under the provisions of section 151 of the act approved March 3, 1911, commonly known as the Judicial

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, the amendment of the House contains this provision on page 2:

Except that claimants under this act receiving compensation for use and occupancy of property shall not be barred from further prosecution of claims arising from damage or destruction of the same property.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can tell the gentleman the reasons for the insertion of that provision.

Mr. MANN. I do not want to know the reasons for it. I know the reasons against it. I am not willing to let the bill pass by unanimous consent with that provision in it. We do not allow for the damage or destruction of property anywhere.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the gentleman will allow me, I have no objection at all to that provision being stricken out. It was inserted because it was contained in the last omnibus bill, and it was passed solely on the theory that although we do not pay for destruction of property, and this bill includes no items for destruction of property, and this bill includes no items for destruction of property, we thought it was doubtful whether we should foreclose the right of anyone hereafter. But I have no objection, and if the motion is made to strike out that provision, I will vote to strike it out.

Mr. MANN. Then I suggest to the gentleman—I do not know whether anybody else is going to object or not-that it will not be possible in the remaining time to consider all these amendments, and the only way to do is to ask unanimous consent to pass the bill with the House amendments, with the provision to which I have referred stricken out. I do not know whether anybody will object to that, but we can not consider all these items to-night, and the only thing we can do is just to take the judgment of the committee. As far as I am concerned, I am willing to do that,

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that the committee have included in this bill only such items as had the unanimous consent of the entire membership of the committee. All other items, though some of them doubtless are meritorious, have been left out to be considered at some later date. No contested item is included in this bill.

Mr. MANN. I think the committee have been very careful. The only way it can be passed is by asking unanimous con-

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that on page 2 the bill be amended by striking out-

Mr. MANN. Let me make a suggestion, that the gentleman ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the committee be agreed to, amending the first amendment by striking out the language on page 2-

Except that claimants under this act receiving compensation for use and occupancy of property shall not be barred from further prosecu-tion of claims arising from damage or destruction of the same prop-

And that then the bill be considered as read a third time and passed. I do not know whether you can do that, but that is the only way in which it can be done.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be agreed to, the amendment on page 2 being amended by striking out all after the word "claims," in line 5, down to and including the word "property," in line 8, and that the bill be considered as read a third time and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent—

Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know what these claims are about.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can tell the gentleman. They are for the use and occupation of property, rental, in other words; or, in the case of a few individual claims, for stores and supplies taken from loyal citizens of the United States. No claim for destruction is included nor is there any claim in which any laches or failure to prosecute the claim was found by the courts.

Now, is there any claim for a disloyal purpose? The committee has been exceedingly careful in excluding those.

Mr. SABATH. When was this property taken? Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. During the Civil War.

Mr. SABATH. Why have not they made an effort heretofore to have the claims allowed?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They have been allowed by the Court of Claims, as the gentleman knows, and he must mean why they have not been paid heretofore. In the case of churches or lodges under the law the Southern Claims Commission, which was the only tribunal that had power to construe the law, held that they were not allowed to consider the claims of corporations. So they had no opportunity to present their claims to It was the only tribunal then until we passed that tribunal. the law giving the Court of Claims the right to hear the claims and report to the House.

Mr. SABATH. They were precluded from filing their claims, and it is only since the recent act that they have a right to present them?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; and to be frank with the gentleman, we have particularly investigated them, and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Reavis] particularly objected to the consideration of any claim where it was found that the claimant was guilty of laches, and in every one of the cases the claimant had to show that he had been diligent in presenting his claim to some officer of the Government or some tribunal.

Mr. SABATH. How much do the claims amount to? Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Thirty-eight thousand three hundred and five dollars.

Mr. SABATH. How many claimants are there? Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Thirty-four.

Mr. SABATH. So that the claims would average about a thousand dollars each?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes. Of course they vary in amount, but they would average that.

Mr. SABATH. And the committee has carefully considered the claims?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The committee has considered these claims more carefully than any bills that I know of.

Mr. SABATH. I have every confidence in the gentleman when he states that the bill ought to pass, and I withdraw my objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina what is the approximate total amount of these claims that are presented?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Thirty-eight thousand dollars

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This bill does not include what is ordinarily known as cotton claims?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; there are no claims for destruction of property. It is for stores and supplies and use and occupation. I know what the gentleman refers to-like those bills in the last session. There are no such bills here.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am asking, because it was said that some gentleman on the floor would offer a cotton claim.

assume that it would not be proper on this bill?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is not a cotton-claim bill? Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; it is for stores and supplies and use and occupation.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the House that in the consideration of these numerous claims the minority of the committee took the position that any claimant who had been guilty of laches should not have his claim reported, at least not at this session of Congress.

Another question that came before the committee was the question of loyalty. That question is jurisdictional in the legislation.

There have been various tribunals organized for the purpose of investigating these claims, such as the Southern Claims Commission, the Quartermaster's Department, and so forth, and wherever any claim had been submitted to any tribunal competent to pass upon the same, and they found disloyalty against the claimant, these claims were eliminated. So there is in the bill no claim of anyone against whom a finding of disloyalty has ever been made. The last war-claims bill carried claims to the extent of $1,166,000. This bill carries claims aggregating $38,000. Every doubtful claim concerning which there was any question in the minds of any member of the committee has been eliminated from the bill. There are no cotton claims here, and I will say that if there is any attempt to put any claim of that character in this bill I shall not only object but make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the bill shall be considered as taken up and read a third time and passed, including the committee amendment and the amendment offered on the floor of the House, as indicated by him. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

NAVAJO TIMBER CO., DELAWARE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3934) to reimburse the Navajo Timber Co., of Delaware, for a deposit made to cover the purchase of timber.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. MANN. I object.

STEAMSHIP "REPUBLIC."

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5985) authorizing the Commissioner of Navigation to cause the steamship Republic to be enrolled and licensed as a vessel of the United States

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed to cause the steamship Walkure, admitted to American registry as the steamship Republic, which was sunk in the harbor of Papeete, Tahiti, raised and repaired by American enterprise, capital, and labor, to be enrolled and licensed as a vessel of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know from some member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries as to the extent of the repairs to this vessel.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I am not upon that committee, and I do not remember exactly, but I think the amount in most of these cases has been from 50 per cent to 75 per cent.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it provided in the bill that the repairs were made by American workmen?

Mr. HAYES. Yes; it is to stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

SUNDRY BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, we have only about two minutes left. There is a bill on the calendar, Calendar No. 325, S. 5672, for the relief of sundry building and loan associations, in which a number of Members are interested.

Mr. MANN. I think it is too late to get that up to-night. The gentleman would not have time to read it, and we will have to have another night.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Very well, I shall not make any request in respect to it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which these several bills were passed and lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 10.30 p. m. has arrived.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, under its previous order, until to-morrow, Thursday, February 8, 1917, at 11 o'clock

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 8, 1917.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Bishop Collins Denny, of Richmond, Va., offered the following prayer:

O thou great and glorious and merciful God, we come to acknowledge our dependence upon Thee for all things. we can not remember all Thy benefits, be so favorable to us, O God, that we may not forget them all. We praise Thee for Thy guidance of our fathers; and now, Lord, we, who are Thy children as well as their children, come to pray Thee that Thy guidance may not depart from us. Especially at this time, O gracious God, give wisdom to those upon whom in Thy providence the guidance of the affairs of this country has fallen.

Upon this Senate, upon the President and all who are in authority grant us, most merciful God, that heretofore having been for so many years kept in the peace which has been Thy gift to us, we may be continued in peace in this country. far off from our homes, from our loved ones, war and all its consequences; and while we know, for Thou hast taught us, that whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap, and while our sins have been many, manifold, and heinous, gracious God, visit not on us the legitimate consequences of our own transgressions, but show Thyself merciful to us, and grant us the safe and the honorable way through all the troubles to which we seem to be exposed; and especially grant to Thy servants here that daily blessing which they need to do Thy will. We ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Secretary will read the Journal of the proceedings of the preceding day.

VOTE UPON RESOLUTION RELATIVE TO RELATIONS WITH GERMANY.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, before I go upon committee work I wish to say that I was not recorded yesterday upon the vote on the resolution of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Stone], and I wish to announce that I would have voted "nay" had I been able to secure entrance to this Chamber. It seems that owing to some condition of public affairs at half past 4 o'clock in the day the outside doors here are locked and this body of eminent gentlemen are locked in. I do not know who has taken it upon himself to lock us in or lock us out, and I resent the assumption of power either to lock us in or out.

Mr. GALLINGER. Did the Senator try the door both ways?

Mr. LANE. Yes; I tried it both ways. I was called out and could not get back in time to vote.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I was absent from the Senate Chamber yesterday for a while on official business, trying to facilitate the report on the Post Office appropriation bill. When I returned to the Chamber the vote had been taken on the resolution offered by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, Mr. Stone. I desire to state that if present I would have voted for the resolution, and if there is no objection I should like to have the permanent Record show that I so voted.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is not allowable under the rule. I will submit it to the Chair.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not going to insist upon it if it is objected to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is the only time the Chair has ever known such request to be made. Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Alabama has now put himself on record as favoring the resolution.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It does not change the result, but I shall not insist upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Journal be read while the Chair is examining the rule. The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Tuesday, February 6, 1917, when, on request of Mr. Thomas and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator indulge the Chair for a moment until the Chair may find out whether the request of the Senator from Alabama can be granted?

Mr. McCUMBER. It was on that that I desired to say a word.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Rule XII provides as follows:

1. When the yeas and nays are ordered, the names of Senators shall be called alphabetically; and each Senator shall, without debate, declare his assent or dissent to the question, unless excused by the Senate; and no Senator shall be permitted to vote after the decision shall have been announced by the Presiding Officer, but may for sufficient reasons, with unanimous consent, change or withdraw his vote. No motion to suspend this rule shall be in order, nor shall the Presiding Officer entertain any request to suspend it by unanimous consent.

It seems to be impossible to permit a vote to be recorded after the result has been announced.

Mr. GALLINGER. In making the suggestion, I would be very glad to have the Senator's vote recorded, but I knew under the rule it could not be done, even by unanimous consent.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not want any violation of the rule or anything of that kind. I thought if permissible I would like to be recorded in the regular way in the permanent RECORD.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply desire to suggest the inconsistency of having the Record show what the Senator has stated this morning, that he did not vote, and also having it show that he

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, this is not an ordinary protest to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate. I have an important telegram here from the president of the National Dairy Union of the United States, dated Lansing. Mich., in which he says:

LANSING, MICH., February 6, 1917.

Hon. WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

I understand Senator Underwood offered an amendment to the revenue bill taxing oleomargarine 2 cents per pound and allowing it to be colored. Will you not do your utmost to protect the dairy interests of Michigan against having to compete with this cheap substitute colored to counterfeit gennine butter.

N. P. Hull. President National Dairy Union.

Mr. President, I am going to ask that this telegram be referred to the Committee on Finance, and I desire to supplement what Mr. Hull has said and express the hope that there will be no backward step taken in the matter of the regulation of the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine. It ought at no time to be permitted to compete with butter as such, and I hope we shall have full opportunity to discuss this proposed change of

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegram will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. THOMAS subsequently said: Mr. President, the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] was absent when the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] introduced a telegram from the National Dairy Union. I merely wish to say that the amendment which the Senator from Alabama has offered is being considered and that there will be abundant opportunity to discuss its merits when we come to consider the revenue bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. I present two resolutions emanating from German-American societies asking that the question of war should be submitted to a referendum of the people.

I also present a resolution adopted at a mass meeting of citizens of Hebron and vicinity, N. Dak., to the same effect. I ask that the resolutions may be printed in the RECORD, without the names. They are very short.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed

Hon. Porter J. McCumber, Washington, D. C.:

I respectfully urge upon you the wishes of 10,000 members of this organization and citizens of North Dakota to submit question of declaring war to a referendum.

JACOB ROTHSCHILLER, President German Alliance.

Mr. CHILTON. Day before yesterday the legislature of West Virginia adopted resolutions concerning the present foreign situation, and I should like to have the resolutions, as they are short, read. I desire further to state that they received the unanimous vote of both Houses, except one man, and he would hardly count under the conditions, as he has been both a Democrat and a Republican.

There being no objection, the resolutions were read, as fol-

Be it resolved by the House of Belegates of West Virginia, the Senate concurring therein:

First. That we, the Legislature of West Virginia, deeply deploring the international crisis that has called it forth, hereby express our hearty approval of the course pursued by President Wilson and the Department of State at Washington in severing diplomatic relations with the Imperial German Government, following its note of January 31 repudiating the pledges heretofore given to respect the lives and property of American citizens and to insure the freedom of the seas. Believing that to submit to a violation of the fundamental rights involved would bring lasting humiliation and a loss of self-respect, we indorse the clear and patriotic declaration by the President of a fixed purpose to invoke the power of the Nation to maintain our honor and independence as a sovereign people. In an hour like the present our usual personal and party differences are leveled before an exalted patriotism; and to maintain its rights and sacred henor among the nations of the earth we pledge to our Government the united support of the people of the St. The course of the resolution duly and the proper of the people of the people

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I desire to have read a telegram which I have received from the Board of Trade of Hagerstown, Md. I will also state in this connection that I have received some 40 or 50 telegrams from various corporations and co-partnerships indorsing the position taken in the telegram which is now presented by me to the Senate.

There being no objection, the telegram was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Washington, D. C.:

The Board of Trade of Hagerstown at a largely attended meeting passed a resolution recognizing the need for large revenues for the Army, Navy, and fortifications, but emphatically protesting against the form of legislation proposed in H. Mr. SHIELDS. I present various telegrams and letters pro-testing against the tax imposed on excess profits of insurance companies in the revenue bill recently passed by the House, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD without reading.

Chattanooga, Tenn., February 5, 1917.

Hon. J. K. Shields, Senator,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: The Chattanooga Manufacturers' Association, composed of 140 of the leading manufacturers located at and doing business in Chattanooga, Tenn., at a meeting held Friday, February 2, 1917. unanimously went on record as being opposed to the passage of bill H. R. 20573, now before the House.

The members of this association are all now bearing tremendous tax burdens which are proportionately larger than other business interests. We are always willing to support any movement tending to national advancement, but this proposed bill leaves no room to doubt that it is time to call a halt.

Government revenues must be obtained, and there is no disposition to question taxes for legitimate necessities, provided everyone bears their equitable proportion. The manufacturers feel that they, as a body, are now paying the Federal Government a fair proportion of their net earnings, yet the aforesaid bill proposed to further burden them by an additional tax of 8 per cent on capital computed on money actually invested, property used, and surplus and undivided profits. This is almost bordering on confiscation.

Can we not expect your cooperation in opposing the passage of the above measure? We will certainly appreciate your assistance.

Very respectfully,

P. S.—We also want to call your attention to the fact that in the average manufacturing business every year is not always closed with a profit. The average is only one out of three when any money is made. The past year is the only one in almost five where the manufacturer has made any clear money, and the Government ought not unduly tax such earnings, but instead should seriously take into consideration the handicap under which the manufacturer has labored and under which he has kept his business from becoming demoralized..

Dear Sir: The writer has read with a great deal of interest the inclosed clipping from the Commercial Appeal, and hope that you will be able to have substituted an increased tax on cigars, cigarettes, and whisky in lieu of the proposed tax on profits.

As it is now, we are paying a corporation tax and income tax, and it hardly looks right that we should pay, in addition, a tax on profits, which is certainly the same as income.

Any efforts you may use toward avoiding this will certainly be very much appreciated by,

NATIONAL LIFE INSURANCE Co.,

Chattanooga, February 5, 1917.

Hon. John K. Shields,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator: I have been informed that the Democratic House caucus has ratified the provisions of the proposed Federal emergency revenue measure, which applies to all life insurance companies except those doing the business of life, health, and accident insurance combined in one policy, issued on the weekly payment plan.

The tax imposed by the proposed act is computed as follows: From the amount of the taxable income as reported under the Federal incometax law deduct $5,000, also 8 per cent of the company's paid-in or earned surplus and undivided profits. The remainder, called excess profits, is taxed at the rate of 8 per cent.

In approving this measure the Democratic House caucus seem to have overlooked several fundamental facts; first, over 70 per cent of the life insurance in the United States is mutual; second, including participating business of the stock companies, over 86 per cent of all the life insurance policies are participating; third, the burden of all taxes upon income life insurance funds falls upon the individual policyholder.

The bill exempts industrial insurance where the life-policy holder is insured also against sickness and accident, but takes the industrial-policy holder who insures his life only for the benefit of his family.

The average size of the ordinary life insurance policy in the United States has decreased from $2,580 in 1894 to $1,850 in 1915, showing that the 7,000,000 ordinary-policy holders of the United States on whom the proposed tax would fall are providing only this modest sum for their dependents. The 25,000,000 industrial-policy holders, who would also be taxed, are providing $134 each for their families.

This company has never waged any campaign against the taxation of life insurance as at present conducted, but the proposed measure seems to be unwarranted and economically unsound, as this extra tax will, of course, be taken out of the p a large additional tax on life insurance companies to be computed as follows:

From amount of taxable income as reported under Federal income-tax law, deduct $5,000; also 8 per cent of your paid-in capital and paid-in or earned surplus and undivided profits. The remainder, called excess profits, is taxed at the rate of 8 per cent.

The Volunteer State Life Insurance Co. for the past year paid $12,513.46 in Federal and State taxes and fees. All life insurance companies are now undergoing tremendous taxation, and all these taxes must finally be paid by the policyholder. Less than 10 per cent of the taxes collected from life insurance companies is now used for the supervision of the life insurance business. The money invested by policyholders in life insurance policles is for the protection of their dependents, and there is no more reason for placing excessive taxes on the funds invested in life insurance than there is for the placing of excessive taxes on deposits in savings banks.

Increasing the burdens of men who are attempting to provide for their dependents should be opposed, and this is to urge that, as our representative from this State, you should do this. We will appreciate any interest that you may take in the matter. I am,

MY Dear Sir: I am writing you in regard to the proposed legislative action which proposes to place a large additional tax on life insurance companies. I beg to say that, in my judgment, life insurance companies are now heavily and unnecessarily taxed and no further burden should be placed on them. The money invested by policyholders in life insurance policies is for the protection of their dependents, and there is no more reason for placing excessive taxes on funds invested in life insurance than there is for placing excessive taxes on deposits in savings banks, etc. I want to urge on you to oppose this proposed legislation in the interests of the dependent families of the country. There is no justice in increasing the burdens of the men of this country who are attempting to provide a fund for their dependents. I hope you will look fully into this matter, and when you do I believe you will find what I say herein correct; and I trust you will then find it within the line of your official duty to oppose this proposed legislation.

Dear Senator: I understand the Democratic House caucus, of Washington, D. C., has recommended large additional tax on life insurance companies. I hope you will be in position to oppose this measure, as I now think life insurance companies, especially in Tennessee, are paying their proportional part of taxes. If this increase in taxation is made, the common people or the policyholders will be the sufferers therefrom. Hoping you see your way clear to oppose this measure, I remain, Yours, very truly,

THE VOLUNTEER STATE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Chattanooga, Tenn., January 30, 1917.

Senator John K. Shields, Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: We have just received information that the Democratic House caucus at Washington has recently resolved to place a large additional tax on life insurance companies, to be computed as follows:

From amount of taxable income as reported under Federal incometax law deduct $5,000; also 8 per cent of your paid in capital and paid in or earned surplus and undivided profits. The remainder, called excess profits, is taxed at the rate of 8 per cent.

All life insurance companies are now undergoing tremendous taxation and all these taxes must finally be paid by the policyholder, as the companies are in such keen competition for business that their net cost of insurance to the policyholder is as low as the companies can make it and continue to do business. This company, for instance, which has paid scarcely any dividends to its stockholders, and which was organized in 1903, paid during the past year $12,513.46 in Federal and State taxes and fees. Less than 10 per cent of the taxes on life insurance is used for the supervision of the life insurance business; in other words, more than 90 per cent of the taxes now collected from life insurance companies is used merely to produce revenue and has nothing whatever fo do with the life insurance business.

The money invested by policyholders in life insurance policies is for the protection of their dependents when the breadwinners have passed away. There is really less reason for placing an excessive tax on the funds invested in life insurance than there is for placing excessive taxes on deposits in savings banks.

I believe investigation will show that the United States is the only country in the world that has legislation in force through its Federal and State Governments by which is increased the financial burden of the man who attempts to care for his dependents by life insurance protection.

We earnestly urge that you will carefully investigate this proposed tection.

We earnestly urge that you will carefully investigate this proposed legislation, for we believe that as a result of such investigation you will promptly and actively oppose the proposed legislation.

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives—

Whereas in the opinion of the General Assembly of the State of Vermont, the President of the United States has exhausted every honorable means to preserve the honor and integrity of this Nation, and has deemed it necessary on account of the persistent and long-continued violation by the German Government of the fundamental principles of international law and of the principles of common humanity, to sever diplomatic relations with the Government of Germany: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the State of Vermont, by the vote of its general assembly now in session, hereby assures the Federal Government of its firm and unwavering support at this critical time in the world's history, and that it is the sense of the general assembly that this State proceed at once to the adequate preparation for any emergency that may arise, so that it may respond to any call that may be made upon it by the Federal Government.

Resolved, further, That the secretary of state be, and hereby is, instructed to send to the President of the United States a duly attested copy of this resolution.

Mr. PAGE. I have received a telegram from the master of the State Grange of Vermont, in which he protests against the passage of the Underwood amendment, reducing the tax on colored oleomargarine from 10 cents per pound to 2 cents per pound. I ask to have the telegram referred to the appropriate committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegram will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, from among several hundred communications upon the same subject I have selected two which I desire to present. The first is from the Illinois Bankers' Association, protesting against the proposed excess profits tax applying to the banks in the United States, which are already, says the communication, paying from three to four taxes. I ask to have the communication printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the communication was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the

RECORD, as follows:

ILLINOIS BANKERS' ASSOCIATION, CHICAGO, February 6, 1917.

ILLINOIS BANKERS' ASSOCIATION,
CHICAGO, February 6, 1911.

Hon. Lawrence Y. Sherman,
The Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: While we are all moved by patriotic impulses, it is exceedingly difficult to question the methods employed for imposing Federal taxation. Perhaps the probability that very heavy taxes will soon be required, makes it even more important to consider the principles upon which the taxation is based.

On January 24 we sent a letter to our members regarding the new excess-profits tax, and have secured the cooperation of other associations in urging that it is unjust and un-American to levy the third direct tax on the same small group of interests, when the rest of the public is not bearing any portion of the burden.

We are to-day advised that the national counselors, at the annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, took exception to the manner of levying the tax proposed in the bill in the House. As the chamber is very conservative in its action, I think it is certainly safe to be guided by the opinion expressed by it.

There is a distinct opportunity for the Members of Congress to perform a great service by having Federal taxation, proceed along the right lines, and I feel confident you will be interested in opposing a drift in affairs which is dangerous, to say the least.

Yours, very truly,

R. L. Crampton, Secretary.

THE PROPOSED NEW TAX ON PROFITS OVER 8 PER CENT FURTHER VIOLATES AMERICAN PRINCIPLES.

ILLINOIS BANKERS' ASSOCIATION, Chicago, January 24, 1917.

To the MEMBERS OF THE ASSOCIATION:

The administration party leaders are reported as fully approving an amendment to the Federal internal-revenue act, providing for a tax of 8 per cent on net income in excess of 8 per cent on capital computed on money actually invested, property used, and surplus and undivided profits of every corporation, joint-stock company, association, insurance company, and partnership whose net income amounts to $5,000 or more. The tax not to attach to incomes derived from agriculture or solely from personal services.

Under the terms of the proposed bill capital invested is said to include: (1) Cash pald in, (2) actual value of property at time of payment other than cash paid in, and (3) surplus and undivided profits used or employed in the business. Increases are also proposed on inheritances and other items.

This information is from telegraphic advices, as copies of the new revenue bill are not available. It has been passed upon favorably by the subcommittee, and was before the Ways and Means Committee of the House yesterday, and is being considered to-day by the House caucus of the majority Members, after which it will be reported formally. We are advised that passage of the bill will then undoubtedly be expedited in the House, possibly coming to a final vote before the end of next week.

It is apparent that we are complacently passing through a period of silent revolution, which is remorselessly continuing a steam-roller process of attempting to bring successful business concerns down to the level of the mediocre through adding more tax burdens on wisely managed enterprises.

As an illustration of how the proposed tax will work, a bank or other business, with a capital of $50,000, surplus and undivided profits of $10,000, which earns 20 per cent net on its capital, or $10,000 a year, would be entitled to a deduction of 8 per cent on the capital and surplus amounting to $60,000, or $4,800, leaving the difference between this amount and $10,000, or $5,200,000 undial, would pay $4,160 and one of $5,000,000, $41,600. (All third direct Federal tax leaves no room to doubt that it is time to call a halt. Government revenues must be obtained, and there is no disposition to question taxes for legitimate requirements if imposed equitably in accordance with principles which conform to the spirit of American institutions.

in accordance with principles which conform to the spirit of American institutions.

Direct Federal taxation has so recently been instituted, and has met with so little objection on the part of about 7 per cent of the population now furnishing the Government with revenue aggregating $131,545,380, that we are apparently losing all thought of reasonable equality in taxation, and deliberately entering a new and pernicious era of "special privilege" and exemption for the great mass of the citizenship.

While fully admitting the social justice of a graduated tax on incomes, it seems manifestly unfortunate, if not indefensible, in both an economic and a political sense to wholly relieve more than nine-tenths of the voters, who theoretically are responsible for the imposition of the tax, from bearing some part of their proportionate share, even if the amount realized from each would be very small. Such contact with the revenue department of the Government is necessary to insure the practice of administrative economy and a reasonable consciousness of the obligations of citizenship. In England before the great war all incomes over £100 were taxed.

Industries concerned as to the threatened flood of foreign goods after the war, resulting in overproduction, idle mills, panic, and depression, have hoped that immediate consideration would be given to protective measures through a revision of the Underwood Act, such as is believed would, with existing direct taxation, produce adequate revenues, notwithstanding the present curtailment of imports, and that the proposed bond issue, covering the expense of mobilization on the Mexican border, would carry us through without establishing any more doubtful precedents as to direct taxation. While not offering this as a suggestion, we most emphatically believe that the proposed program is along the wrong lines.

The writer feels that the officers of our member banks should get in touch with the husleness men in their communities at once and give full.

most emphatically believe that the proposed program is along the wrong lines.

The writer feels that the officers of our member banks should get in touch with the business men in their communities at once and give full consideration to the entire subject. Let us not be charged with the worst possible error—that of taking the easiest way in this matter instead of standing up for the principles which, if disregarded, will result in our being carried into very dangerous channels.

Having secured an entering wedge, our Representatives in Congress appear willing to drive it further and further between the majority and the minority of the population, separating them still more instead of attempting to bring them together for copperation leading toward national efficiency.

The experience of the belligerent nations has proved that service must be universal, whether at the front, in the factory, or in the counting room. This is the world's new conception of democracy for peace and war. It is a step backward for a few to pay all the cost of government. We are losing the essence of Americanism and bringing about representation without taxation, which is as repugnant as would be the right of a few to support the Government and to dominate it.

"There is need for sound public opinion, for sound political judgments, and our future for many years to come will be governed by the soundness of the public mind and governmental actions in the next score of months. We must awaken men to the patriotic need for giving the best there is in us to the end that the national answer which will be made to the many questions the world is asking, shall be the right answer."

We urge you to do your part promptly. Stand up for principle even if you happen to be exempt. Write your Congressman upon receipt of this. An insidious evil is creeping into our national life; ask others to help prevent it. Please get general local cooperation.

We are advised that the Chicago Clearing House Association will wire strongly protesting against this further

We believe the serious and perhaps unconscious drift of affairs in Congress makes it unnecessary to apologize for the longest letter ever sent the membership. It would have been easier merely to request the members to wire protests against the proposed new iniquitous tax, but it is important that our members begin earnestly to study political economy and endeavor to help form a sound national policy.

Yours, very truly,

RICHARD L. CRAMPTON, Secretary.

P. S.—Some of the internal-revenue collectors in Illinois have sent our member banks forms upon which to file returns as brokers and pay a tax of $30. We feel quite sure this is incorrect, and have written the commissioner in Washington for decision regarding it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I also present from the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co., of Milwaukee, Wis., through their general agent at Chicago, Ill., a protest against the proposed tax on mutual life insurance companies in the pending revenue measure. Annexed to that, and as a part of it, is an article by John Barnes, general counsel of the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co., both of which communications I ask to have printed in the Record without reading.

There being no objection, the communications were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NORTHWESTERN MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE Co., Chicago, February 6, 1917.

Chicago, February 6, 1917.

Hon. Lawrence Y. Sherman,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: The 'emergency-revenue measure now pending in the Senate does not exempt from the excess-profits tax mutual life insurance companies. On behalf of the 12,000 Chicago policyholders in the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co., of Milwaukee, we write to ask you to use your best efforts to secure an exemption for mutual life insurance companies from this tax. You have long been such a friend of sound life insurance that we feel that further explanation to you is unnecessary. We, however, inclose copy of protest prepared by John Barnes, counsel for the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co., which covers the subject.

We also inclose copies of telegrams sent to various Members of the liouse by Messrs. Fred W. Upham, Alexander A. McCormick, John E. Wilder, Edwin W. Sims, and William L. O'Connell, chairman of the Illinois Public Utility Commission, Unfortunately these telegrams did not reach the men to whom they were sent until after the bill had been reported out of committee.

Very truly, yours,

HOBART & OATES,

HOBART & OATES, General Agents.

THIS PROTEST AGAINST IMPOSING AN EMERGENCY TAX ON MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES (SEC. 201, H. R. 20573) IS RESPECTFULLY SUBMITTED BY THE NORTHWESTERN MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.

(This section proposes to increase our tax from 2 per cent to 10 per cent on all net income over $5,000.)

MITTED BY THE NORTHWESTERN MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.

(This section proposes to increase out tax from 2 per cent to 10 per cent on all net income over $5,000.)

Our company makes no profits. It furnishes insurance at cost. Recause it charges a level premium, such premium must be high enough to provide for unusual contingencies. Otherwise, when they were met we would become insolvent. Our stipulated premium is in excess of normal requirements, but such excess is returned as so-called dividends. Dividends in Hife insurance parlance means the return of excess premium collected. (Mutual Benefit v. Herold, 198 Fed., 199; S. C. in Court of Appeals, 201 Fed., 191; S. C. in U. S. ND, Ct., 231 U. S., 755; Conn. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Eaton, 218 Fed., 208; Conn. General Life Ins. Co. Commonwealth v. Metropolitan, 98 Atl., 1072; New York Life Charve, 198 Atl., 1074; New York Life Charve, 198 Atl., 1074; equal or greater force to mutual fifte insurance companies. This proposed increase in taxes is largely a tax on the widows and orphans of the future.

It has been stated in the press that it was the purpose to tax those business institutions which were making large sums of money to pay for the military protection which the Government proposed to afford to the whole people. Without conceding the justice or propriety of the law as a whole, the reasons given have no application whatever to a mutual life insurance company. Wealth will be called upon to pay only a negligible share of this extraordinary tax. The individual who is entitled to a $4,000 exemption may clip coupons to the extent of $24,000, and is called upon to pay an income tax of $400. A like amount of net income coming to our company for the benefit of its policyholders would be taxable to the extent of $2,000. Our policyholders, then and poor, would be called upon to pay five times as much as the individual of independent means. It may be conceded that it is difficult to impose a tax that will not result in some inequity, but a studied attempt to make a tax unfair could hardly work greater injustice than this bill does to life insurance companies. This bill has not the merit of being a good measure from a socialistic standpoint, because it imposes a burden on thrift and on those who are least able to bear it. There are in round numbers 7,000,000 policyholders in old-line mutual life insurance companies in this country. It ought not to be necessary for them in order to secure fair play to be compelled to imitate the example of other classes and organize for their protection.

It is asserted that these companies control large aggregations of capital. This in itself is no reason why they should be subject to excessive taxation. I never supposed that an individual who had $100,000 in property and owed a like amount was well off financially, and this is the situation as to life insurance companies. Both by contract and by law, practically all of the $33,0 3.4 per cent doctors, 2.9 per cent lawyers, and 3 per cent manufacturers. Teachers, students, salesmen, carpenters, railway employees, stationary engineers and plumbers, architects and draftsmen, telephone and telegraph operators, and clergymen make up the bulk of the remainder of the 36,407 persons insured during this period. The average for a period of years would not differ materially from the figures above given. The idea which I wish to convey is that these are the persons who must pay this emergency tax, and that they are not plutocrats or beneficiarles of the present war, and that there is no reason why they should be singled out and compelled to bear an excessive portion of the burden of taxation for whatever purpose a tax may be imposed.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN BARNES.

Senate joint memorial 8.

Memorial to the Congress of the United States of America, petitioning the United States Government to appropriate $3,000,000 for the purpose of securing a suitable site on the Columbia River, Oreg., and erecting thereon a naval and military base.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America:

We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Oregon, jointly concurring, respectfully represent that—Whereas the Government of the United States can and ought to establish a naval base at the mouth of the Columbia River; and Whereas the people of that portion of the United States known as the Inland Empire, consisting of eastern Oregon, Washington, and Idaho, and other parts of the country immediately affected, have petitioned Congress for an appropriation for $3,000,000 for such purpose and have given in their petition the following reasons, which are confirmed by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon:

First. That upward of 2,500,000 people who live in the territory sought to be protected by the proposed naval base are demanding its immediate establishment.

Second. That the territory sought to be protected against possible hostile invasion embraces an area of 250,000 square miles of the richest and most fertile lands in the United States; a territory whose natural resources and raw products consist of wheat, corn, lumber, fish, dairy products, wool, live stock, fruit cultivation, as well as the commercial industries naturally flowing from such rich and generous resources, the aggregate value of which is approximately $2,000,000,000 annually.

Third. That the military defenses at the mouth of the river, to wit, for can by and Fort Stevens, while accomplishing the purpose for which they were built at the time of their construction, have since by reason of the deepening of the channel at the mouth of the river, the construction of the Government jetties, and the completion of the Celio C mouth of the Columbia River is accused than San Francisco on the round than Seattle and hearly 423 miles than San Francisco on the round trip.

Fifth. Because the harbor at the mouth of the Columbia River meets the five essential requirements of the joint Army and Navy board which, under the direction of Secretary Meyer, investigated the navy-yard situation in the United States. Among the prominent members of this board were Admiral George Dewey and Rear Admiral Bradley A. Fiske. Their report was later indorsed by the General Navy Board, and in substance recommended the following essentials for a naval base:

(a) It should be located at an important strategic point.

(b) It should be accessible from the sea under all conditions.

(c) It should be nearby a protected anchorage sufficient for a fleet.

(d) It must be safe from attack.

(e) It should be placed near a commercial center with plentiful labor and supply facilities.

Sixth. Because there are at least four or five sites suitable and available for the purpose which can be procured without cost or purchased at a nominal figure, and the additional revenue which will necessarily accrue to the Government by reason of the increase in commerce and industry throughout the inland empire incident to the construction and establishment of a naval base is well calculated to pay the greater cost of maintenance: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Pregon (jointly concurring), That we do hereby most respectfully urge

Record, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 2.

Memorial to the Congress of the United States of America petitioning the United States Government to appropriate $390,000 for the improvement of the harbor at Crescent City, Del Norte County, Cal.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

We, your memorialists, the Senate and the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon jointly concurring, respectfully represent that—
Whereas the bay at Crescent City, in the county of Del Norte, State of California, can and ought to be improved at the expense of the Government of the United States; and
Whereas the people of northern California and southern Oregon, and other parts of the country immediately affected, have petitioned Congress for an appropriation of $390,000 for such purpose and have given in their petition the following reasons which are confirmed by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon:

First. One hundred and forty thousand people, who live in the territory to be benefited by it, are demanding the improvement of Crescent City Harbor.

Second. Sixty thousand square miles of territory in northern California, northern Nevada, southern Oregon, and southern Idaho will be directly benefited by the improvement of this harbor.

Third. Regue River Valley alone will enjoy a saving in freight rates of $7,000,000 a year on 18,000,000 boxes of fruit when the present plantings are in full bearing and the harbor at Crescent City is improved.

Fourth. Eighty-four billion feet of merchantable lumber will find its way to Crescent City Harbor from the United States forest reserves, provided the harbor is improved. This would mean at least $24,000,000 for the Government from stumpage and $$$4,000,000 for the geople who fell the timber, handle the logs, and manufacture and move the lumber.

Fifth. It is estimated that private parties and corporations own at least 120,000,000,000 feet of timber in this territory, which if manufactured and moved to market would mean over $$$$$1,200,00 from 500 to 2,000 feet wide and over a mile long of leet deep and over.

Eighth. Crescent City Bay, with the proposed sea walls completed, would be a harbor of refuge for all coastwise craft and could be cheaply deepened and widened to make room for a large fleet of heavy-draft vessels.

Ninth. This bay is half way from San Francisco Bay to the mouth of the Columbia River, and is midway between Canada on the north and Mexico on the south. Its geographical location therefore especially fits it for a naval base, and the close proximity of the Coast Range of mountains to the south and east and the high islands 2 miles to the north admirably fit it for inexpensive defense.

Tenth. The Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors has reported favorably upon the project.

Eleventh. The resources of an empire await this harbor improvement.

Eleventh. The resources of an empire await this harbor improvement.

Twelfth. The people of Del Norte County, Cal., have provided $100,000 to be used by the Government engineers in the proposed work: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (fointly concurring), That we do hereby most respectfully urge and request that the Congress of the United States immediately appropriate the sum of $390,000 to be used with the $100,000 provided by Del Norte County, Cal., by the proper department of the Government for such improvement of the bay and harbor at Crescent City, Del Norte County, Cal., as may have been recommended by the Government engineers in charge of the survey and work to be accomplished: Be it further

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this memorial by the house of representatives, that the chief clerk of the senate be, and he hereby is, instructed to transmit a copy of the same to each Member of the Oregon delegation in Congress.

Mr. LANE. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of Oregon favoring an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at Crescent City, Cal. My colleague has presented to the Senate a similar joint memorial, with the request that it be printed in the RECORD, and I will simply ask that this memorial may be received and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint memorial will be referred to the Committee on Commerce. Mr. LANE. I also present a joint memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, praying for the improvement of Owyhee Irrigation Project, in Malheur County, Oreg., which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint memorial will be referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

Mr. LANE. I have also a joint memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, favoring an appropriation to secure a suitable site on the Columbia River, Oreg., and to erect thereon a naval and military base, which I ask may be referred to the Committee

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PAYMENT OF LIQUOR TAXES.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance a resolution adopted by the State Senate of Nebraska, memorializing Congress to provide by law that collectors of internal revenue shall be required to mail to the governors of the several States and Territories each month a list showing the names and addresses of the persons in the respective States who have paid taxes for the sale of liquor.

I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that Mr. JAMES. think a similar resolution to the one which he presents was submitted by his colleague [Mr. Norms] the other day; and there is a law which provides that the collector shall furnish to the prosecuting officer, upon request, the names of all those who have paid special taxes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand this is intended, however, to be a regular proceeding, automatically provided for, so that the list may be regularly supplied the executive officers of the various States, and not supplied simply upon request.

Mr. JAMES. In our State the Commonwealth attorneys, who are the prosecuting officers, write to the collectors of internal revenue and request them to furnish them with the names of the persons in the county who have paid these special taxes. In that way, they get this information and are given a line upon those who are probably violating the law in local-option terri-That has been the law for some time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then, Mr. President, I modify my request that the resolution be printed in the RECORD, as my colleague has already taken that step. I was not advised of that. I now simply ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on

I think that there is a distinction between the present practice and the request made by the Nebraska Legislature.

Mr. JAMES. I should not have the slightest objection to the passage of a law that would give the governor of a State, if it be desirable, the names of those who have paid special taxes; but it seems to me that, as the law now is, it directs the proper course to be taken-that is, that the prosecuting officer, who must present the evidence to the grand jury and prosecute them, be supplied with the names. The governor in no State with which I am familiar is charged with the prosecution of the violation of the local-option laws. The prosecuting officer of the locality is charged with it, and should therefore be supplied with the information.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I simply desire to have the resolution considered by the Committee on Finance, which is about to report the revenue bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

REVENUES OF PORTO RICO.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, some four or five weeks ago I understand there was printed in the RECORD a memorial adopted by some of the Porto Rican people. That memorial was approved by the present governor of Porto Rico. In that memorial certain declarations were made relative to the revenues of that island government. There was also a denial made of certain facts set forth by what is known as the International Reform Bureau of Porto Rico for prohibition, calling attention to the fact that the total amount of revenue derived from liquor was $1,400,000, and that the people paid for liquor consumed only $1,614,000, or about $200,000 more than the amount of revenue derived.

Mr. President, on the face of it that is an absurdity. here a memorial adopted by the International Reform Bureau of Porto Rico regarding this matter, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The memorial was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Memorial of the International Reform Bureau for Porto Rico prohibition.

To the United States Senate and House of Representatives:

Prominition.

A series of preambles and a resolution adopted by the Legislature of Porto Rico having been printed in full in the Congressional Record in which there is criticism of the International Reform Bureau, through whose Porto Rico secretaries, the Misses Mary and Margaret Leitch, of Garrochales, the native churches, Masons, labor unions, and other bodies representing the good citizenship of Porto Rico have appealed to Congress to enact prohibition for the island, the International Reform Bureau asks equal space in the Record to state the other side, especially as there is a manifest error in the figures which the legislature cites, which will be evident when it is noted that the liquor revenue said to be lost to the insular government, exclusive of local license fees, is given as $1,400,000, and the cost of the liquors to the people as only $1,614,612.35, leaving the liquor dealers only $214,612.35 from which to get the goods, rents, profits, taxes, and licenses. Everyone familiar with liquor statistics knows that the cost of liquors to the drinkers is at least ten times as large as the revenue, besides indirect costs as large for poverty, crime, impaired efficiency, and other by-products of the drink. The head master of the public school in Garrochales says, regarding three licensed shops in that community:

"I visited to-day the three licensed shops in that community:

"I visited to-day the three licensed liquor shops in this place that are near my school and asked each of the men in charge about how much money he took in each week from the sale of alcoholic beverages. The man in the liquor shop directly opposite my school said that he took in about $40 a week. The man in the liquor shop a short distance to the east of my school said he took in about $20 a week, and the man in the liquor shop a short distance to the west of my school said he took in about $8 a week. The owners of each shop pay a license fee of $7 every three months to the government tax collector."

It will be noted by a moment's work in division that in that community, supposed to be fairly representative, the cost to the people is forty-two times as much as the Government revenue. But if the cost in the island at large is even ten times as much it will reach the figure which the local secretaries of the reform bureau accepted as the frequently expressed estimate of the moral leaders of the island, namely, $1,400,000.

As for the other figures of the International Reform Bureau criticized, "$7,000,000" in round numbers for "flour," used there as here for cereals in general, and with perfect understanding on the part of everybody that it is not the only food, but "the staff of life," the round numbers given by the bureau's secretaries there, from the commonly received estimate of religious people, is sustantially verified by the legislature's own figures, for when the cereals are segregated from the legislature's list of food the total amount is $7,505,147.

But the real issue is the revenue question, which is essentially the same in Porto Rico as in Louisiana or New Mexico, except that a majority of the Porto Rico drinkers, who really pay the revenue in buying the drinks that debauch them, are poorer and weaker than the drinking classes of the United States.

THE POVERTY ARGUMENT.

The arguments for prohibition in Porto Rico include all the arguments that have carried prohibition in Mississippi and Colorado and other prohibition States, and the additional arguments that have led nations not much inclined to enact prohibition in their most advanced Commonwealths to prohibit liquor selling in islands under their control that are inhabited by native races of whom the major part are both poor and ignorant, living in one-room cabins, as do the rural three-fourths of the Porto Ricans—almost 900,000 out of 1,200,000. Gov. Arthur Yager, speaking at the Mohonk conference of these 900,000 agricultural laborers, is reported to have said: "This population is on the verge of starvation. If being underfed is slow starvation there are many starving to death every year." It is admitted that the living conditions of these agriculturists have not improved under our occupation, notwithstanding there has been an improvement in industrial conditions. Gov. Yager says this is because there are too many babies, but the missionaries and native churches, that are unitedly asking for prohibition, say it is in large part because there are too many bottles. The people are too poor to afford liquors even if they were only a luxury and not a curse; and too weak to let them alone, especially the rum, when it is offered for sale. There is one place ilcensed to sell intoxicants for every 46 families. These are not all saloons in the American sense, but many of them general stores where the temptation to drink comes to those who make other purchases. These general stores are worse than saloons in that they bring the drink to the attention of women and children and others who would not go to the drink shops. In Garrochales, the place that sold only liquors reported $20 and $40.

DOMINATION OF RUM IN PORTO RICAN POLITICS TO BE PREVENTED.

DOMINATION OF RUM IN PORTO RICAN POLITICS TO BE PREVENTED.

There is a very special argument for prohibition in the nature of the bill itself. It proposes to give Territorial self-government to a people who until recently were under the Spanish monarchy, and so have had less experience in self-government than the people of any Territorial government under our flag. Hawaii had been a Republic before it came to us, and had had many years of prohibition. When we gave it Territorial government the Senate refused to concur with the House in putting prohibition into the enabling act, and the result was that liquor dealers secured three seats out of nine in the Territorial senate, and from inside and outside dominated the island politics. And when Congress was again considering Hawaiian prohibition it was persuaded by the specious plea of "self-government" to submit the question to the Hawaiian people, and the liquor interests were able to manipulate the election in their own interest. In consequence the good citizens of Hawaii are now a third time asking Congress to give them prohibition.

Naturally, the Porto Rico Legislature asks to have prohibition left for local decision. But in this case, as in Hawaii, "home rule" would be rum rule. And "self-government" means little with a people of whom a major part have proved they lack self-control in the presence of this subite temptation. The very fact that the legislature accepted the absurd statistics we have exposed shows its unfitness to handle this subject.

Porto Rico in having moral legislation put upon it by Congress would be treated no differently from other Territories more advanced, on which Congress has imposed in past years laws against polygany, against prize fights, and against divorce colonies. Territories are always helped by Congress in their first experiments in government. It should be remembered also that the Porto Rican people themselves have asked for this action in numerous and representative petitions of the missions, the

THE REVENUE QUESTION.

All arguments against Porto Rico prohibition are, in the main, pleas to keep the liquor revenue. The insular government, according to figures furnished by Gov. Yager, derives an income of $1,392,446.31 from liquors, besides which there are municipal liquor taxes. But the words of Gladstone are always in order when a fear of embarrassment from the loss of liquor revenue is expressed: "Give me a sober people and I will take care of the revenue." Senators from prohibition States and from other States where many towns are "dry" are well aware that the loss of much larger liquor revenues has never embarrassed either local or State governments because the diversion of a vastly greater sum that had been spent in drink to honest trades has increased revenues from other forms of taxation, and prohibition has also decreased greatly the taxes caused by crime and pauperism. In these two ways prohibition has almost automatically taken care of the revenue adjustment, for which a full year is allowed in the amendment.

The United States should rid Porto Rico of the liquor traffic partly because much of it was placed there since and because of our occupation.

The peasants of Russia would not have banished vodka by their own vote, but they rejoice in the blessings which prohibition has brought, which the chancellor of the exchequer says has more than offset the burden of war. Surely, in the presence of such a demonstration Congress should not hesitate to give the starving peasants of Porto Rico the same box.

What prohibition would do for San Juan and its cultivated Porto Ricans is pictured in recently published descriptions of what prohibition has done for Atlanta, Seattle, and Denver. Let it be remembered that the States of Georgia, Washington, and Colorado imposed prohibition on these cities despite the cry of "home rule" and "self-government," which those cities are now glad was overruled.

Respectfully submitted for the International Reform Buerau.

WILBUR F. CRAFTS, Superintendent.

Mr. GRONNA. I also present a telegram from the president and secretary of the Bismarck Verein of North Dakota, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have received a great many letters in the nature of petitions from people in my State with reference to certain legislation pending before Congress. I have not thought it necessary to present these petitions, but I want to take the time of the Senate for a few minutes this morning to get some information that will be of interest to

Our people are very much interested in the water-power bills, especially the one for the development of water power on navigable streams. They do not understand why we do not pass legislation under which this development can take place, and they have been writing me and urging that it be enacted into law, and asking for information as to why we were not doing something.

Senate bill 3331 passed the Senate March 8, 1916, almost a year ago. It passed the House of Representatives on July 15, 1916, amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting a substitute agreed to by the House. A conference was asked for by the Senate on July 15, 1916, more than six months ago. The conference was granted by the House July 21, 1916, some six or seven months ago; but we have had no report from the committee of conference. I see that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Shields] is present. He had charge of the bill in the Senate; and is, I think, one of the conferees. I should like, therefore, to ask that Senator what the prospects are for a report from the conferees, and to give us such information as he can as to what steps have been taken in relation to that bill, and the causes of the delay. The people of my State do not understand why the Senate can not get action of one kind or another on this measure, and if the Senator from Tennessee can give me any information I should like very much

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee will be very glad to furnish the Senate information as to the progress of the conference in regard to an agreement on Senate

In a very few days after the appointment of the conference committee by the Senate and the House a meeting was arranged and held and the bill as passed by the Senate and that passed by the House as a substitute for the Senate bill were thoroughly gone over. Indeed, several conferences were held and the differences between the two Houses thoroughly discussed. The chief of those differences are these: The Senate bill provides that permits to build dams in navigable rivers may be granted by the Secretary of War upon plans and specifications submitted to him and the Chief of Engineers and approved by them. The House bill struck out this provision and provides that all applications for permits shall be made to Congress, as required by the present law. That is the first material point of difference,

The Senate bill does not provide for charges or royalties in favor of the Federal Government upon the water-power developed, as is now authorized by the act of 1910. The bill reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the House contained no provision for such charges, but by amendment placed upon the bill in the House the Secretary of War is authorized to impose royalties, in his discretion, upon all water-power development by companies making improvements under the provisions of the bill.

The third point of difference was concerning what are ordinarily known as the recapture clauses of these bills. The Senate bill provided that at the expiration of 50 years, the life of the permit, the property could be taken over by the United States and operated as authorized under existing laws, or a new permit granted to the original permittee upon conditions authorized by then existing laws, or the United States, through the Secretary of War, could grant a new permit, upon conditions then authorized by law, to a new permittee; and where the property is taken over by the United States or granted to a new permittee it is provided that the United States or the new permittee shall pay the original permittee "the fair value of the property" as then agreed upon by the permittee or owner of the property and the Secretary of War, or upon their failure to agree, as may be fixed and adjudged, by the United States district court in a proceeding instituted in that court for that purpose, the value of the permit not to be included in estimating the value or price to be paid.

The bill, as amended by the House, provided for deducting or excluding some of the elements of value of such property.

The conferees were unable to agree upon either of these material points of difference. After several conferences, begun early in August and continued until near the end of the last session, it was agreed that the conferees should adjourn to the 27th of November, a week before the convening of the present session of Congress, when they were to meet in Washington and, if possible, agree upon a report. When the time for meeting came, the conferees for the House-Judge Adamson, Judge SIMS, and Mr. ESCH-were then engaged in the railroad investigation under the Newlands resolution. That committee was then holding public hearings, and those gentlemen were engaged every day in that work, and it was impossible for them to meet with the conferees of the Senate. As soon as the active work of that committee was completed and those gentlemen were at leisure, the Senate conferees urged a meeting for further discussion and agreement if possible; but the conferees of the House were of the opinion that such a meeting would be useless at that time, and none was held.

About the 25th of January I addressed a note to all the conferees and asked for a meeting on January 27, but Judge Adamson, replying, stated that, considering the differences upon material questions, a meeting was not only unnecessary but would accomplish nothing.

I can say that the Senate conferees have at all times been willing to meet to discuss the bill, but have at no time been willing to yield on the three material points of difference. They have at no time been willing to concede that the provision authorizing the Secretary of War to grant the permit should be stricken out and the law remain as at present, believing that that would entirely defeat one of the primary objects of the bill. In other words, they are of the opinion that it would be a general dam law in name only if the consent of Congress by special act was required for every project, and the present embarrassing condition would be continued. The Senate conferees have also firmly refused to agree to the imposition of royalties upon the power developed, as provided for in the bill passed by the House, because six amendments offered in the Senate proposing such changes were rejected as unconstitutional and unjust.

The Senate conferees think the recapture clause in the Senate bill is in all things fair and just to all parties, but they were perfectly willing to substitute for the words "fair value," used in the Senate bill, the words "just compensation," used in the Constitution concerning the taking of private property for public use, or "reasonable value," as used in the act of 1910, the present law. These words all mean the same thing.

Some negotiations are at this time going on, and it is now believed that a point has been reached where we can have another conference and perhaps accomplish something.

Mr. JONES. As I understand, there has been no meeting of the conferees at this session of Congress.

Mr. SHIELDS. No; there has been no meeting during this session of the Congress.

Mr. JONES. But the Senate conferees have been willing and anxious and glad to meet?

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senate conferees have at all times been anxious to hold further conferences and make efforts to agree upon the differences existing, but have not succeeded in effecting a meeting

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate further, except to say that I do hope that the conferees will try to get together upon this measure. I do not think it is an enactment that should be delayed or held up in connection with the Myers water-power bill, which apparently can not be passed at this session. This bill relates to water powers in navigable streams, where the conditions are very different, and there may be differences even in fundamental matters. The National Government has an interest in these matters.

streams that it does not have in nonnavigable streams, and provisions may be authorized in this bill that would have no excuse in the Myers bill. There seem to be but three points of difference between the House and the Senate. Upon two of these, so far as I am concerned, I can not see any insuperable difficulties in the way of reaching an agreement—that is, with reference to the recapture clause, and with reference to the matter of coming to Congress for a permit. The other is more fundamental, but the provision in the Senate bill is in itself a compromise. It is fair to the Government and fair to the people, and should be retained substantially as it is. Some concessions can be made even in that, however, that ought to command the approval of both Houses.

It does seem to me that the conferees ought to try to get together and, if they can not reach an agreement, report a disagreement, so that each House will have an opportunity, at any rate, to express itself further upon the matter.

I am glad to have the information given by the Senator from Tennessee. My people are very much interested in this legislation, which ought to be enacted in some form; and it seems to me now with regard to this question of preparedness, and all that sort of thing, that it is of even increased importance, because I am satisfied that if we can get proper legislation along these lines there are many great nitrate plants, especially, that will go up in different parts of the country that would be of incalculable benefit in case of trouble.

I hope the conferees will strive to reach an agreement. I am glad the Senate conferees can not be blamed for the delay. I am sure they will do all in their power to secure an agreement either to agree or disagree.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I fully concur with the Senator from Washington in his desire that an agreement be reached upon the differences between the Senate and the House upon this bill and in his further statement that the development of these vast national resources ought not to be further delayed, certainly not upon contentions which are unsound and unjust, for no one can with reason or upon authority insist that the Federal Government has any property interest in rivers. I will say that the conferees of the Senate have never controverted, nor does this bill controvert, the right of the States in which the navigable rivers are situated to impose royalties upon waterpower resources of navigable streams. That may be done under the Senate bill. It provides for full State control. It was the contention of the Senate when this bill was passed, and is the contention of the conferees, that these waters belonged to the States and their grantees; that the Federal Government has no sovereignty over them except to control navigation, and no property interest of any kind in them, and that it can not impose royalties or other charges for the use of them. Now, it is just a question whether those royalties shall go where they belong, into the treasuries of the States for the benefit of their people, or go into the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of the whole country. In other words, it is a question whether or not the General Government shall usurp the sovereignty of the States and confiscate the property they hold in trust for their citizens in these waters or whether the States shall be allowed to exercise their lawful sovereignty and to appropriate these natural resources as their general assemblies, in their wisdom and discretion, may direct.

I think there ought to be a final conference, and something ought to be done, that the conferees might make a report. And in the last communication I addressed to Judge Adamson for the conferees of the Senate I asked for a conference, in order that we might come to some final conclusion, that there might be some final action which we could report to the respective We wanted some action; then it was a disagreement. But, as I said a while ago, I think now, under pending negotiations, we can have a further conference and probably reach an agreement. If we are unable to effect a conference very soon, we will report that fact to the Senate.

SURVEY OF INTRACOASTAL WATERWAY (S. DOC. NO. 705).

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a public document a letter from the Chief of Engineers, transmitting the report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors of the survey of the intracoastal waterway from St. George Sound, Fla., to the Rio Grande. This matter has been printed by the committee, but in referring to it in the river and harbor bill we can not refer to the committee The material is ready and it will cost very little to make it a public document. The only way we can properly refer to it in the bill is as "Document so-and-so"; and this being a committee print, has no official status. I therefore ask to have it printed as a public document.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the matter go to the Committee on Printing, as do all other similar requests for printing.

Mr. FLETCHER. The only objection to that is that the bill to which I refer will be reported out of committee in a day or

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing to confer with the Senator from Florida to-day, and if it is proper that this matter should be printed as a document, as he suggests, we can report it immediately.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The matter will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. FLETCHER subsequently, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 353), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the pamphlet entitled "Survey of the Intracoastal Waterway from St. George Sound, Fla., to the Rio Grande" be printed as a Senate document.

BATTLE MONUMENT AT THOROLD, CANADA (S. REPT. 1016).

Mr. WILLIAMS. I submit a favorable report from the Committee on Foreign Relations, for which I ask immediate consideration. I will say, by way of explanation, that it is a mere matter of international courtesy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 29.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the appreciation of the Government and the people of the United States is hereby expressed of the action taken by the people of Thorold, Ontario, Canada, in erecting a monument near that place to commemorate the death on the battle field of Beaverdams, or Beachwood, of a number of soldiers in the service of the United States who there lost their lives during the War of 1812.

ALASKAN INVESTIGATION.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I report a joint resolution (S. J. Res. 204) for which I intend to ask immediate consideration of the It has been unanimously reported favorably by the Committee on Territories. The facts of the joint resolution originated in the House, and is similar to a joint resolution that has been introduced there. It provides for the appointment of a joint committee from the Senate and the House composed of members of the various committees for the purpose of considering legislation for Alaska, matters concerning the building of the railroads, the question as to the laying out of those railroads in various sections of Alaska, the question of the disposal of the coal lands of Alaska, the fisheries question, the question of commerce and navigation, and the question of the fortification of Members of Congress, in consultation with the various departments, have recommended the appointment of this committee; and I, therefore, at the request of these departments and of the Member of the House who introduced this joint resolution there, have introduced it here and submitted it to each member of the Committee on Territories. There is a unanimous report (S. Rept. 1014) in favor of it.

I may say that the joint resolution calls for no appropriation. If there is any appropriation made, it will have to be made by another committee. It is simply an indorsement of the project if the resolution is adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, has the Senator asked for immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; I have asked for its present considera-

Mr. SMOOT. There are questions involved, as outlined by the statement made by the Senator, that are of very great im-portance; and I think we ought at least to have the joint resolution printed, and see just what it contains before its passage is asked for.

Mr. PITTMAN. I could not hear the Senator.
Mr. SMOOT. I say, I think it ought to go to the calendar and be printed, so as to allow us to see just what it contains. It is a far-reaching measure. I do not know what authority is given to the committee.

Mr. PITTMAN. None whatever. It is simply a committee of investigation, that is all. There is no authority given to the committee, and no appropriation for it. It is simply an expression that a joint committee should be appointed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada whether there is any recommendation or outline as to the manner in which the coal lands of Alaska shall be disposed of?

Mr. PITTMAN. Not the slightest; no recommendation at

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is this a joint resolution?
Mr. PITTMAN. It is a joint resolution.
Mr. SHAFROTH. It just appoints a committee?
Mr. PITTMAN. It proposes to appoint a committee solely to sit and investigate and recommend legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the resolution be stated, and then it can be determined.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Senate joint resolution 204.

Resolved, etc., That a joint committee consisting, respectively, of the chairman and the ranking majority and minority members of the Committees on Appropriations, Territories, Commerce, Public Lands, Mines and Mining, and Fisheries of the Senate, and the ranking majority and minority members of the Committees on Appropriations, the Territories, the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the Public Lands, and Mines and Mining of the House of Representatives, who are Members elect to the Sixty-fifth Congress, is created and directed to examine into existing conditions in the Territory of Alaska relating to matters of legislation and appropriations concerning the development and government thereof, including the construction and operation of Government railroads, other public services, and all questions affecting the Territory which are within the jurisdiction of the respective committees enumerated. The joint committee is authorized to choose a chairman, and in the event any member is unable to serve the chairman of the committee of which that person is a member is authorized to fill the vacancy by the selection of another member of that committee. The said joint committee is authorized to exercise the authority and to incur all expenses necessary to carry out the purposes hereof, which expenses (not to exceed $25,000) shall be paid from appropriations for the construction and operation of railroads in Alaska. They are also authorized to use such available governmental agencies as may, in their judgment, economically expedite the purposes of this act.

Mr. McCUMBER. I object to the present consideration of this or any other junketing proposition to take anyone to Alaska or China, or anywhere else. I think it ought to have the consideration of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION AT TAMPA, FLA.

Mr. FLETCHER. I report back favorably from the Committee on Commerce the bill (S. 8079) to amend the first and seventh paragraphs of section 4414 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of April 9, 1906. I call the attention of my colleague to the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. The bill simply provides for a board of local inspectors at Tampa, Fla. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. It is recommended by the Secretary of Com-

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if this was not considered a year ago by the Committee on Appropriations and this board provided for?

Mr. BRYAN. No; there is no board of inspection at Tampa. The Secretary writes a letter from which I quote:

The bill provides for the appointment of a board of local inspectors of the Steamboat-Inspection Service at the port of Tampa, Fla., and as Tampa is a growing city, and its shipping is rapidly increasing, I am of the opinion that it would be desirable to establish a board of local inspectors at that place, and therefore recommend that the said bill be favorably considered.

Mr. SMOOT. As I remember, although I may be mistaken, the same question was before the Committee on Appropriations some time ago.

Mr. BRYAN. I think the Senator refers to the headquarters of the customs collection district.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be,

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MALAMBO FIRE CLAIMS.

Mr. POMERENE. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 6583) to enable the Secretary of War to pay the amount awarded to the Malambo fire claimants by the joint commission under article 6 of the treaty of November 18, 1903, between the United States and Panama, and I submit a report (No. 1019) thereon.

The Committee on Foreign Relations feel that these claims should be paid, and we recommend that the bill be referred to the Committee on Appropriations to be attached as an amendment to the general deficiency appropriation bill. I therefore move that the Committee on Foreign Relations be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that the bill and report be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BRYAN. What is the nature of this claim?

Mr. POMERENE. These were fire losses in Panama. mission has passed upon these claims. They arose in this way

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator has answered my question sufficiently.

Mr. POMERENE. They were fumigating certain buildings and on account of carelessness the loss occurred.

Mr. LODGE. The Government destroyed them. Mr. POMERENE. The Government destroyed them.

Mr. LODGE. It is provided for by treaty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MEASUREMENT OF VESSELS.

Mr. SHIELDS. From the Committee on Interoceanic Canals I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 8055) providing that the Panama Canal rules shall govern in the measurement of vessels for imposing tolls, and I submit a report (No. 1015) thereon. This is an emergency measure recommended by the Secretary of War and it is necessary to save a very large loss in tolls which is now unavoidably going on in the canal. For that reason I desire to ask unanimous consept for its immediate consideration.

Mr. JONES. I wish to ask the Senator if the bill relates to our lumber vessels going through the canal and the manner in which their tonnage shall be determined when the toll is fixed? Does it relate to that matter?

Mr. SHIELDS. I think it does.

Mr. JONES. I shall have to ask that the bill may go over until I can examine it, because I know our people are very much interested in a matter of that kind. I will ask the Senator whether it puts into effect the rule or regulation or method of determining the toll charges that was practiced by the department or the Canal Zone people some time ago? Does it confirm that rule?

Mr. SHIELDS. The object of the bill is to do away with the conflicts in the measurement of vessels under rules promulgated by the Commissioner of Navigation here at Washington and the canal authorities.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the bill may go over until I can examine it.

Mr. SHIELDS. The bill gives the Panama authorities exclusive control over the measurement of the vessels so as to apply the rules adopted by them some time since, with which doubtless the Senator from Washington is familiar, that the vessels shall be measured according to their earning capacity. I think it does affect the question the Senator has raised, and if he desires to investigate it, of course, I will not insist on the immediate consideration as I intended to do. I have submitted a report upon the bill which will be printed, and I ask the Senator that he examine it as early as possible that I may call up the bill soon. As I have stated, it amounts at present under the regulations of the Commissioner of Navigation to a loss to the United States of about three-quarters of a million dollars a year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection, and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. JONES. I merely wish to say that one of the rules adopted with reference to measurements in determining the tonnage of vessels was very objectionable to our people, and therefore I have asked that the bill may go over for examina-

ARKANSAS RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 8105) granting the consent of Congress to the Conway County bridge district to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Arkansas River, in the State of Arkansas, and I submit a report (No. 1017) thereon. I call the attention of the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson] to the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment. ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time. and passed.

HEIRS OF PATRICK J. FLYNN.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 317, submitted by Mr. Hollis on the 13th ultimo, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Stephen Flynn, Francis Flynn, Philip Flynn, and James Flynn, sons of Patrick J. Flynn, late a conductor of elevator in the Senate Office Building, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

LOLIE M. EARLE.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 344, submitted by Mr. Lodge on the 31st ultimo, reported favorably thereon, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Lolie M. Earle, widow of David M. Earle, late a messenger of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. SHIELDS. I desire to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 378) to provide for the appointment of a district judge in the middle and eastern judicial districts in the State of Tennessee, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think we ought to begin to take up bills on the calendar unless we take up and consider those that have not already been reached.

Mr. SHIELDS. I ask the Senator not to object. This is really an emergency measure.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is so much conversation I can not hear a word the Senator says.

Mr. SHIELDS. The object of the bill is to create a district judge for the middle district of Tennessee. It is the only district in the United States that has not a judge, except one in Mississippi, and a bill is pending to create a judge for that district. Hon. Edward T. Sanford, who holds the courts for the eastern and middle districts of Tennessee, is a man of fine character, an able lawyer, a splendid judge, and one of the most industrious judges I ever knew; but the work in the two districts is so great that he is unable to dispose of it. is impossible for him to longer keep the dockets clear. In fact, his attempt to do so is killing him. It is a bill that ought to be passed so that each of these districts may have a judge. The business of these districts has increased greatly in the last five or six years. Judge Sanford resides in the eastern district, and has all the work there that one judge can do. The object of this bill is to provide a judge for the middle district. It calls for no other additional expense than the salary of the judge.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President, I merely wish to say one word upon the bill. The judge, as my colleague says, is a very careful, painstaking, hard-working man, and he certifies that it is impossible for him to do the work of the two districts. There are two districts now in Tennessee, with a marshal, cleri, and everything, except a judge, provided for both districts. The judge of the eastern division has been holding court for the middle district, and the bill merely creates a judge for the district which has already been created.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment, in section 7, page 3, line 3, after the words "April and October," to insert "and at Cookeville, in said State, on the first Monday in February and June," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter there shall be for each of the two judicial districts, to wit, the middle district and the eastern district in the State of Tennessee, a district judge of the United States, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate, and who shall possess the same qualifications and shall have the same powers and jurisdiction and receive the same compensation prescribed by law in respect to district judges of the United States: Provided, That the judge now acting in both said districts shall continue to act in both said districts until a judge is appointed and qualified for the middle district as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That the district judge now holding office and acting for both said districts shall be assigned to and hereafter be the district judge for the eastern district in said State.

SEC. 3. That the eastern district of said State shall be composed of the counties embraced in the eastern grand division of the State of Tennessee.

nessec. 4. That the middle district of said State shall be composed of the counties now embraced in the middle grand division of the State of Tennessee.

Sec. 5. That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint the district judge for the middle district in said State, who shall, as to all business and proceedings arising in said middle judicial district, possess and exercise all the powers conferred by existing law upon judges of the district courts of the United States, and who shall succeed to and possess the same powers and perform the same duties within the said middle judicial district as are now possessed and performed by the district judge acting for both said districts in said State.

Sec. 6. That terms of court may be held in the eastern judicial district of said State at the places and in the manner now prescribed by law.

sac. 7. That terms of court may be held in the middle judicial district of said State at Nashville, in said State, in each year on the first Mondays of April and October, and at Cookeville, in said State, on the first Mondays in February and June, after the passage of this act.

SEC. 8. That the clerks of the courts of the eastern judicial district of Tennessee and the marshal and district attorney for said district shall perform the duties of their offices in the manner now prescribed by law for said district.

SEC. 9. That the clerk of the court for the middle judicial district of Tennessee and the marshal and district attorney for said district.

SEC. 9. That the clerk of the court for the middle judicial district of Tennessee and the marshal and district attorney for said district shall keep their offices in the city of Nashville, in said State, and shall do and perform all the duties appertaining to their offices for said court.

SEC. 10. That terms of court may be held at the places prescribed by this act and in the manner now prescribed by law in the middle judicial district by the judge of the eastern judicial district, or in the eastern judicial district, by the judge of the middle judicial district, provided it is mutually agreed by and between the judges of each of said districts time the public interest demands it.

SEC. 11. That all laws and parts of laws so far as inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STANLEY COUNTY, S. DAK., BUFFALO PASTURE.

Mr. STERLING. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 8669) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to extend the lease of certain land in Stanley County, S. Dak., for a buffalo pasture, and I submit a report (No. 1018) thereon. This bill is in the nature of an emergency measure, as the lease expires the 1st of July next. Therefore I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to have the bill read before I give consent to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read. The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to extend for a period of not exceeding 10 years to the heirs or personal representatives of James Philip, deceased, or to their assignees or transferees, the lease executed to him July 1, 1907, for a buffalo pasture, of sections 26 and 27, north half of section 34, north half of the northeast quarter and north half of the northwest quarter of section 35, and lot 4 of section 25, township 6 north, range 30 east, Black Hills meridian, and he is authorized to withdraw said lands from entry during the terms of said lease: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may at any time cancel said renewed lease, which shall contain all the provisions of the original lease: Provided further, That the parties in interest shall be allowed an extension of time until July 1, 1917, to pay the last two installments of rent under the original lease.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota a question or two about this matter. How many acres does the lease involve?

Mr. STERLING. Something over 1,600 acres, I will say. Mr. SHAFROTH. It is the renewal of a past lease? Mr. STERLING. It is the extension of a lease—a 10 years' lease—that expires July 1 next. I wish to say to the Senator that this is for the pasturage of the largest buffalo herd in the world. Over 500 buffalo are kept in this area.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am very much opposed to the leasing system, but this is a matter that has already been consummated by the Interior Department. I think the policy is wrong, but I shall not interpose an objection at this time.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

R. 20632), which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WADSWORTH submitted an amendment proposing to amend the act authorizing the acquisition of a public-building for the site and building, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OLIVER submitted an amendment authorizing the President of the United States to appoint Brig. Gen. Chambers Mc-Kibbin, United States Army, retired, to the position and rank of major general on the retired list, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 20783), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted an amendment providing that petty officers and noncommissioned officers and enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps on the retired list who had creditable Civil War service in the regular or volunteer forces prior to April 9, 1865, shall receive the rank and rating of pay of the next higher enlisted grade upon the retired list by reason of such service, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 20632), which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. Sterling, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill (S. 4191, 64th Cong., 1st sess.) granting an increase of pension to Adroniram C. Harper be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

On motion of Mr. HITCHCOCK, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill (S. 41, 62d Cong., 1st sess.) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Jefferson be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

SUBMARINE WARFARE.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I submit the resolution I send to the desk, which is designed to secure from the Secretary of State his view of international law upon the use of submarines. I ask that the resolution may be read, printed, and go over under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the reso-

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 354), as follows:

Whereas on the 3d day of February, 1917, the President of the United States in an address to the Congress informed the country of the severance of diplomatic relations with the Imperial Government of Germany, giving his reasons therefor, and citing certain passages in previous diplomatic notes in support thereof; and Whereas the note of this Government to the Imperial Government of Germany in reference to the sinking of the Sussex declared as follows:

Germany in reference to the shiring of the Lastonian lows:

"It has become painfully evident to it (this Government) that the position which it took at the very outset is inevitable, namely, the use of submarines for the destruction of an enemy's commerce is of necessity, because of the very character of the vessels employed and the very methods of attack which their employment, of course, involves, utterly incompatible with the principles of humanity, the long-established and incontrovertible rights of neutrals, and the sacred immunities of noncombatants"; and Whereas in the note of this Government to the Imperial Government of Germany in the matter of the sinking of the Lusitania, we declared as follows:

Whereas in the note of this Government to the Imperial Government of Germany in the matter of the sinking of the Lusitania, we declared as follows:

"The Government of the United States therefore desires to call the attention of the Imperial Government with the utmost earnestness to the fact that the objection to their present method of fittack against the trade of their enemies lies in the practical impossibility of employing submarines in the destruction of commerce without disregarding those rules of fairness, reason, justice, and humanity which all modern opinion regards as imperative. It is practically impossible for the officers of a submarine to visit a merchantman at sea and examine her papers and cargo. It is practically impossible for them to make a prize of her; and if they can not put a prize crew on board of her, they can not sink her without leaving her crew and all on board of her at the mercy of the sea in her small boats.

" Manifestly submarines can not be used against merchantmen, as the last few weeks have shown, without an inevitable violation of many sacred principles of justice and humanity"; and Whereas in the same note we again declare:

"American citizens act within their indisputable rights in taking their ships in traveling wherever their legitimate business calls them upon the high seas, and exercise those rights in what should be the well-justified confidence that their lives will not be endangered by acts done in clear violation of universally acknowledged international obligations, and certainly in the confidence that their own Government will sustain them in the exercise of their rights"; and

Whereas in the same note this Government further declares as a principle of international law "the rights of American shipmasters or of American citizens bound on lawful errands as passengers on merchant ships of beligerent nationality," and further asserts in said note, "that it must hold the Imperial German Government to a strict accountability for any infringement of those rights, international or incidental"; and Whereas on February 10, 1916, in our note to the Imperial German Government we declared:

"If commanders of German vessels of war * * * should destroy on the high seas an American vessel or the lives of American citizens, it would be difficult for the Government of the United States to view the act in any other light than as an indefensible violation of neutral rights, and if such a deplorable situation should arise, the Imperial German Government can readily appreciate that the Government of the United States would be constrained to hold the Imperial German Government to a strict accountability, * * * and to take any steps it might deem necessary to take to safe-guard American rights and property and secure to American citizens the full enjoyment of their acknowledged rights on the high seas"; and guard American rights and property and secure to American citizens the full enjoyment of their acknowledged rights on the high seas"; and Whereas notwithstanding these notes many belligerent merchant vessels have since been sunk by the undersea craft of the German Government, without notice, and without further protest on the part of this Government, indicating an acquiescence by this Government in such warfare, at least so long as it does not involve the loss of the lives of American citizens; and Whereas in his said address before the Congress the President declared:

"If American ships and American lives should in fact be sacrificed by their (Germany's) naval commanders in heedless contravention of the just and reasonable understandings of international law and the obvious dictates of humanity, I shall take the liberty of coming again before the Congress to ask that authority be given me to use any means that may be necessary for the protection of our seamen and our people in the prosecution of their peaceful and legitimate errands on the high seas"; and Whereas these several declarations leave doubtful and uncertain just what the obligations are which we impose upon the Imperial German Government as a condition for the continuance of peace between these two great countries: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved That the President of the United States be requested, if not incompatible with public interest, to direct the Secretary of State to submit to the Senate the view of this Government upon the limitation of the use of submarines (a) as against belligerent merchant vessels carrying American goods not contraband of war; (b) as against such vessels in respect to warning and safety of passengers and crew; (c) in respect to the sinking of American vessels carrying contraband, without notice, where the death of passengers or crew does not result; (d) in respect to American vessels carrying mails to belligerent countries; (e) in respect to any other acts of submarine warfare may involve this country in the prese

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, it is evident from reading these several notes that in the very beginning of our controversy with the Imperial German Government, we took the position that the submarine could not be lawfully used at all in warfare against merchant vessels. We also declared that the use of the submarine against such vessels would be considered by us as an infringement of international law, for which we would hold the offending Government to a "strict accountability." think we have abandoned that earlier position; but it is not clear at the present time, in the light of the many different notes, and of many things in which we have acquiesced, just exactly what this Government will hold to be the limitation of the use of submarines in this war. And this was the subject and basis of the discourse by the President of the United States in the Senate a short time ago, and the subject upon which we severed our relations with the Imperial German Government, it seems to me we ought to know as accurately as it is possible for us to know just what the Government of the United States at the present time deems to be an infringement upon international law in the use of submarines, to the end that we may avoid a conflict, if possible, and that other nations may be put on their guard as to what we believe to be a gross abuse in the use of this subsea craft.

ask that the resolution go over under the rule and be I shall probably ask to discuss it at some time in the printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule and be printed.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to submit a notice to the effect, that, when the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 19410) is under consideration, I shall move to suspend paragraph 3, of Rule XVI, for the purpose of offering an amendment to the bill relating to the carrying through the mails of liquor advertisements unless such an amendment is incorporated in the bill by the committee. I ask, without reading, that the notice be printed in the usual form, and also that it be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The notice is as follows:

I hereby give notice that when the Post Office appropriation bill is being considered in the Senate I shall move to suspend paragraph 3 of Rule XVI prohibiting the reception of general legislation to any general appropriation bill, in order that I may propose the following amendment to be inserted at the proper place in said bill as a new section:

"Sec. — That no letter, postal card, circular, newspaper, pamphlet, or publication of any kind containing any advertisement of spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors of any kind, or containing a solicitation of an order or orders for said liquors, or any of them, shall be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States, or be delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier when addressed or directed to any person, firm, corporation, or association, or other addressee, at any place or point in any State or Territory of the United States in which it is by the law in force in the State or Territory at that time unlawful to advertise or solicit orders for such liquors, or any of them, respectively.

"Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited, or shall knowingly send or cause to be sent, anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of the provisions of this section, or shall knowingly deliver or cause to be delivered by mail anything herein forbidden to be carried by mail, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both; and for any subsequent offense shall be imprisoned not more than five years. Any person violating any provision of this section may be tried and punished either in the district in which the unlawful matter or publication was mailed or to which it was carried by mail for delivery, according to direction thereon, or in which it was caused to be delivered by mail to the person to whom it was addressed: *Provided, That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to make public from time to time in suitable bulletins or public notices the names of States in which it is unlawful to advertise or solicit orders for such liquors."

AQUILA NEBEKER.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5632) for the relief of Aquila Nebeker, which were, on page 2, line 7, after "are," to insert "found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be"; and on page 2, line 19, after "thereto," to insert: "Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall jointly report to Congress, in detail, the factors upon which the valuations were made.'

Mr. GALLINGER. On behalf of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? If there be none, morning business is closed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 19359, being the Agricultural appropriation bill

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19359) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the pending bill, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a pending amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. The pending amendment is one offered by Mr. Shafforth, on page 70, line 14, after the word "expenses," to strike out "$155,000" and to insert "$175,000"; on the same page, in line 17, after the name "Hawaii," to strike out "$40,000" and to insert "$50,000"; and on the same page, in line 24, after the name "Hawaii," to strike out "$5,000" and to insert "$10,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President-

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Utah to allow me to make a statement at this

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly. Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. As I understand the status of this amendment, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Shafroth] withdrew it, in so far as it relates to Hawaii.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I did so on the basis of preventing a call for a quorum last evening, but I expected to renew the amendment.

I will state to the Senator from Utah that this item is estimated for, and I have here what the department says about it. Although the totals are changed, the amendment merely involves an addition of $10,000. I read now from the language of the department with reference to it:

Ten thousand dollars for the Hawaiian experiment station. This amount is needed in order further to develop the extension work authorized by Congress and to investigate a number of serious problems of sugar cane and plneapples which confront the growers of these crops. Investigational work in the growing of coffee, especially with reference to disease control, also should be undertaken.

Mr. President, I want to say that, except for the fact that I am chairman of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, these matters are not of any direct interest to me, and the Senate can rely upon the fact that there has been no pressure whatever made by any person to get the department to submit the estimate. They have voluntarily submitted the estimate and stated their desire to have this work done. I have not been to see the department about it, nor did I go to see the department in connection with a similar amendment for Porto Rico, which was adopted last evening. It is a matter that the department believes absolutely necessary for the proper development of the islands, and I hope there will be no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment in line 20, page 55, so that the amount appropriated will read "$57,760" instead of "$47,760." I offer that amendment because I desire a portion of the amount appropriated for the Bureau of Entomology to be used in the eradication, if possible, of a disease which is very vitally affecting the bean and pea crops of the country. I presume Senators are familiar with pea crops of the country. I presume Senators are familiar with the fact that the bean crop of the United States amounts to practically $25,000,000 a year, and that it is largely produced in Michigan and New York. There is a very serious disease working considerable havoc in that crop as well as in the pea crop, and it ought to be eradicated. These are very necessary articles of food, and steps should be taken which will protect that product against unnecessary ravages.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will suggest to the Senator that the law for the current year made an appropriation under this heading of $42,760. The estimate this year was for $47,760, and we allowed the full estimate sent in by the department. The increase was suggested, doubtless, having in mind reference to the specific matter to which the Senator from Michigan has called attention. It will be seen that the increase in the appropriation over the amount last year is $5,000.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is not enough to do the work if it is to be done at all. If we are going to do anything to arrest this disease, we must provide for it adequately, and if the money is not necessary it will be retained in the Treasury. Mr. Taylor, Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, says that late reports from States indicate that losses are often as high as 50 per cent of the crop. I think this amendment should be adopted.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. My suggestion to the Senator is that, if necessary, without increasing the appropriation, as the other matters to be investigated do not seem to be so pressing as the matter to which he refers, a proviso be inserted setting aside a definite portion of the total amount for this particular purpose. I will suggest to him that he might offer an amendment providing that a certain amount shall be used for the purpose he has indicated.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Very well. I will put it in that

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That would not increase the total appropriation, and would provide a sufficient amount out of this lump sum to cover the matter.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Very well. Then, Mr. President, I move to add a proviso at the end of line 20, page 55, as follows:

Provided, That not less than $20,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be devoted by the bureau to the investigation of the disease affecting the bean and the pea crop of the United States.

Mr. FALL. Affecting what crop?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The bean and the pea crop. Mr. KENYON. Does that increase the appropriation?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No. Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It does not.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I should like to ask what kind of bean it is to the investigation of the disease of which this money is to be applied?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The white bean.

Mr. FALL. I object, Mr. President, unless there is a provision for the Mexican pink bean, frijole beans, and the garavanza and other beans that are native to my part of the country. I object to expending all this money in one section.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, the disease anthracrose, which seriously threatens the bean crop of Michigan and New York States, will probably not affect the bean of New Mexico, they are apparently immune, but I accept the amend-

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan if this would include also diseases in the beans that are sent out under the congressional free-seed distribution?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; those are foreign beans. This is a domestic affair.

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has the floor. To whom does the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not yield to anyone.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I understand this does not restrict the use of the money to any one particular section, but just to peas and beans.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is to be used wherever the bureau desires, although I may say that Michigan has been growing about 70 per cent of the white beans consumed in the

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that this does not increase the appropriation; but I hardly think that out of $47,000 for the investigation of potatoes, sugar beets, cabbage, onions, and tomatoes there should be $20,000 set aside for the investigation of insects affecting the bean and the pea. I do not think that is a fair division.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think they should have quite a generous latitude. This is a very valuable crop.

Mr. SMOOT. But this would not give them any latitude.
Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They must have ample latitude if they are going to investigate and eradicate this disease, which is really threatening a great food product.

Mr. SMOOT. We have here the sugar beet, the potato, the cabbage, the onion, and the tomato.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; but there is nothing very threatening attacking those crops now.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes, there is, every year.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They are under investigation. Mr. SMOOT. But the Senator is taking nearly half of the amount for peas and beans.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Question!

Mr. JONES. Mr. President

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. JONES. I understood the Senator from Michigan had yielded the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; not yet. Mr. JONES. The Senator called for the question, and, of course, he can not just hold the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator wishes to address himself to this amendment, I will yield to him.

Mr. JONES. No; the Senator from Michigan has accepted all sorts of amendments here, and I want to have the amendment ad as it now stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment as he has it at the desk.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That not less than $20,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be used by the department for the investigation of the disease prevalent in beans and peas of all colors and varieties.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I do not think that amendment ought to be adopted as it stands. There would be no objection to saying that that much may be used.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. "If so much be needed."

Mr. CLAPP. But we are tying the hands of the department here on rather a moderate appropriation, and taking it from other sources, and interfering with the general use by the department of this particular fund. I am perfectly willing to say that it may be used for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, that is perfectly agreeable.
Mr. CLAPP. Then I move to amend the amendment by substituting the word "may" for "shall."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Why not amend it so as to read "if so much thereof be necessary"?

Mr. CLAPP. When you make it read "may," then you do leave it that way.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Does the Senator accept that amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan accepts the amendment to his amendment. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the words "all colors and varieties" ought to be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment as amended.

The Secretary. On page 55, line 20, after the numerals "$47,760," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That not less than $20,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be used by the department for the investigation of the disease affecting beans and peas.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I suggest the alteration of that language to read "not more than $20,000."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; that is correct.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment suggested by the Senator from New York to the amendment is agreed to. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, as amended. The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to be

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, 1 oner all discontinuous inserted after line 2, on page 92.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 92, after line 2, it is proposed to Insert:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this act, whether for salaries or expenses or any other purpose connected therewith, shall be used in connection with any money contributed or tendered by the General Education Board or any corporate or other organization or individual in any way associated with it, either directly or indirectly, or contributed or tendered by any corporation or individual other than such as may be contributed by State, county, or municipal agencies; nor shall the Department of Agriculture receive any moneys for salaries or any other purpose from the General Education Board or any corporate or other organization or individual in any way associated with it, either directly or indirectly, or contributed or tendered by any corporation or individual other than such as may be contributed by State, county, or municipal agencies, except by act of Congress authorizing the same. Nor shall any person paid in whole or in part by any such corporation for services rendered by him be employed by the Government or become or remain an officer of the Government. Any person violating any or either of the terms of this provision shall be deemed gullty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 or by imprisonment as the court may determine.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, this amendment is somewhat

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, this amendment is somewhat similar to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to the legislative bill, which was adopted without any dissent.

I will say that some years ago, in 1914, I introduced in the Senate a resolution calling upon the Secretary of Agriculture to submit to the Senate a list of those in the Department of Agriculture who were paid in part by organizations outside of the Department of Agriculture. He submitted at that time a statement covering, I think I may conservatively say, 400 persons; and we then adopted an amendment somewhat similar to this. A large number of those who were on the rolls of the Department of Agriculture were paid a nominal sum by the department, and their main salaries were paid by the General Education Board, which is a part of the Rockefeller Foundation.

Congress having adopted that amendment, I think it was fair to assume that the matter would stop. But the matter, I am informed, has not stopped. It is still, as I understand it, going on; and it seems to me fundamental that it should be prohibited; that the Government pay its own employees without any assistance from the Rockefeller Foundation. There is no more reason for the Rockefeller Foundation paying the employees of the Government in the Agricultural Department or the Bureau of Education than there is for their joining in paying the salaries of Senators or members of the Supreme Court.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], who has given this matter a great deal of study, handed me a letter from the Civil Service Commission which shows that at this time there are some 500 people engaged in the Department of Agriculture receiving from $1 per year up to $25 per year from the Government. I am not prepared to say, and he is not prepared to say, just how many, if any, of these are employed and paid by the General Education Board. I hope that we may find out some-I hope that an investigation may be made as to the relationship that has been going on for so long between the General Education Board and the Rockefeller Foundation and the different departments of the Government.

Again, what particular reason is there why parties should receive a dollar a year from the Government, become employees of the Government in that way, and be given the franking privi-lege, thus enabling them to send documents all over this country at great expense to the Government? It is an insidious influence in our Government that ought to be stopped. I do not mean to imply at all that the Rockefeller Foundation has not done great good in many lines of investigation. Of course it has, My proposition is simply that the Government should pay its own employees.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

The Senator has referred to the privilege Mr. SMOOT. granted to send public documents through the mails. The par-ties who are employed by the Rockefeller Foundation and placed upon the Government rolls at $1 per annum have no right whatever to the free use of the mails of the United States for the purpose of sending documents prepared by them to any part of the United States.

Mr. KENYON. I had understood that they could do that. Mr. SMOOT. A document has to be authorized either by the Senate or by the House to be printed as a public document, or it has to be authorized under the printing appropriation of any department to be printed as a departmental document before it is entitled to the free use of the mails; and if there is any abuse in sending out the documents written by these individuals that are placed upon the rolls of the Government, it must, of necessity, be by the head of the department.

Mr. KENYON. *I do not mean to contend that they have the right to send out these documents before they are made public documents; but after they are made public documents they have the right to the franking privilege.

Mr. SMOOT. They have a right in this way: For instance, if a public document is printed and if a Senator will lend his name to an association for that purpose, the association can send out as many copies of that document as it wishes.

Mr. KENYON. That is true; but these people become employees of the Government, and after the matter is made a public document they can send it out. They have the franking privilege.

Mr. SMOOT. They could do that if they were not employees of the Government.

Mr. KENYON. If they were not employees of the Government?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; under circumstances as I have stated.

Mr. KENYON. I do not see how.

Mr. SMOOT. The abuse, if there is an abuse at all, comes from the fact that whenever an article is prepared by any one of the employees mentioned by the Senator the head of the department accepts the article and makes it a departmental document, and as soon as it is made a departmental document it is then allowed, under the law, free access to the mails.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator has expressed it better than I did. I was trying to get at the same thought in rather a roundabout way; but that is only incidental in any event, I think, to the main proposition as I have heretofore stated it, namely, that this Government is able to run its own affairs without the aid of the Rockefeller Foundation.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator right in that connection for a moment?

Mr. KENYON. I am through. Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. At a hearing before the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House of Representatives on the 12th, 13th, and 14th days of April of last year Mr. E. J. Ward was a witness. He was one of the gentlemen who was carried on the roll of the Bureau of Education at a salary of $1 per annum paid by the Government, and he did not disclose who paid the balance or principal part of his salary. It is fair to say in his behalf, however, that that inquiry was not pressed; the committee did not seem to care to know who paid it; but he only got $1 per annum from the Government. He was asked this question by Mr. LLOYD, a member of the com-

Mr. LLOYD. As a matter of fact, you are an employee of the Bureau of Education?

Mr. Ward. As a matter of fact, I am an employee sworn as others to defend the Constitution, using the Government frank as others.

Mr. LLOYD. Is it true, then, that your purpose in being connected with the department was to get the privilege of the frank?

Mr. Ward. My purpose in being connected with the department was to render therein the service which I could render by having that opportunity.

It is probably true, as the Senator from Utah said, that the document he prepared there as the agent of some private individual or corporation was adopted by the Commissioner of Education as a departmental document, and therefore, by virtue of that recognition, it was permitted to go through the mails under frank.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the only way it could happen. Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is the only way it ought to happen. Whether it happened in other ways or not I do not know, and it really will take an investigation by Congress to get at the bottom of the matter.

I do not know this gentleman, Mr. Ward. I only judge him by his testimony here. The question was asked him in view of the fact that he was getting only about $1 a year from the Government and the balance from some other source to whom he felt his allegiance was due-whether to the individual who paid the salary or to the Government of the United States. I just want to call your attention to it, because the way he answered that question is quite amusing.

Mr. RAGSDALE (Interposing). The question is, who has the right to direct your services—the Government, or the person who is paying you?

Mr. WARD. If I may quote a statement out of court, that would depend on whether you agree with one of the Members of Congress who said, "Who pays the piper calls the tune." All of my income, excepting $1 comes from a private individual. If you accept that statement and make it apply, there is at least a suspicion that I am controlled by somebody besides the Government. As to the fact of my control, I doubt it.

Mr. President, there ought not to be anybody on the pay roll of the Government, with the powers that these individuals must have in the very nature of things, who can not say promptly and peremptorily that he considers that his allegiance is due to the Government of the United States, and not to the man who pays his salary. If he can not do this, he has no business in the employ of the Government.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator from Oregon a question before he takes his seat? Is the Senator reasonably sure that all the men he refers to are working for what he calls the Rockefeller Foundation? Is it not possible that many of these men are in the employ of State agricultural colleges or other State institutions and that in this way they desire to have their publications printed and circulated in the mails free.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have not any doubt at all that a great many of these collaborators so-called are in the employ of agricultural colleges, or in the employ of the several States, probably some of them are employed by municipal corpora-tions, and that their employment is beneficial to the country and not at all subject to criticism. But there is nothing here to show that, and what I have been complaining about is that there ought not to be any doubt as to this employment.

Mr. GRONNA. I was going to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the fact that many of these men, as I understand it, instead of being employed by the Rockefeller Foundation, are professors in agricultural colleges or professors in the universities in different States. I think it would be doing great damage to the country to say that those people should be prohibited from sending documents which are so valuable through the mails free. I know I could name, if I wanted, a hundred such documents prepared by professors in different colleges. Take the circular, or, rather, the pamphlet, issued by Prof. Bolley on the wheat market, and you will find it is worth millions of dollars to the people of the country. It would prohibit these men from cooperation and some collaboration with the officials of the Federal Government.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator read that portion of the proposed amendment again?

Mr. GRONNA. I had not read the Senator's amendment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I wish to call attention to its language

Mr. GRONNA. I understood from what the Senator from Oregon said that it would do a great deal of harm.

Mr. KENYON. It makes exception of money contributed by State, county, or municipal agents. I think that answers the Senator's question. It reads:

Money contributed or tendered by the General Education Board or any corporate or other organization or individual in any way associated with it, either directly or indirectly.

Mr. GRONNA. That would take care of the agricultural colleges and State institutions,

Mr. KENYON. It would not touch any cooperation between the Government and the colleges of the States.

Mr. GRONNA. But my question is, Would it prohibit these men from cooperating with the agents of the Federal Government in sending their documents through the mails free?

Mr. KENYON. It would, if they are connected with the General Education Board or any corporation associated with that organization.

Mr. GRONNA. That seems to me to be a very sweeping amendment, and I shall have to oppose it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to ask him a question? You propose to provide that no institution connected with the Rockefeller Foundation or the General Education Board shall cooperate with the Government.

Mr. KENYON. No; if the Senator will read the amendment it seems plain enough:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this act, whether for salaries or expenses or any other purpose connected therewith, shall be used in connection with any money contributed or tendered by the General Education Board or any corporate or other organization or individual in any way associated with it, either directly or indirectly—

I do not think you can say that a college that might receive some contribution for a certain purpose was associated with it. This is not intended to cover that-or contributed or tendered by any corporation or individual other than such as may be contributed by State, county, or municipal agencies—

The query might be whether that covers colleges; but colleges would not be contributing, in any event, to the Department of Agriculture-nor shall the Department of Agriculture receive any moneys for salaries or any other purpose from the General Education Board or any corporate or other organization or individual in any way associated with it, either directly or indirectly—

It does not cover any college-or contributed or tendered by any corporation or individual other than such as may be contributed by State, county, or municipal agencies, except by act of Congress authorizing the same.

This is where the question might arise:

Nor shall any person paid in whole or in part by any such corporation—

That is, the Education Board and corporations associated with it-for services rendered by him be employed by the Government or become or remain an officer of the Government.

Now, that does not touch college professors unless they are employed directly by the General Education Board.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, there is something a good deal more important involved in this question than the mere matter of money or the use of the franking privilege. I think the departments of the Government should be kept free from outside influences, of corporations, or any other bodies of men. The case suggested by the Senator from North Dakota could easily be covered without going into the department, gress is quite ready at all times to publish as a public document anything that seems to be worthy of publication; but we are permitting these outside influences to come into the departments and bureaus of the Government and absolutely control its policies and the doctrines that go out from the departments. I think it is an evil that ought to be curbed, an evil that ought to be suppressed. I am very glad the Senator from Oregon has raised the question. We have attempted to do that heretofore, in connection with another bill, where an attempt was made to influence education in a strict sense in this country, which I think ought not to be allowed. I think for the very same reason it ought not to be allowed in the departments, and I hope as the opportunity has offered itself that Congress will put an end to it

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to disclaim any opposition to the Carnegie Foundation or to the Rockefeller Foundation. I have no objection to their private and charitable activities in any line that they may see fit to follow. I am willing to go still further than that, and to admit that along the lines of agricultural research, health research, medical research, and other activities, along economic and other lines, they have done a great deal of good. So what I say is entirely without any feeling of unkindness to these great financial institutions. What I objected to the other day, and what I object to now, is that they should become so allied with the Government itself that emanations from their brain and from the brains of their agents shall have as it were the Government's stamp upon them, so that they go to the people as the doctrines and principles enunciated by the Government itself.

There are some men connected with these institutions, Mr.

President, who do not respect the American ideals at all. are far out of touch with the opinions and thoughts of the mass of the people of this country, and expressions that come from them ought not to go out with the stamp of governmental approval.

I received the other day a letter from Mr. Henry S. Pritchett, president of the Carnegie Foundation, under date of the 30th of January, complaining that I had misrepresented the connection of the Carnegie Foundation with the Government of the United States in an address made by me in the Senate on the 26th day of January. I do not admit that I misrepresented the attitude of the Carnegie Foundation to the Government. Mr. Pritchett simply misunderstood me; that is all. He is entirely too sensitive. I will just read his letter, so that there may be no question as to his attitude. It is as follows:

NEW YORK, January 30, 1917.

Hon. George E. Chamberlain,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir: I am sure that you would not knowingly make an incorrect or unjust charge against an individual or an association of individuals. I therefore ask with entire confidence that you correct in such manner as your own sense of fairness and justice may indicate the misrepresentation of the Carnegie Foundation made in your remarks contained in the Congressional Record of January 26, pages 2039-2046.

In the course of these remarks you twice make the specific charge that the Carnegie Foundation had at various times in the past pald salaries to men connected with governmental bureaus, who received nominal pay and certain alleged privileges by their governmental connection. Your charge against this Foundation is absolutely without warrant. Not one cent has ever been paid by the Carnegie Foundation to any person in Government employ, nor has it ever entered into any arrangement of any description whatsoever by which it paid the salary or had any means of controlling or influencing the action of members of any Government bureau. On the contrary, the Carnegie Foundation has carefully avoided any such connection. It has consistently maintained the position that an endowed agency had its field of usefulness outside of governmental departments. Its policy has been exactly the opposite of that which you attribute to it.

I have therefore the honor to ask that you make such correction of your statement as justness and fairness indicate, and I beg that this denial may be given a publicity equal to your accusation. I apprehend that no Senator of the United States desires to be absolved from the duty to do justice to any body of men whom he has unwittingly misrepresented.

I am, very truly, yours,

I am, very truly, yours,

HENRY S. PRITCHETT, President the Carnegie Foundation.

Mr. Pritchett is exactly right when he expresses a belief that would not knowingly misrepresent an individual or a corporation, and I did not intend to misrepresent the foundation on the occasion to which he refers. As a matter of fact, while there are two places in my remarks that might, by a stretch of the imagination, have been construed as a statement that there were men who were receiving their principal salaries from the Carnegie Foundation while they were receiving only nominal salaries from the Government, in each case I made a statement to which I call the attention of the Senate. In each case I said substantially as follows:

In other words, the main salaries are paid by those who I claim ought not to have anything to do with the education of the children of this country. I know not from whence the money comes for these different

There is a positive statement that I did not know who or what institution, corporation, or individual was putting up the money for salaries. I do not know now that the Rockefeller or the Carnegie Foundation is putting up money to pay the principal salaries of these individuals named in my former address. I can not state that positively, but, if we are to judge from the names of the individuals, their associations, and the circumstances of their connection with the Government, we must conclude that many of them are paid by the Rockefeller Foundation or its allies; and there is a bare suspicion-that is, a reasonable suspicion might have been drawn from appearancesthat some of the people connected with the Carnegie Foundation were receiving their principal salaries from that institution. But in the face of Mr. Pritchett's denial I am willing to say here and now that he tells the truth. It may be true that the Carnegie Foundation looks to other avenues for the exertion of its activities than those suggested by Mr. Pritchett. I say its methods are even more dangerous to the American youth than the methods the Rockefeller Foundation pursues.

Let me illustrate what I mean. Give me, Mr. President, the education of the youth of this country and the control of $100,-000,000 or $200,000,000 for a period of years to use as I please, and I venture the prediction that in two or three generations I can practically change the ideals of America. It is not the first time in the history of this Republic where the school has been resorted to to change public opinion, nor is it the first instance in the history of the world where schools and universities have been resorted to for the purpose of changing public opinion.

I have often wondered why it was that Washington in his Farewell Address appealed to the religious side of the American people and stated how necessary it was for our preservation that we observe the religious and the moral life. from any source an idea as to why that was included in his Farewell Address until the other day, and I conclude that it was prompted by the conditions of his day as developed in the colleges of the time.

William and Mary College, in his beloved Commonwealth, had become a hotbed of infidelism. The young men who were attending this and other southern institutions were noted throughout the country, wherever they happened to be, as young men who were lacking in religious conviction. Not only was that true with reference to William and Mary College, but it was true with reference to Yale. It is said that at Yale during the discussions that were going on in France at and prior to the French Revolution the sense of religious conviction was almost gone from this country, and that the young men there called themselves "Rousseau" and "Voltaire," and by the names of other well-known atheists or infidels in France at that time, and that atheism and infidelity there were not uprooted until Timothy Dwight became president of the institution, and went to work to reform college life and opinion. Is it not possible that Washington's address was suggested by these considerations and conditions which existed at educational institutions of the country?

If it was true in those days it is true in this day, that if you place the education of our people in the hands of men whose ideas are at variance with the ideas and ideals of most of the people of the country there is no telling where it will lead.

Note the difference between the Rockefeller Foundation, if you please, and the Carnegie Foundation. I again disclaim any feeling against either of them. The Rockefeller Foundation declines to give any of its bounty to any State institution. That cuts out one important class of colleges.

The Carnegie Foundation declines to give any of its bounty to any sectarian institution. These two great foundations practically put the ban on two great classes of educational institutions of our country-the State institutions and the sectarian institutions. What is the result of that? What was the purpose of it? I do not know what the purpose was. I do know that the Carnegie Foundation has undertaken to standardize the colleges of the country. By this work of standardization, the Carnegie people have listed a number of institutions that they will give their bounties to in the form of pensions to the retired members of the faculty. It does the work of standardization through its agencies. It segregates these institutions and puts its own selections at the top of the list, so that these institutions receive bounty at their hands, both in the way of endowment to the standardized schools and in the way of pensions to teachers connected therewith. That drives the smaller colleges out of existence; these latter can not compete; neither can the State institutions, except in so far as they receive the cordial support of the State, compete with the pets of the Rockefeller Foundation. So that the smaller institutions must go out of business entirely.

I do not pretend to say what the purpose of these founda-tions is. I have sometimes thought it was a desire for posthumous fame. We do know that the men who are connected with these great foundations do not stand the highest in the estimation of the present generation. Why, it is unnecessary for me to say, but if they can educate the young men to take a different view from that which is taken by the young men of this day and generation, they will be looked upon hereafter as great patriots and great philanthropists in their day and generation. Mr. President, generations yet unborn ought not to be permitted to look back upon the past through any such refracted ray as that.

I have received a number of letters from distinguished educators in the country since this agitation commenced. I am amazed that so little has been said about the conditions to which I call attention. For instance, one of the most distinguished bishops in the South, Bishop Warren A. Candler, of Georgia, chancellor of Emory University in Atlanta, Ga., writes me approving of the attempts now being made to separate these foundational institutions from governmental life. I wired and asked permission to print his letter in the RECORD, and with his consent I am going to do it. There is no more respected and no abler or more patriotic or more fearless man in the South than Bishop Candler. He writes me as follows:

EMORY UNIVERSITY, Atlanta, Ga., February 2, 1917.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I have just_finished reading an interesting discussion upon an amendment to the pending measure which you offered in the Senate on January 26, and which brings to light some questionable methods of the Carnegie and Rockefeller Foundations.

Some years ago I wrote a series of articles which I subsequently printed in a booklet, a copy of which I am sending you. At that time I seemed to be no more than an unheeded voice crying in the wilderness. I am glad to see that you have undertaken to correct some of the evils connected with this educational trust, and I am taking the liberty of inclosing herein a copy of the booklet which I printed and which I made reference to above. I have thought it might contain some facts which had escaped your notice, and it might be of use to you in the further handling of this important matter.

With sentiments of highest esteem, I beg to remain,
Yours, very truly,

Warren A. Candler.

WARREN A. CANDLER.

Mr. President, I am going to ask that the booklet to which his letter refers may be printed in the RECORD. It is as fol-

The articles which compose this pamphlet were prepared for publication in the Atlanta Journal, and the first two were printed in its columns.

The editor of the Journal withheld the last two from publication out of a consideration of courtesy to the meeting of the Conference for Education in the South, in the city of Atlanta, explaining to the writer that he agreed with the position of the writer on the general subject and would print the two papers after the conference adjourned. As is evident on the face of the articles they are entirely courteous, and it does not appear that the conference should be exempted from courteous criticism because of the place at which it happens to meet this year, especially when it is remembered that the articles were prepared before the writer of them knew where or when its session would be held, and that he had no part in inviting the body to meet in Atlanta. The conference bears but a secondary and ributary relation to the General Board of Education, and the emphasis of these papers does not fall on it. It can not, however, escape entirely criticism of the General Board of Education, which was originated in the conference, and which in turn makes appropriations to the conference, and it is entitled to no exemption from criticism while it is thus inseparably related to the General Education Board.

And besides all this, when a great danger threatens the country there is no time for standing on mere ceremony. It is time to cause the people to understand the peril which menaces their institutions of learning and their civilization.

To the four papers which were prepared for the Journal are appended an article from the Manufacturer's Record, of Baltimore, which will serve to confirm the conclusions reached by the writer and to show that other sober-minded men view with alarm the situation which confronts us. I add also extracts from the columns of the New York Journal of Commerce and Springfield Republican of weighty import.

It is hoped that this discussion may contribute in som

THE POWER OF OUR COLLEGES AND A PERIL WHICH THREATENS THEM.

THE POWER OF OUR COLLEGES AND A PERIL WHICH THREATENS THEM.

It is to be feared that the most of our people do not justly estimate the influence and value of our institutions of higher learning. In this statement reference is not intended to our negligence in properly equipping and adequately endowing our colleges and universities, although there is much in that direction deserving of censure.

Our people do not seem to understand the effect of an educational institution on the general welfare of the community whom it serves. Its work is done so silently, gradually, and invisibly, while railroads, banks, factories, and the like, are so bulky and tangible that most men among us regard with comparative indifference a school of higher learning. Nevertheless, that which they esteem so lightly may be doing a work which will seriously affect for good or ill every commercial enterprise in the land, not to speak of the interests of higher value than material things.

The nations of Europe understand all this better than do our people. They have experimented with educational institutions for centuries, and they know what comes of such influential plants.

When England wished to insure her dominion in Normandy she founded the University of Caen in 1436, and achieved by it vastly more than it cost her.

When Spain desired to consolidate the Netherlands she established the

When England wished to Insure her dominion in Attranary and founded the University of Caen in 1436, and achieved by it vastly more than it cost her.

When Spain desired to consolidate the Netherlands she established the University of Douay in 1572, and with it she achieved results that still abide, notwithstanding all the political changes and social mutations which have come to pass in the course of more than three centuries.

After the Battle of Jena, Germany set about healing the political bruises and military wounds indicted upon her in that disastrons defeat by founding the University of Berlin in 1810. M. Ernest Lavisse has related most interestingly the story of its foundation. He says the King of Prussla, Frederick William, declared as the reason for its establishment, "it is necessary that the State supply by its intellectual forces the physical powers which it has lost." The great Schleirmacher supported the project enthusiastically and most clearly forecast its future. He said, "When that scientific organization is founded, it will have no equal; thanks to its interior force, it will exercise its benevolent rule to the borders of the Prusslan monarchy. Berlin will become the center of the entire intellectual activity of northern and Protestant Germany, and a solid foundation will be prepared for the accomplishment of the mission assigned to the Prussian Government." His words were most accurately fulfilled. The University of Berlin more than any other one thing united and invigorated the new Germany with which Napoleon III had to settle in 1870.

Think of the proposition! To elevate the Kingdom of Prussia and unify the German Empire by establishing a school! Our "practical men" would laugh at such an idea; but the more practical German authorities knew what they were doing. The event has justified the wisdom of their far-sighted proposal. Berlin has become the scientific and political center of the German people. With its great university it is the very heart of the nation's life and its influence is felt throughout the world. Our own educational institutions have not escaped the influence of the University of Berlin.

Again, after the overwhelming defeat of Napoleon III in 1870 by the unified and renovated German nation, Bismarck undertook the Germanizing of Alsace-Lorraine by completely reconstructing the University of Strassburg.

izing of Alsace-Lorraine by completely reconstructing the University of Strassburg.

We thus see that both to retrieve a defeat and to confirm a victory long-headed Germany established a new educational plant. And in both instances she has not been disappointed in the outcome.

When the great Liberal Party in Belgium in 1834 sought to battle successfully with its foes, who were operating so aggressively through the Universities of Liege and Gand (or Ghent, as the city is called in English), it founded the University of Brussels.

Oxford University has been the breeding ground of Tories and Toryism for generations, and the Whigs in 1828 set up the University of London with the purpose of offsetting if possible the political influence of Oxford.

In our own country a history was enacted toward the close of the ism for generations, and the Whigs in 1828 set up the University of London with the purpose of offsetting if possible the political influence of Oxford.

In our own country a history was enacted toward the close of the eighteenth century which emphasizes in a striking manner the power of the colleges. The institutions of learning then existing in the young Republic were few and comparatively feeble; but becoming infected with infidelity, they threatened the religious life of the whole country. Bishop Meade, of Virginia, declared with reference to their effects, "I can truly say that then, and for some years after, in every educated young man in Virginia whom I met I expected to find a skeptic, if not an avowed unbeliever." He affirmed that the College of Villiam and Mary, which had been founded in religious motives and for Christian ends as its first charter showed, had become "the hothed of French politics and infidelity." Yale College had succumbed to the same evil influence; and when, in 1795, the great Timothy Dwight came to the presidency of the institution he found it in the most wretched condition as to both faith and morals. Dr. Lyman Beecher, who entered the college as a student about that time, said it "was in a most ungodly state"; and he adds, "most of the class before me were infidels, and called each other Voltaire, Rousseau, D'Alembert, etc." Our Nation can never pay the debt it owes to Dr. Dwight for the warfare he waged against infidentity in Yale College during all the years of his presidency. He drove it from Yale, and his saving influence extended to other institutions. He might be called in some sense the savior of this country in that perilous hour. The poorer Yale of Dr. Dwight's day did more for the country than does the richer Yale of to-day.

Washington, also, in his "Farewell Address" lamented the moral conditions which he saw around him, and he warned his countrymen against the dangers of irreligion and infidelity. Manifestly, he was alming his words at current conditions, then so th tion on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious liberty."

It is not surprising that the Father of his Country was alarmed. Some of the most conspicuous leaders of the political thought of that period were most aggressive in their opposition to all things religious. Gen. Dearborn, who was the Secretary of War in the administration of President Jefferson, on one occasion in alluding to the churches said, "So long as these temples stand we can not hope for order and good government." Washington in his "Farewell Address" traversed with purpose and emphasis such vicious sentiments because he saw the need of sounding a note of alarm.

The general assembly of the Presbyterian Church in 1798 bemoaned the situation in these words: "We perceive with pain and fearful apprehension a general dereliction of religious principles and practice among our fellow citizens, a visible and prevailing implety and contempt for the laws and institutions of religion, and an abounding infidelity, which in many instances tends to atheism itself. The profligacy and corruption of the public morals have advanced with a progress proportionate to our deciension in religion. Profaneness, pride, luxury, injustice, intemperance, lewdness, and every species of debauchery and loose indulgence greatly abound."

Behold to what length the evil leaven which was working among the educated classes operated to the corruption of private and public morals among all classes! It affected the whole life of the Nation and threatened even the stability of all its social and political institutions. In have dwelt at length upon the effect of educational institutions. In order that I might warn our people against a powerful effort which certain very astute men, backed by millions of money, are now making to capture and control our colleges and universities. While we sleep they work.

to capture and control our colleges and universities. While we sleep they work.

An educational trust has been formed, and it is operating to control the institutions of higher learning in the United States, and to dominate especially the colleges and universities of the South.

When the war was over Gen. Lee exhorted the troops to go home and cultivate the virtues of their ancestors. It is the last privilege of a conquered people to cultivate their own peculiar excellencies and gifts.

Our people have risen up out of the desolation of war and the greater desolation of reconstruction, and by sheer strength of manhood they have recovered their fallen fortunes, made the waste places to bloom again, and wrought out on the old foundations a splendid structure of civilization. For many years they have been lectured by their conquerors in season and out of season. They have been given any amount of advice if nothing else. But now at last the effort to manage them takes a new direction. It is proposed to change their political thinking, religious beliefs, and social organizations by a scheme to dominate their colleges and universities. I can not in this paper go into details, but must reserve all that for my next communication and subsequent articles,

In the meantime I close this letter by saying, "Let us beware of the Greeks when they bring gifts."

SEEKING TO CAPTURE AND CONTROL THE COLLEGES OF THE COUNTRY.

In the meantime I close this letter by saying, "Let us beware of the Greeks when they bring gifts."

SERKING TO CAPTURE AND CONTROL THE COLLEGES OF THE COUNTRY.

In my last article it was suggested that certain astute men, backed by millions of money, were making an effort to capture and control the colleges and universities of the country, especially the institutions of the South. The movement to which reference is intended is what is called "The General Education Board," and certain concomitant organical and the control was incorporated by an act of the Congress of the United States approved January 12, 1903, and endowed by Mr. John Rockefeller, sr. Its endowment was increased to about $43,000,000 by the gift of $32,000,000 on February 5, 1907, "one-third to be added to the signedish objects within the corporate purposes of the board "as might be directed by Mr. Rockefeller or his son from time to time. Freviously he had given $1,000,000 on March 1, 1902, and $10,000,000 on Cotober 1, 1906. The General Education Board gives it very extensive powers, as is indicated in these words: "The said corporation shall have power to build, improve, enlarge, or equip, or to aid others to build, insprove, enlarge, or equip, buildings for elementary or primary schools, industrial schools, technical schools, normal schools, titulous of learning, or, in connection therewith, libraries, workshops, gardens, kitchens, or other educational accessories; to establish, maintain, or primary schools, industrial schools, therein and schools, the control of the complex schools, the control of the contro papers by some one person who was intimately acquainted with the inmost purposes of the most inner circle of the General Education Board.

Shortly after Mr. Rockefeller's last gift of $32,000,000 the New York Tribune said:

"No gift from this great fund is intended to be given to State educational institutions. While certain colleges will be selected for contributions or endowments, forming a chain of educational institutions across the continent, others not so favored will be left to their fate by the Rockefeller Fund, and many of them, it is expected, will be forced to close their doors in the face of such strong support to their fortunate rivals. It will become a question of the survival of the fittest, it is said, from which it is believed a better and higher standard of education will result, and on the maps of the Williams Street office of the Rockefeller Fund the little colored pins will probably seal the fate of many a college and work out the destiny of other to prosperous ends."

The New York Evening World said:

"No gift from this great fund is intended to be given to State educational institutions. While certain colleges will be selected for donations or endowments, forming a chain across the continent, others not so favored will be left to their fate, as it were, and many of them will be, it is expected, forced to close their doors in the face of such strong support of their fortunate rivals."

Can anyone doubt that these two extracts were written by the same hand and that the hand which wrote them was the hand of some one perfectly acquainted with the ultimate ends of Mr. Rockefeller and his board? How thoughtful was the writer in that he put forth the matter in the leading Republican paper and the leading Democratic paper of the metropolis. He meant that men of all parties should see and understand it. And mark what is proposed by this writer.

(1) There is to be "a chain" of board-supported colleges stretching "across the continent." (2) That these board-supported colleges will force others to close their doors. In other words, the General Education Board proposes to both kill and make alive, to make and unmake colleges at will.

Is any man so simple as not to see that the board will be able to influence the character of the instruction given in the board-fed institutions? Is it not clear that it will have colleges to its own notion, teaching what it directs, both as to the matter and manner of instruction?

teaching what it directs, both as to the matter and manner of instruction?

And as to the rest of the colleges, it is expected the "little colored pins on the maps in the office of the Rockefeller Fund will probably seal their fate." and that they will be "forced to close their doors."

That this is no strained view of what is proposed and expected will appear from the following extract from the Outlook—Dr. Lyman Abbott's periodical—a magazine which would not mistake the object of the Rockefeller Fund nor write of its purposes and plans in any unfriendly way. The Outlook said:

"With this financial power in its control, the general board is in position to do what no body in this country can at present even attempt. It can determine largely what institutions shall grow, and in some measure what shall stand still or decay. It can look over the territory of the Nation, note the places where there is a famine of learning, and start new educational plants of any species it chooses, or revive old ones. It can do in many ways what the Government does for education in France and Germany. Its power will be enormous; it seems as if it might be able to determine the character of American education. The funds it holds represent only a fraction of the amounts which it will control; by giving a sum to an institution on condition that the institution raise an equal or greater amount, it will be able to direct much larger amounts than it possesses."

Now note two things in this passage from the columns of the Outlook:

(1) This hoard may be able to "determine the character of American will control; by giving a sum to an institution on condition that the institution raise an equal or greater amount; it will be able to direct much larger amounts than it possesses."

Could anything be more dangerous?

(2) This board will be able to control not only the millions of Mr. Rockfeeller's gift, but the greater millions which others have given, or others may give, to the institutions which seek and obtain its aid. We will see that the greater millions which seek and obtain its aid. We have the control that the greater of the colleges which it seems to aid and to control the funds which such institutions may obtain in the future from others, I give the conditions which were outlined for acceptance by a southern institution to which the General Education Board proposed to give $37,500 if that institution would raise $112,500, and thereby increase its endowment to $100 the colleges which were as following as a outlined by an executive officer of the supplemental sum of $112,500, aforesaid, will be safely invested and forever preserved inviolably as endowment for the said college, the income only to be available for its uses.

It should be added that the board does not leave State institutions as severely alone as might be inferred from its purposes as expressed at first and as stated in the extracts quoted above from the columns of the New York Tribune and the New York Evening World.

It now undertakes to support professors of secondary education in State universities and to maintain some sort of demonstration farms and a system of agricultural lecturing of a somewhat spectacular sort in the Southern States. It thus undertakes to bay its hand on the high secondary in the Southern States. It thus undertakes to bay its hand on the high secondary in the Southern States. It thus undertakes to bay for any other states which the southern States. It thus undertakes to have demanded from the following utterance, which is said to have comannated in the form of an interview from Mr. Frederick T. Gates, president of the "General Education Board":

"The work of spreading the study and application of agricultural improvements in three or four of the Southern States, which the board began when the first $1,000,000 was received from Mr. Rockefeller," said Mr. Gates, "can now be enlarged, so that information about better farming methods can be spread throughout the entire South. Only the interest of the first $1,000,000 could be devoted to this agricultural work because of the higher-education clause in the second or $10,000,000 donation. Where the work has been carried on the improvements in farming have been so marked that Southern bankers will not lend money to men who do not follow the methods taught by the board's instructors."

Of course, the statement with reference to the conditions on which southern bankers lend money for farmers is preposterous nonsense, but the

THE ACTIVE ALLIES AND ULTIMATE AIMS OF THE GENERAL EDUCATION BOARD.

Among the very extensive powers granted to the General Education Board by its charter is the power "to aid, cooperate with, or endow associations or other corporations engaged in educational work within the United States of America, or to donate to any such association or corporation any money or moneys" which at any time may be held by the board. This gives it the power to do through others anything which for any reason it might not find it convenient to do directly in its own name.

or corporation any money or moneys" which at any time may be held by the board. This gives it the power to do through others anything which for any reason it might not find it convenient to do directly in its own name.

This provision was doubtless inserted in the charter to enable it to assist and use certain allied bodies already in existence and closely connected with it in history, purpose, and personal composition; and to subsidize other bodies also, as occasion may require.

Very intimately related to the General Education Board is a rather indefinite body called the "Conference for Education in the South," which body, however, can not be called a "conference" in the strictest sense of the word, for in its proceedings there is usually small room for conferring. In its annual sessions it is mainly occupied with the hearing of addresses by selected speakers on specific topics in the fulfillment of a fixed program, which in the very nature of the case excludes anything akin to free conference and brings forward only what is desired by the program makers. This "conference" (if it may be called such by courtesy) has passed through a process of development since its first session at Capon Springs in 1898. It was then composed of 34 members, 20 of whom were ministers of the Gospel, and it was called the "Conference for Christian Education in the South," being concerned primarily for the advancement of the mission schools of certain northern churches for the education of the negroes in the Southern States. At its second session the word "Christian" was dropped from the name, and it was called thereafter the "Conference or Education for all races in the South. It began to consider southern education sa a national problem at that time. At that session, or the one next following, Mr. William H. Baldwin, fr., suggested a general board for the strengthening of Hampton and Tuskegee Institutes for the education of negroes. This seems to have been the first suggestion of a general education board. When what is now called cerning Federal aid to education, which was in effect a proposal to revive the old Blair bill. On account of Mr. Wilson's opposition to it, the resolution was reconsidered and referred to an executive committee, which has never reported favorably or unfavorably upon it. Out of the Conference for Education in the South has emerged also what is called the "Southern Board of Education," and "the Conference" may be regarded as the popular assembly through which it is sought to make sentiment in furtherance of the two boards which have thus issued from it—the "General Education Board" and the "Southern Education Board."

The cooperation of these two boards was insured at the first by the appointment of seven men to membership in both, and at this time the treasurer of both boards is the same man, and four members of the General Board are members of the Southern Education Board, and Mr. Robert C. Ogden, who is the president of the Conference for Education in the South, is chairman of the Southern Board of Education and also an influential member of the General Education Board.

It is known also that the officers of the General Education Board and the officers of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Mr. Rockefeller on the fact of Mr. Carnegie's entire the southern should be advanced by the southern should be advanced by the southern should be appropriated by the southern should be appropriated by the southern should be appropriated by the south should be appropriated by the southern Education For the Advanceme

Think of what is evidently proposed! To direct its own funds, to "control" funds given in the past, and to dominate funds that may yet be raised. Here is dominion over the offerings of the dead and the gifts of the living, authority over the donations and bequests of the past, the present, and the future! Truly said the Outlook, "Its power will be enormous; it seems as if it might be able to determine the character of American education."

Let us not imagine that the General Education Board will stop with controlling the colleges. Through its allied body, The Southern Education Board, it seeks to influence public opinion and direct legislation concerning the common schools. With its professorship of secondary education, tacked on the State universities, it will project its influence into the high schools of the country. With its agricultural lectureships it will lay hold of the farmers. Then, after a time, when its Conferences for Education in the South, together with its other schemes of propagandism, have done their work, we may reasonably expect to see the old Blair bill for Federal aid to education revived—the thing that the lamented William L. Wilson drove to cover so soon as it showed its head in one of the earlier and less rigidly programmed "conferences," tion Board declines to make gifts to State colleges Mr. Carnegle's "foundation" equally refuses its teachers pensions to the faculties of colleges and universities under denominational control. As an "educational agency," its president proclams that "its policy is not to pass on the merits of individuals but of colleges." It is manifest that by picking certain institutions whose professors may receive pensions from the Carnegle Foundation, it will give great advantage to the accepted colleges over the rejected institutions, and the only way of escape for the institutions not on its list of accepted institutions will be to revise their charters and get rid of control by the churches which founded them or to make a square fight for their lives. Some colleges have been willing to deny the church parentage which gave them birth in order to get at Mr. Carnegle's fund. For example, Bowdoin College, in Malne, received years ago the endowment of one of its professors have been willing to deny the church parentage which gave them birth in order to get at Mr. Carnegle's foundation held that Bowdoin was ineligible for a place on the Carnegle Foundation order to another Institutions will work a disa man of the Southern Education Board, and for many years president of the Conference for Education in the South, and the only man who is a member of all these three bodies, favors Federal aid to education in the South.

Of course, with Federal aid we must submit to Federal supervision, and, with that subjection accepted, why not raise the Bureau of Education at Washington to an executive department and make the Commissioner of Education a Cabinet officer? Probably in such an event the General Education Board, with its multiplied millions and national following, would have something to say about who should be chosen for the position of Secretary of Education. It could then fulfill the Outlook's forecast when that periodical said of this General Education Board, "It can do in many ways what the Government does for education in France and Germany"

The General Education Board in the final outcome may adopt the suggestion of Mr. Charles A. Gardiner, of New York, which is really the logical conclusion from the premise of Federal aid to education. He advocates endowing "the National Bureau of Education with supervisory powers, so that it can make education compulsory, fix the courses of study, and direct instruction in any channel—industrial, intellectual, moral, or religious—that the citizenship of any locality may particularly require."

Then, too, the school question in California with reference to the Japanese, as well as that of the South with reference to its race question, could be dealt with nationally, which I dare say many of the educational agitators, who look at the South as missionary ground calling for their altruistic evangelism, would be glad to see.

(By the way, the General Education Board has reason to look after that Japanese issue in California, for in the published lists of its securities, as reported to the Department of the Interior at Washington under the requirement of the Federal charter, it appears that the board holds over $500,000 of Imperial Japanese Government bonds. In that list of sec treason.

But some will say, "What are we going to do about it? The thing is already done. Tell us how to make the best of a bad situation, which had developed before we knew it, and in which we seem to be helplessly and hopelessly involved."

Of that phase of the subject I will speak in my next communication. For the present it is enough to say our case is not hopeless, unless our colleges can be bought with a mendicant's dole and our people can be misled by "conference" declamations and dazzling promises of possible donations from the office in New York in which "the little colored pins" mark the rise or fall, the life or death of colleges according as they please or displease the executive officers of the general executive board.

WHAT CAN BE DONE AND WILL BE DONE.

cording as they please or displease the executive officers of the general executive board.

WHAT CAN BE DONE AND WILL BE DONE.

The adversities which our southern colleges suffered during the war and the reverses they met during desolating years of the period of reconstruction have put our institutions of learning relatively far behind those of other sections in the matter of financial strength. The South has, therefore, many of the smaller institutions of the country which are hampered by narrow means, and for this cause our colleges and universities can be more easily dominated by the methods and gifts of the General Education Board. Such universities as Harvard and Yale can not be so easily tempted with promised gifts, because they are already very rich.

But while such is the case with our institutions of learning, their condition is not so nearly hopeless as to justify despair concerning them, or to excuse a mendicant attitude toward this General Education Board, the Carnegie Foundation, and all their allies.

In the South the colleges and universities for white students, not to mention our secondary schools and the colleges for negroes, are worth above $36,000,000. This large sum has been accumulated in the main since the war, and it has come from the contributions made by our own people struggling with their poverty and from the gifts of such noble men as George I. Seney and others of like mind, who came to our help without attaching humiliating conditions to their generous donations or seeking to dominate our institutions by the methods of their giving. We can not hope to receive from this General Education Board any amount comparable with what we now have in our own right and which we allow the smaller investment of the General Education Board to determine the direction of the larger amount which we already have? Shall a minority stockholder assume airs of superiority and undertake to tell us what course shall be followed in the administration of our educational runds? Shall we not say to one who appro northern patrons. One of the attent supporters of this educational movement thus described some who flocked to the meeting of the Conference for Education in the South which met at Athens, Ga., a few years ago:

"Unfortunately for Southern reputation for good breeding, there was at the Athens conference, for example, a swarm of educational and institutional mendicants who seemed to imagine that every Northern man was a millionaire philanthropist waiting to be informed about the pressing needs of the South. They disgraced themselves at the time." If there were at Athens any considerable number of men who thus disgraced our section, the fact is a symptom of a disease among our educational authorities which can not be cauterized and cured too quickly. What must be the degrading influence upon the sindents of our colleges if teachers and trustees thus prostrate themselves at the feet of supercilious wealth and arrogant opulence. No degree of poverty can excuse such mendicancy. We do not need money for our colleges so hadly that we can descend to such methods to obtain it.

In truth we do not need to beg anybody to pay for the education of our sons and daughters. We are quite able to attend to that matter ourselves. We have not as many rich men and women among us as other sections have; but we have some people of means, and they owe it to themselves and to their section to take the lead in endowing and equipping our colleges so as to enable them to do their work well without coming under obligations to strangers. I would not have our people of wealth to do all that is needed; it is not best for the freedom and independence of a college to come under too heavy obligations to any one man or woman. If the late Jay Gould had founded or endowed a college, it would have been next to impossible to have warned successfully the students of such an institution against the evils of stock gambling, just as the institutions which draw their support from the funds of "general education board" will be impotent to condemn effective

While, therefore, our rich men and women must lead in the work of the great work must be accomplished by the generous cooperation of all the people. Our people of moderate means, by a multitude of smaller gifts, must follow the lead of our wealthier people with their larger donations in putting our colleges beyond want and beyond the temptation to mendicant subjection to the ambitious General Education Board striving to "deformine the character of American education." In the people whom they are set to serve. If one of our institutions should be made suddenly as rich as Harvard or Yale the scale of living at such a college would so quickly rise that its benefits would be put beyond the reach of most of the people among us who seek college training for their sons. Free tuition would not offset the rise in the price of board and the increased social expense which would instantly spring from such sudden enrichment. Our colleges need help and nuch help, but they do not need to get above our people.

In addition to all these considerations must be enumerated another self-swilling educators among us upon whim we may rely with confidence to spurn all seductions which lead in the direction of enslaving our institutions of learning to the dictatorial domination of the General Education Board. They can not be bought. Many of them are in the colleges of the churches, which the methods of both the General Education Board and the Carnegie Foundation tend to depreciate and discredit. Here is a force which millions can neither buy nor vanquish.

The New York Commercial of March 8, in commenting on the ineffect that of the heads of Brown University, Vanderbit tringer set the restrictions of the Carnegie Foundation so relaxed with reference to denominational disabilities as to get on that pension fund, said: "It is significant fact is found in a note written by the prefect of 20 men who devote their lives to the work without remuneration. These men don not, as far as I know, expect any assistance from the Carnegie Foundation is lege can safely compare products with the output of any secularized or subsidized institution.

Moreover, the small colleges of both the States and the churches have endowments in the annual gifts of their constituencies, which the endowments offered by "The General Education Board" can in no wise equal. For example, the Methodists of Georgia give to Emory College annually about $5,000, which is equivalent to the interest on an endowment of $100,000. The State of Georgia appropriates to the university at Athens far more than this. Why should these gifts of our own people be subjected to the domination of any outside authority? Why should our educators stand like medicants with hats in hand for small gifts from alien sources when they have such constituencies behind them? Why should we despair of our colleges, and ignobly surrender our enducational independence and academic freedom for a conditional gift from the "General Education Board," or a professor's pension from the "Carnegie Foundation?" Why should we barter away our birthright for a mess of pottage from the predatory trusts?

We are in no danger unless we can be bought. We are not in desperate straits unless our people are desperately mean-spirited and mendicant. I can not think so ill of my people. They are not going to sell out or surrender. They are going to take care of their own colleges and preserve their own civilization. They will do this at all cost, and cost what it may our people are well able to pay the bill.

It is a time for large views and courageous self-sacrifice, for fearless fidelity and daring generosity. For one I confidently expect our people to resent any effort to allure their colleges away from them. They will be the very confidently of the traditions of the past and would dim all our hopes of the future.

A DANGEROUS TENDENCY.

[From the New Orleans Times-Democrat.]

[From the New Orleans Times-Democrat.]

"It is to be hoped that the statement given out in Atlanta by Bishop Candler, of the Methodist Church South, with regard to the General Aducation Board, will provoke a general discussion of the board, its purposes, and the fruits of the system under which it works. The opinions voiced by the distinguished Methodist leader are by no means new. Criticisms of like tenor have been offered before now by others. But they gain weight and challenge a wider attention by his championship, and the movement under attack is one of those which, in our opinion, should be carefully studied and closely watched, since its possibilities for evil, if improperly influenced or directed, must be conceded to be immense.

"Bishop Candler bases his objection to the system primarily upon principle. 'It is not safe,' he contends, 'for the educational institutions of the country to be under the virtual domination of 15 men, however pure they may imagine their intentions to be. It is such a concentration of power in the matter of the highest interest of the Nation as no 15 men, however wise and virtuous, can be trusted to exercise without abusing it for the furtherance of their own views and interests. If a college seeks and obtains these gratuities, with the Rockefeller strings to them, it must consent to be guided by the rein with which these 15 men will drive it.'

"The case is here plainly stated. The fund which the General Education Board administers is largely provided by men whose interest in shaping public opinion upon certain matters of vital concern to society and to the State is very great. Whether their philanthropy serves as a cloak to attain the ends desired, or whether the plan is unselfishly conceived and the sinister influence unconsciously exerted, the effect is likely to be the same in the end.

"The gifts are hedged about by restrictions and conditions, with the education board to name them and to see that they are complied with. Every college which shares in the largess poses as a suppllant, in a sense. Not only is its policy partially directed by the board but it is additionally influenced, wittingly or unwittingly, by the desires of its benefactors. The atmosphere of classroom and campus is dangerously subject to taint; the habits of thought of its students may with comparative case be given a twist not easily corrected. Whether the powerful engine thus created is now put to sinister uses or not the temptation to employ it is ever present, and must inevitably grow stronger as the system gathers strength and force.

"Here in the South the temptation of the colleges to seek the conditional gratuities is great, because the funds available for education are small and the need of more abundant educational facilities

SUBSIDIZING LEARNING TO CONTROL ACADEMIC OPINION.

[From the New York Journal of Commerce.]

"A system of giving which has its own rules and customs, which is governed by principles of selection laid down in the beginning, which ramifies throughout the country and embraces especially those smaller institutions that are hampered by narrow means, is an infinitely more powerful force in the shaping of opinion than any single capitalist who makes separate and often unconditional gifts to be controlled and invested by the institutions themselves could ever be. As a mechanism for controlling academic opinion there has perhaps never been anything in the history of education that would compare with the board system of subsidizing learning.

"Gifts to education are like campaign contributions in that they are best made in relatively small amounts and from many sources. Under such circumstances they are likely to leave the recipients in position to choose their own course in matters of opinion and teaching.

"If they must be large, it requires greater force of character to maintain independence of thought and action. Such freedom has been lacking in too many quarters. The spectacle of a university president preaching the maintenance of some of the worst abuses of capitalism and another meekly bowing the knee to receive the money offered by those for whose acts he had but lately suggested social ostracism as a penalty is not edifying. Instances can be given in abundance where the mere prospect of an immediate gift has changed the whole current of a college administrator's thought and made him trim his sails on an entirely new tack to catch the favoring breezes of prosperity. The craze and competition for large numbers of students has greatly crippled those who would uphold the older traditions of independent economic thinking. Increasing numbers mean increasing expense in college administration and lead to growing dependence on wealth of doubtful origin. This, among other reasons, is ground for thinking the enormous benefactions of the past few years, whether as pensions, endowments or annual gifts to colleges, m

A STEP TOWARD THE GREATEST EVIL THAT COULD BE INFLICTED ON THE COUNTRY.

[From the Manufacturers' Record, Baltimore, Md.]

[From the Manufacturers' Record, Baltimore, Md.]

"The open combination of Mr. Carnegie and Mr. Rockefeller in an 'educational' enterprise, thus representing an aggregation of $60,000,000 or $70,000,000, which, according to the same argument of the Outlook, applied to one phase of it, 'represent only a fraction of the amounts which it will really control,' is a 'real step in advance,' as Mr. Rockefeller styles it. But it is a step in advance toward the greatest evil that could be inflicted upon the country. Unchecked, it will result in an education that will train coming generations away from basic principles of American life and cripple them in character.

"Control, through possession of the millions massed in the Educational Trust, of two or three or four times as many millions of dollars in education makes possible control of the machinery and the methods of education. It makes it possible for the central controlling body to determine the whole character of American education, the textbooks to be used, the aims to be emphasized. Operating through State, denominational, and individual systems of schools and colleges, it gives the financial controller power to impose upon its beneficiaries its own views, good or bad, and thereby to denominate public opinion in social, economic, and political matters. For it would dominate the source of public opinion, the educational system of the country. Only a band of angels never subject to the weaknesses of human nature would be fit to exercise such power wisely. Angels would be strong enough to resist the temptation to exercise it at all."

DEMORALIZING DEPENDENCE. [From the Springfield Republican.]

There are those who still hold the idea that but for these great individual fortunes and their benefactions society would be worse off than it is in educational and philanthropic work. Such a theory is wholly untenable—that the people generally can not be trusted properly to appreciate the importance of education and other effort for the elevation of the race and the amelioration of the general conditions of living or to contribute adequately to their support; it is only true that the people will be laggard in support of such efforts when a comparatively few towering fortunes exist, able and willing to be leaned on for these needs. Then we may expect communities and institutions to develop a mendicant attitude and turn from self-help to help from beyond, which flows down as if from some superior source that is to be held in worshipful consideration. How socially demoralizing this must be no one can fail to understand.

This booklet was written in 1909. It shows the activities not only of the Carnegie Foundation but the activities of the Rockefeller Foundation, and the work of the two along different lines, one operating against State institutions and the other working against sectarian institutions, is having the effect of putting the small institutions like that represented by Bishop Candler out of business. These smaller institutions can not compete with those patronized and favored by these millionaire foundations.

Then, in addition to Bishop Candler's letter, I have a letter from President J. W. Crabtree, of the normal school at River Falls, Wis., taking practically the same position. I ask permission to print it, and so forth. It is as follows:

RIVER FALLS STATE NORMAL SCHOOL, River Falls, Wis., February 5, 1911.

Hon. George E. Chamberlain, Washington, D. C.

RIVER FALLS STATE NORMAL SCHOOL,

River Falls, Wis., February 5, 1911.

Hon. Grorge E. Chamberlain,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator Chamberlain: I am writing to thank you for the great service you have rendered to democracy in education by securing the passage of your resolution outsting from service in the Federal Program of the Control of the Control of the Pederal Program of the Control of the Pederal Program of Pedera a share in shaping our educational policies than we are aware of. It is certainly an easy matter in conducting a survey to find a fact basis for all conclusions previously decided upon and to substantiate nothing which is not in absolute harmony with the standards and ideals of the paid officers of the foundations. Perhaps the chief reason the Carnegie foundation is repudiating its pension scheme is because the survey club accomplished more rapid and certain results than the pension club.

Sion club.

There are two kinds of government—the one handed down from above, and the other coming through the people. Corresponding to these two theories in government are two policies in education. The one which is handed from above is plutocracy in education, and the other is democracy in education. It stands to reason that a foundation leadership would develop plutocracy in education rather than democracy in education.

I have wondered whather this deastle resolution of the Scotterior and the Scotterior Company of the Scotterior other is democracy in education. It stands to reason that a foundation leadership would develop plutocracy in education rather than democracy in education.

I have wondered whether this drastic resolution of the Senate was not hastened by the announcement in the press of the beginning of a great movement under the auspices of the foundations and financed by them, to revolutionize elementary and secondary education in America. I have also wondered whether the action taken by the Federal Government will not interfere seriously with foundation plans of surveying State normal and other teacher training schools of the country. The fact that the Senate looks upon this gratuitous surveying and other work of the foundations as a most serious menace to democracy in education in our public schools, will doubtless make it embarrassing for any State superintendent, State board of education, or even city board of education to make use of foundation men or foundation money for these surveys of teacher-training schools or of the teacher's work in the public schools. In other words, this action of the Senate would seem to be far-reaching in its effects.

It is expected that friends of the foundations will attempt to secure the passage of a resolution at the February meeting of the department of superintendence at Kansas City requesting the United States Senate to reconsider its action, so as to enhance the interests of education by the use of the foundations' millions. It is not believed, however, that any such resolution will pass. The pension club can hardly be used on the membership of this particular department. We do not admit that educators are purchasable, but if the foundations do expect those who have directly or indirectly received pay from them to stand for this resolution, what about those who have not received special favors from them? I think the department might very properly request Congress to make larger appropriations for the bureau of education.

It seems to me that the Senate having cut the connection high

J. N. CRABTREE, President.

These are brave and patriotic men who are willing to beard the lion in his den and undertake to oppose the activities of both of these foundations. It is up to the Congress of the United States to apply the ax to the root here and now, and until it has been developed that these activities are perfectly proper stop them for all time.

Mr. FALL. Will the senator yield right there?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FALL. We have under consideration now the farm demonstration work in the Agricultural appropriation bill and the people who are being assisted by the arrangement which has been entered into. Putting the ax to the root, as the Senator suggests now, cuts off all the farmers' clubs of the Southern and Western States, for instance, and puts a stop immediately to work of that kind until a reorganization could be brought about. Would not the Senator be inclined to think it best to about. Would not the Senator be inclined to think it best to provide affirmatively some method by which this work can be continued before putting the ax to the root?

• Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator from New Mexico allow me? On page 69 of the pending bill I call attention to the language as it was enacted in 1914 and reenacted in this

For farmers' cooperative demonstrations and for the study and demonstration of the best methods of meeting the ravages of the cotton-boll weevil, including the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, supplies, and all other necessary expenses, $659,560: Provided, That the expense of such service shall be defrayed from this appropriation and such cooperative funds as may be voluntarily contributed by State, county, and municipal agencies, associations of farmers, and individual farmers, universities, colleges, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, other local associations of business men, business organizations, and individuals within the State.

That was enacted after the Senator from Iowa had called attention to the very matter he is now attempting to have the Senate legislate upon. It seems to me that this provision takes care of it, and since 1914 it has been operative along the very lines the Senator from New Mexico suggests.

Mr. KENYON. In addition to that there is a provision on page 69 for farmers' cooperative demonstration work outside the cotton belt, $578,000. So the bill carries practically $1,200,000 for farm demonstration work.

Mr. FALL. I had no intention of getting into a controversy at this time. I was simply asking the Senator from Oregon a question. I propose to speak in my own time on this matter, and then I will be glad to answer any question that may be asked me.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I say when distinguished Senators here are influenced by the small doles given out by these great institutions to aid the farmers, amounting to less, I venture to say, than the Government has appropriated in the bill now pending for that purpose, how can it be expected that men who have given their lives to instructional work in the educational institutions of the country, who have passed beyond middle life, and who have not been able to save a dollar from the salaries paid them, will turn down a competency at the hands of these institutions, by simply following the suggestions that they make, which are not wicked suggestions at all, but directions in contravention of the American system?

Mr. FALL. I shall reply to the suggestion of the Senator as to the influences being brought to bear when I have the

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator will understand I do not mean any improper influence. I have too much regard for the Senator to suggest anything like that; but the Senator is suggesting that we ought not to interfere, that we ought not to apply the ax now when some of these moneys are being paid to farmers of the country, that we should wait until the whole thing can be reorganized and the actual condition arrived at.

Mr. FALL. My answer to that is that I am not in favor of destructive legislation if constructive legislation is necessary. If investigation shows that something should be done to take the place of what is being properly done now, before applying the ax at the root of anything, the Congress of the United States owes an affirmative duty to give some consideration to the status of affairs at this time. I am just as thoroughly and heartily in favor of the contention of the Senator as he is him-

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I believe that.

Mr. FALL. I will go just as far as he will in this matter. Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. FALL. I intend to refer to that later, but I will not

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I feel that every Senator, when he realizes just what this means to the country, will feel about it We all want to do what is best for the American people; but, Mr. President, as the Senator from South Carolina says, we are appropriating a large sum for this very purpose now. If the work is worth doing at all, it is worth doing by the Government itself, so that this influence can not go out and impair the life of our country.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for merely one moment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. FALL. I understood the suggestion of the Senator, but the Senator does not know how the money is being used. There is no one in the Senate who can tell the Senate of the United States whether this work is being kept up by the use of these funds or not. If the Senator from Oregon has any statement to show that the work which was being done prior to the adoption of the amendment in 1914 is being continued under the provisions of the pending bill, and that the status is not being upset in any way, that is a different proposition; but we have as yet had no light thrown upon it at all.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] this morning had printed a list of over 500 names in the RECORD, which shows the particular bureaus in which they were em-

Mr. FALL. Nearly every one of those named, as I understand, is a county demonstrator. They are being paid by these people, just as they were some time ago; at least half of their salaries is paid by the county or by the State, and the balance of it is paid by some provision of the foundation.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If that be true, I will say to the Senator that they are not interfered with under this proposed amendment.

Mr. FALL. I think they are; that is where the Senator and

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Then I suggest to the Senator from New Mexico that if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa is not broad enough to do what he desires to do and what he says he is willing to do that he himself suggest an amendment.

Mr. FALL. The Senator from Oregon does not understand the point that I am making. You appropriate a certain amount here; but unless you direct that a portion of this appropriation shall be expended to make up the difference which is now being paid by, we will say, the Rockefeller Foundation, then you lose one-half of the work, although you may even put millions of dollars of additional appropriations in the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think I understand the Senator per feetly well; but I say that if there are some men that are getting nominal salaries from the Government, but who are really getting their salaries from some outside agency, I think they are protected under the very terms of the bill, and they can go on and get their money, just as they are doing now, and can do the work which they now do.

Mr. FALL. The Senator does not yet understand. The Government will pay one of these demonstrators, for instance, per year; the county will pay him $50 per month; and the Rockefeller Foundation will pay him $50 a month. You are not making an appropriation to take up their portion of that $50 of that salary, as I understand it. If you are, and if you can show me you are doing so Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator from New, Mexico will allow me, I desire to say that in the program of work of the United States Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1917 it goes into details and shows how this money is being used. I think that if the Senator will get a copy of this work and will turn to page 406, under the heading "Farmers' cooperative demonstrations in the Southern States and in the Northern States," he will be satisfied that this work that he is so anxious about, since 1914, when this provision went into effect restricting the use of this money to the Government appropriations, has not suffered at all.

Mr. FALL. The Senator from New Mexico has certainly sought for all possible information upon this subject from the Senator from South Carolina, the Senator who is the author of this bill, and other Senators here, and he has only now had his attention called to this particular report, of which the Senator from South Carolina speaks. I would like to have an opportunity to investigate this matter somewhat before there is prohibited absolutely the continuance of certain work, which I am afraid will be prohibited by the passage of this act.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to state to the Senator that since 1914 the work has gone on as thoroughly as it did before the prohibition which I have just read was placed in the law; the cooperation has been just as extensive, as is evidenced by this report, and I think that the fear which the Senator from New Mexico has expressed that the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa might have the effect of cutting down the appropriation, simply emphasizes what is already in the The only place that I could suggest that the amendment of the Senator from Iowa would at all affect the operation of the law now would be placing his amendment just after the appropriation made for the Northern and Eastern States. After the amount allowed for farm demonstration work in connection with the ravages of the boll weevil the restriction is placed, but on the appropriation of $578,240 there is no restriction as to what may be done.

It seems to me, however, that if the same language which occurs in the paragraph providing for farmers' cooperative demonstration and for studying and demonstrating the best method of meeting the ravages of the cotton-boll weevil-if the restrictive language which occurs in that paragraph should occur in the paragraph relative to farmers' cooperative demonstration work outside of the cotton belt the object the Senator has in view could be attained and not interfere at all with the splendid work which is being done in his State, in my State, and in every other State by means of this appropriation and under the restriction.

Mr. FALL. We are taking up the time of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Chamberlain], and for that reason I have expressed myself two or three times as not desiring to do so, We are taking up the time of the Senator from unless with his consent-

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. FALL. The trouble is this: Either you are cutting off the work which is being done by the Agricultural Department by this amendment or you are not. If you are cutting off the work which is being done through the cooperation with the Rockefeller Foundation, then you should enact something af-firmative to take the place of it. If you are not interfering with any such necessary work, then there is absolutely no necessity for the adoption of the amendment. That is all there is too it. There can be, to my mind, no answer except by showing the facts.

I will say to the Senator from Oregon that, while I have said that I was heartily in favor and am thoroughly and sincerely in favor of his general proposition, I have received telegrams on the subject from all over my State—from chambers of commerce, from county agricultural agents in the different counties—and I may say that I have been told by numerous other Senators that they have telegrams here from Wyoming and other States; and I think the Senator who is the acting chairman of the committee has had numerous similar telegrams, I do not know how many, in his possession; but I have had over 100 from the agricultural college of my State, from those representing the extension work, from chambers of commerce, from boards of trade, from banking institutions; and the protests are coming in from all over my section of country, where this work has just commenced. You have had this work in the South and you have had it in other portions of the country, but it is just commencing in the Southwest. These telegrams are all protesting against this proposed legislation. I want to know something about it, some reason for it, or this amendment will never be adopted nor will the bill be passed with my vote.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico the date of the telegrams of which he speaks?

Were they all sent here last night?

Mr. FALL. No, sir. They are dated February 5, February 3, February 5, February 5, February 6, February 5.

Mr. KENYON. I do not care to have the Senator read the dates of all of them.

Their dates run from the 2d to the 5th or 6th of Mr. FALL.

February, I will say to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. It is difficult to understand how these telegrams can refer to the amendment which I have introduced, as did not introduce the amendment until last night before the Senate adjourned, when I had it printed.

Mr. FALL. I think I can explain that matter to the Senator, because I have myself been anxious, and I have sent two or three telegrams out there in the endeavor to ascertain what was the cause of this uproar and why these protests. Those people seem to have an indefinite idea about it. While they did not exactly know about the tendency of the amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from Iowa, their attention had been attracted either by the debate or the explanations accompanying the amendment to the legislative appropriation bill. That has started the whole thing. They have learned that there was going to be such an effort, and I think, if my memory does not fall me, at that time the Senator from Iowa suggested that he was going to offer an amendment on the subject to the Agricultural appropriation bill. I know the suggestion was made by some one that it would be offered, and that informa-tion has gone out all over the country. The people do not know exactly what the amendment is, but they think that it means an attack upon these foundations

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from New Mexico that I believe—
Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like to proceed with my remarks and get through.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will allow me, I investigated and ascertained that since 1914 the law has practically accomplished what the Senator from Iowa is now seeking to accomplish. It is my information that since 1914 we have had satisfactory work. I suspect that the Senator from New Mexico is correct, that the people to whom he refers were somewhat solicitous about amendments which might be offered to the pending bill.

Mr. FALL. The point that I am making, Mr. President, is that if the law of 1914 has accomplished this purpose—

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It has.

Mr. FALL. Then there is no necessity for any further legislation along that line.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. In my opinion it has accomplished the purpose.

Mr. Salitz

Plished the purpose.

The I agree with the Senator

President I be

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I believe I have the floor, although I have not occupied it for a good while.

Mr. FALL. I beg the Senator's pardon. I apologized to him for taking up his time.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is all right; I am glad to have the Senator divide the time with me.

Admitting, Mr. President, for the sake of the argument, that what the Senator has said be true, that no matter which horn of the dilemma we take, it will result in cutting off some of the activities in farm and other demonstration work in cases where part of the pay, at least, comes from these outside sources, I say cut them out. I would rather cut them out and wait a little while for knowledge as to the the exact situation than to let this practice continue any longer.

Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD without reading an editorial from the New York Times of a few days ago as a part of my remarks. It is so apropos of the present discussion and in line with my view.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter referred to will be printed in the Record.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Times.] RADICAL AND DANGEROUS.

The General Education Board announces that it will give its support "an experiment in the education of youth in this country which, if successful, will mean practically the complete modernization of elementary and secondary schools." The Teachers' College of Columbia University is to be made the experiment station for carrying out the plan. It is an undertaking to which educators, universities, colleges, and all who are interested in the training of youth should at once give their most serious attention, because, in the first place, the theories which the experimenters hope to apply to the educational system of the country are radical and subversive of a very great part of what we hold to be sound and worthy in our present system of training, and for a second reason, because there is marshaled in support of this experiment and these theories the incalculable force of the $35,000,000 controlled by the General Education Board. The experiment will be carried through, said a member of the board, "whatever it costs." Therein, we think, lies a visible peril to the educational interests of the country.

The theories which will be applied and worked out in the experiment centrolled by the General Education Board. The expertment well be carried through, said a member of the board. "whetever t costs." Therein, we think, lies a visible peril to the educational interests of the country.

The theories which will be applied and worked out in the experiment at Teachers' College are those set forth in Dr. Abraham Flexner's "A Modern School" and in President Emeritus Charles W. Ellot's "Changes Needed in Secondary Education." The guiding principle is that education is to be "better adapted to the needs of common life than is the curriculum now in common use." Latin and Greek, of course, disappear. "The school will frankly discard that theory of education known as 'formal discipline." Dr. Flexner has said that "the modern school will drop the study of the subject of grammar." We suppose there will be no grammar at Teachers' College. The study of literature and history, it appears, will not be totally abolished, but "new methods of teaching" them, together with "civics," will be tried. A curlous concession to old prejudice is made in the statement that "efforts will be made to ascertain whether the Important ancient classics can not be effectively used in translations."

The modern languages will be "stressed"; science, industry, and the domestic arts will be prominent throughout the school; "a rational course of study which connects the study of mathematics with its use "will be worked out; and "by means of pictures, lantern slides, chart, which we have a supposed to the pulls affected to special reading matter and discussions to give the pulls affected to special reading matter and discussions to give the pulls affected to special reading matter and discussions to school work from real situations," an attempt will be made to make the school work from real situations," an attempt will be made to make the school work of the pupils "constantly real to them."

This is bread-and-butter education, and nothing else. In the general board's program and in the indicated course of study there is n tain "whether the important ancient classics can not be effectively used in translations."

On all these points there is room for discussion. The theories set forth in Dr. Flexner's "A modern school" have many advocates. As a member of our Board of Education Dr. Flexner has done work of the greatest value. His views upon the administrative side of education are entitled to great weight. Of Dr. Eliot no one can speak save with profound respect. But we may point out that the extreme theories he applied at Harvard based upon the assumption that the interest of the student was a safe guide in the choice of studies, upon a wide application of the elective principle, have much less place in the policy now in force at Cambridge than they did when he was president. Harvard, indeed, has bestirred itself to get away from some of his theories. Yet we now see the General Education Board adopting apparently in their extreme projection the theories of Dr. Flexner and of Dr. Eliot and submitting them to the test of an experiment which, if successful, "will mean practically the complete modernization of elementary and secondary schooling" in the United States. This means a revolution in our whole educational system, since if primary and secondary schools apply these theories colleges and universities will be forced to adopt them. It is a matter for instant inquiry, for very sober consideration, whether the General Education Board, indeed, may not with the immense funds at its disposal be able to shape to its will practically all the institutions in which the youth of the country are trained. In an article treating of these theories and published in the Atlantic Monthly for November Mr. Alfred E. Steams said:

"Just now the strength of this pressure is greater than ever before, backed as it is by educational authorities and foundations whose ability said:

"Just now the strength of this pressure is greater than ever before, backed as it is by educational authorities and foundations whose ability can not be questioned and whose financial resources enable them almost to force upon the public the acceptance of the ideals they advocate."

There is a vast compelling force in $35,000,000. Without exception colleges need money. If a college makes bold to bint to those charged with the disbursement of the General Board's funds that it could make good use of, say, $200,000, conceivably the board might reply that if the college would consent to make some changes in its curriculum, if it would discontinue certain effete branches and show greater kindness for the theories of the modern school, the matter might be considered. Faculties might resist, but trustees, possibly, would be inclined to yield. At any rate, the danger is actual, present; it seems to us to be very great.

Where does the General Education Board get its authority to impose its views as to courses of study upon the teaching body of primary, secondary, or higher educational institutions? Where is its authority to enter upon experiments "which, if successful, will mean practically the complete modernization of elementary and secondary schooling, whatever it costs?" The General Education Board was incorporated by the act of Cougress, approved on January 12, 1903. The objects of the incorporation were: "The promotion of education within the United States of America without distinction of race, sex, or creed." In section 3 of the act the board is empowered to do many things. It may "establish, maintain, or endow elementary, primary schools, industrial schools, training schools, normal schools, training schools for teachers or schools of any grade or higher institutions of learning." Nowhere do we find that the board was vested with authority to spend money and use its influence for the "modernization" of education or to control or to have anything to say about the curriculum of any college or the course of study in any school. It would appear that in its experiment the board has ventured outside its field, that it has exceeded its powers under the act of incorporation. Whether that be true or not, the announced alms of the board in this experiment are so far-reaching, revolutionary, and, in the view of many educators who have already expressed their opinions upon these theories, so dangerous to the interests of the country and to the minds of youth that they should have immediate and earnest consideration. If this experiment bears the expected fruit we s

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Now, Mr. President, while I have printed in the RECORD the letter from President Pritchett to me, and have disclaimed any intention to misrepresent the Carnegie Foundation, and while I think Mr. Pritchett states the truth when he says that no members of the Carnegie Foundation were connected directly with this method of placing their men on the nominal pay roll of the Government, yet the interlocking of the interests of the two great foundations is so complete that I am not so sure that what the Rockefeller Foundation does in its activities may not be, in part at least, attributed to the Carnegie Foundation. It is rather hard to get the information one wants as to this connection, but the General Education Board, which is recognized as the great Rockefeller institution, was chartered by the Congress of the United States. It started out with a fund, I think, of about $21,000,000. That has been gradually increased, but I can not find out where the money has come from. Possibly it was given by the Rockefeller interests and possibly it came from some other source; but it is a well-known fact, Mr. President, that Mr. Carnegie is so closely associated with the General Education Board, which is a Rockefeller insti-tution, that Mr. Rockefeller at one time congratulated him and thanked him for connecting himself with the General Education Board, and, according to the last report I have seen, Mr. Carnegie was a member of the General Education Board. Whether or not he is now, I do not know, but he was at one time, and that at a time when most of these activities were being engaged in.

Mr. President, turning to the Congressional Record of May, 1914, I find there was printed at the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kenyon] a report which was made to him by the Department of the Interior. From that report it appeared that the principal of the Rockefeller Foundation October 1, 1905, was $10,000,000. On page 9133 it will appear that on March 23, 1906, it was increased by $250,000; on February 7, 1907, it was increased by $10,667,917.80; and on August 1, 1909, by gift it was increased by $10,000,146; the August 1, 1909, by gift it was increased by $10,000,000 in total amount at that time being more than $30,000,000 in round numbers. Since that time it has been swelled by gifts Where does the money come from? This from other sources. Where does the money come from? This report does not show where it came from, and I can only infer from the knowledge I have from outside sources that a large portion of this money came from Mr. Carnegie or his interests. I may be in error, but I have no desire to misrepresent. That does not connect the Carnegie Foundation with it at all, but when the man who founded the Carnegie Foundation is put on the General Education Board, which is a Rockefeller board, one can very properly, it seems to me, conclude that the two are acting together.

That is not all. The general activities of these institutions go out through different agencies under all kinds of names. They extend and exert their influence all over the country, with the final result and purpose of getting control of the educational institutions of the country as represented by the primary and secondary educational institutions and the colleges of this country.

Mr. President, I, for one, am going to continue to protest against this practice and I shall do it in the face of the admission here in the Senate of the United States that these foundations have done vast good. I realize—nobody realizes better than I—that they extend their activities in certain directions where the Government is unwilling to extend its activities; but what I am objecting to is that they shall use their activities in connection with the Government, thereby giving the Government's stamp of approval to things which the Standard Oil Co., or Mr. Rockefeller, as the great type of the Standard Oil Co., or Mr. Carnegie, as the representative of the Steel Trust, wish to have done in an educational way in this country

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a ques-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator has just made a remark that interests me very much, and I should like to ask him what beneficent activity can be carried forward by a private citizen or association that can not be carried forward by the Government of the United States?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Nothing at all.

Mr. CLAPP. I understood the Senator awhile ago to say that these foundations had done things, for which he applauded them, which could not be done by the Government.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is putting it more broadly than I intended to put it.

Mr. CLAPP. I thought so.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I meant that they have gone into certain lines of research that the Government would not like to go into; that is all.

Mr. CLAPP. Or has not gone into.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Or has not gone into; along lines of medical research, for instance, such as investigations into the disease called pellagra, which has afflicted the people of the South for so long, and various other diseases.

Mr. CLAPP. But it is within the power of Congress to do anything any individual can do under any law of Congress; in other words, no corporation can have greater power for good than the creator of that corporation, which is the Government.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is right. The Government can do anything private institutions can do. There is no question about that.

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly; I knew the Senator misspoke when he made the statement as broad as he did.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I presume that the Senators, as lawyers, are talking about a corporation formed by law and having an artificial life and not a natural life.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, just a few words more in connection with the statement I made awhile ago—and I call the attention of the Senator from New Mexico to this, for the Senator rather resented my suggestion as to influence, although I repudiated any idea of suggesting any improper in--to show the powerful influence that is wielded on educational institutions, not a corrupting influence, but an influence that operates just the same. For instance, there are institutions in the country where professorships were endowed by religious men of particular denominations, who made it a condition in their wills that when the endowment ceased to be used for furthering the tenets of the particular denomination, it should go to some other institution; but, strange as it may seem, some of these colleges have given up these endowments of professorships in order to accept other endowments from the Rockefeller Foundation. In this connection I desire to call the Senator's attention to Bowdoin College, which institution actually surrendered an endowment that it had, if my information is correct, given by a man of a particular religious denomination, I believe, in order to accept a larger endowment from the Rockefeller Foundation. It is impossible to tell of the in-fluence that these donations have. Bishop Candler speaks of a Prof. Bemis, connected with the Chicago University, which is a well-known Rockefeller institution, who resigned because his ideas of political economy and other political teachings did not agree with those of Mr. Rockefeller and of his subservient followers. Mr. President, we find this thing working in every direction in order to control the educational institutions of the country

Mr. FALL. The Senator does not think for a moment, does he, that we can control a State institution such as Bowdoin College, if that college or any other State institution chooses to accept an endowment from Andrew Carnegie or from John D. Rockefeller? Of course, the Senator realizes we can not put a stop to that.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I understand that thoroughly.

Mr. FALL. The Senator spoke of the possible influence that might cause a Senator to vote or to raise his voice here in a matter and in the same breath explained the influence on a college of a large endowment. I do not think that the comparison is just exactly what the Senator meant it to be. I think I understand the Senator, however.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I meant that those in charge of a college, for instance, would be influenced by the larger interests of the institution, by what they thought would help the institution more, just as we look at these things influenced by what we consider the best interests of our constituents and our States.

That is what I meant.

Mr. FALL. Well, not necessarily our States.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, this discussion probably goes far afield of the Agricultural appropriation bill, but the things are so closely interwoven with each other that I thought it was proper to say what I have said. I hope that this amendment will be adopted, and if it is too strong I think it can be amended so as to relieve some of the conditions of which Senators complain.

In conclusion, permit me to say that our country is big enough, our Treasury rich enough, and our patriotism broad enough to do all our people need without calling for assistance upon those whose fortunes are so ample they can not find ways to spend them in the ordinary course of a lifetime. The people of this country want no tainted fortunes to accomplish their happiness.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have made inquiry of the department while the discussion has been going on, and have received the information that there is now no connection at all between the department and its demonstration work and these foundations. I want further to call attention to the fact that in the fiscal year 1914-15, while there was cooperation between the Government and the foundations, we appropriated $375,000 for this work. When the law was enacted severing all connection with the foundations we then increased the appropriation to $673,240, to take care of the amount that would otherwise have been lost because of the cooperative fund furnished by the foundation.

The language of this bill takes care of the situation under which all connection between the Government and these institutions, as I am informed, has now been severed, and it seems to me that it would be sufficient if the same language were incorporated, if it is so desired, after the appropriation for use outside of the cotton belt.

I am a little solicitous about the work of the department being interfered with; but the whole matter has been taken care of, and I am sure that the Senator from Iowa on investigation will find that there is now no necessity for the legislation he proposes in so far as governmental activities are con-

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Carolina is correct, it strikes me that the proposed amendment can do no harm. If, on the other hand, the Senator from South Carolina is apprehensive that a prohibition of the character involved in the amendment of the Senator from Iowa will interfere or in any manner abate the activities of the department, that is conclusive evidence, to my mind, that the sooner we enact the most sweeping prohibition the better. It is a lamentable condition if any part of our Government sustains such a relationship to outside contributions that the prohibiting of the use of those contributions will in any manner interfere with the operations of our Government.

The Senator from Oregon (Mr. CHAMBERLAIN) has read into the Record some statements, and, eminent as the men are who have made those statements, they do not particularly interest me, because if all the learned men in America were to file a statement that two and two make four it would not attract a passing notice from me. Some things are so absolutely plain and so absolutely fundamental that no declaration of anybody can weaken or strengthen them.

I want to say, Mr. President, without any reflection upon the men who are back of these foundations, that to put ourselves in a position where they can influence the spirit of education in our public educational institutions is absolutely out of harmony with the spirit of democracy. In a democracy, in a free gov-ernment, the spirit taught by its educational institutions, the color given to thought and development, should be that which finally works out from the broad equation of the democracy. Men here and there may be interested more than others, men naturally may take a leadership in thought by reason of their capacity to interest and attract; but, after all, the spirit inculcated should be the spirit that comes from the broad equation of the democracy; and to permit any man or any group of men outside to establish a separate and independent spirit or to shape or influence the general spirit of the educational institutions of the country, is out of harmony with the very fundamental spirit of free government. Men are so constituted that they will, of course, bear in mind and favor those policies that seem most attractive from their standpoint; and it is hostile not only to the spirit but to the best interests of free government that any man or group of men, outside of their direct participation in the current of the Nation's life, should have any voice or influence in directing and shaping the spirit and policy and purpose of our educational institutions.

I believe the very fact that to-day there may be hesitation in putting the ax to the root of this evil for fear that it will embarrass the Government ought to be a warning. If the time has come already when we hesitate, for fear of embarrassment to our Government, to eradicate an evil of this kind, the time has come when we ought to proceed at once to the eradication of it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I think it is necessary for me to correct an impression that my remarks made on the Senator. I did not intend to convey the impression that it would embarrass the Government. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Gronna] admits that it might interfere with certain local work. I am sure that the Government now is entirely disassociated from the work; that the adoption of the amendment could neither add to nor subtract from that. So far as the Federal Government is concerned, under the act of 1914 it is disassociated from any cooperation with these different foundations in the farm-demonstration work.

Mr. CLAPP. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa expressly excludes from its operations State, county, and municipal educational agencies and forces.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. So far as I am concerned, as chairman of the committee, after reading this language, I would not object to the amendment going in. I think it can be worked out so that it will not interfere in any way whatever with the operation of the demonstration work.

Mr. GRONNA and Mr. FALL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. FALL. I understood the Senator had yielded the floor, and I was seeking the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I would not attempt to be recognized now but for the fact that the Senator from South Carolina has used my name in connection with what is going on.

The Senator from North Dakota did not intend to defend any foundation, nor did he care if the appropriations made by these foundations were cut off. What the Senator from North Dakota did say, or what he intended to say, was that he did not wish to see the great work that was being done by some of the professors in the great institutions of learning so limited that they would be prohibited from cooperating with the officials of the Federal Government. That was my understanding, and it was only to that that I referred.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, it is very often popular on the stump, on the Chautauqua platform, and sometimes in the Congress of the United States to tell just how free we are from any extraneous influences, and particularly popular at times to talk about "tainted money." I have read something about it for years with reference to the college foundations that have been referred to here. Sometimes it may be possible that in the enthusiasm of the moment some of us may be led to observations of this kind apropos of nothing pending in particular. The particular matter here is the question of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] with reference to the Agriculture appropriation bill, and certain work under it.

The ideas expressed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and the Senator from Minneosta [Mr. CLAPP] are, to some extent, the same that I entertain. I am just as much opposed to individual control of the Government, or of any portion of the Government, or any of its departments in the United States as I am to church control. I am just as much bitterly opposed to one as I am to the other-that is, that one man should, through enormous wealth, using that wealth for endowments or for cooperation work with the Government of the United States, in any way influence the teaching of the pupils in the schools or of the young minds, or influence public opinion. I think, sir, and I will say so frankly, that more harm, more injury has been done, more has been done to atrophy Americanism in the United States by the Carnegie Peace Foundation than by all other influences combined.

I can see good—if good is to be seen—in Mr. Carnegie's activities in various lines. I can see good in John D. Rockefeller personally and in his activities in various lines. It has been developed here, at any rate, during this debate, or if it has not been developed it might as well be, that up to 1914 the Rockefeller Foundation joined hands with the Agricultural Department of the United States, cooperated with them, and expended money for purposes for which the Congress of the United States—of which the Senator from Minneosta [Mr. Clapp], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kenvon] were then Members—had not appropriated money; that the Rockefeller Foundation had stepped in prior to that time and was doing work which the department could not do, because it had not the money to do it.

It has been developed here that in the extermination of the boll weevil for the fiscal year 1913-14 there was an agreement between the Agricultural Department and the Rockefeller Foundation. The Agricultural Department did not have sufficient funds—and the Secretary so reports here to the Congress of the United States—with which to carry on the necessary work in the extermination of the boll weevil; but the Rockefeller Foundation stepped in and offered to carry on part of feller Foundation stepped in and offered to carry on part of that work. They paid their own expenses, supplied $250,000 of the necessary funds, and then, for other work of a similar character in the Southern States, they paid the expenses to the amount of $37,500 the same year. It is further in evidence in the recent that what is known as the country demonstration. the report that what is known as the county demonstration work, which is the greatest work that the Agricultural Department, or, in my judgment, any other department of the Government, has ever done, was established by this Government with the aid and assistance of the Rockefeller Foundation.

Take the States of Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Arkansas, and the other States of the Union, particularly of the South-for up to 1914 this work was done principally in the South. They were behind in agriculture. They raised one great staple. They devoted practically their entire time and attention and energy to the raising of cotton. Through the cooperation of the Rockefeller Foundation the Agricultural Department extended the work of the agricultural colleges into every college of every State in the South. How? There were not funds with which to pay these expenses. There were no appropriations made by the Government of the United States. These Senators who will object to work being done by individuals had not provided that the work might be done by the department. The county extension work and the State extension work in every county of Georgia, the girls' clubs and the boys' clubs, which have done so much to develop intensive farming in the South, were supported by whom? By the local people themselves, through contributions from their counties on the one hand and by the Rockefeller Foundation giving an equal amount upon the other, the Government of the United States giving nothing.

Now, these are the facts. Justice might as well be done, although it is simply asked for John D. Rockefeller or his foundation.

I expressed my opinion in this matter when this debate first opened. I do not want to see the Rockefeller Foundation so fasten itself upon any department of this Government that it can in any way whatsoever influence education or influence this Government in any governmental matter. I do not want to see the Carnegie Foundation or Andrew Carnegie or any other individual, any more than I want to see the Catholic Church or any Protestant Church, fasten itself upon the body politic and dictate the policies of this Government. Neverthe-less, the fact remains that in these matters of which I have spoken the Rockefeller Foundation started this work and largely supported it. In 1914 the same objection was made to it that was made this morning in the same way. Going along with the appropriation bill, as I have had to do, going along with the report, as I have had to do since this debate opened, because not one word of evidence of any kind or character had beeen brought out theretofore, either pro or con, in favor of or against this amendment. I have been necessarily hurried in my examination. I have sought for a week from the Senator from Iowa and from the Senator in charge of this bill on behalf of the committee to ascertain what was pending, what was being done, why it was that some of our institutions and some of our agricultural workers in the Southwest were frightened at some measure pending, or supposed to be pending, in Congress. They have not been able to give me any more information than I possessed, which was none. Since this debate has opened we have at least carried it up to this effect: That the Rockefeller Foundation had started this work, had largely supported it, and had done magnificent work in aid of agricultural extension work throughout the South par-ticularly, and also throughout other sections of the country; that in 1914, instead of coming in here purely with a prohibitive measure, there was a provision adopted excluding the Rockefeller Foundation from any further participation in this work and making an appropriation by the Government to carry on exactly the same work itself. That was adopted. Now, in seeking information I was informed that instead of the Government having ceased its cooperation with the Rocke-feller Foundation, as a matter of fact, despite the act of Con-gress, it has continued it, and therefore that it was necessary to enact again the same legislation which was enacted in 1914; that this was the only argument in favor of it. I am now assured by the chairman of the committee that he has just conferred with the department and that this is not true.

These are the facts; and I say to you, Mr. President, that if the only method by which this work could be done should be through the cooperation of Andrew Carnegie or John D. Rockefeller, I for one would welcome such cooperation. There is no more important work being done to-day than the work which is being done by the extension of the agricultural college work in the different States and the counties. Everyone knows that. It is certainly within the knowledge of all of us that the people of the United States may find themselves in a short time in a position where it is necessary that every potato that can be raised under the ground shall be raised for their benefit, and that every grain of wheat which can be produced shall be produced; and if it can be done only through the assistance of Rockefeller or Carnegie, I for one stand here to say that I am not afraid of any imputations that I may be influenced by Rockefeller or Carnegie or anyone else when it comes to a matter which is of benefit to the people of the United States and the people whom I represent and to all the people who must live, and live from agriculture.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from New Mexico, with reference to the information which he has sought, I want to state that this amendment was not considered by the Agricultural Committee-at least not when I was present. I have had no opportunity to investigate it until this I happened to be out of the Chamber when this matter was first taken up. I have not even read or had an opportunity to read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa, and I feared when I heard the discussion going on that it was some amendment that would hamper the institutions of learning in my State and in other States and prohibit cooperation between the professors of these institutions of learning in the States and the Government of the United States, in that way giving them the franking privilege.

Mr. President, I think I may say that, so far as I am personally concerned, I am very glad to have an opportunity of voting for a provision that will disassociate from the Government of the United States these influences, which I consider are sinister influences. I have gone so far as to criticize the professors of sectarian schools, the men who are at the head of great denominational institutions of learning, institutions of the denomination to which I belong; I have even refused to contribute to those institutions because they had accepted contributions from sources which ought not to influence public opinion through liberal donations. I want to state that it is not only the Carnegle and the Rockefeller Foundations that I consider as dangerous influences. I could name a good many more if I wanted to.

Mr. President, after having taken time to read the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kenyon] I am satisfied that it will not interfere with the institutions of learning either in my State or in other States, but that they will be allowed to continue to cooperate with the Federal Government. It never was my intention to vote against the amendment be-cause it placed a limitation upon this appropriation and prohibited cooperation between these foundations and the Government. I am just as much in favor of it as is any other Senator on this floor. But, Mr. President, I am a member of this com-mittee, and it had not been brought up in the committee to my knowledge, and I thought I had a right to know what the provision of the amendment was. For that reason I asked some questions, and I did not seem to get the information. I was so obtuse, I presume, that I could not understand the explanation given me.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Dakota yield to the Senator from lowar

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I want to say, in confirmation of what the Senator says, that the amendment was not presented to the committee at any time. The information which has been brought to me concerning the matter was since the meetings of the committee. I am a member of the committee myself, and would have presented it at that time if I had had the information which I have had since that time.

Mr. GRONNA. I thought I was right in making the statement that it had not been considered by the committee.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; the Senator was exactly right about that.

Mr. GRONNA. It was not considered when I was present. Mr. President, I shall vote for the amendment after having learned what it is, and after I understand what is sought to be done by the provisions of the amendment.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD the letter to which I referred in my remarks. letter is addressed to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] instead of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBER-LAIN], and I insert it with his permission; also the names, compensation, and dates of appointment of various people in the Agricultural Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION, Washington, D. C., February 7, 1917.

Hon. Lee S. Overman, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator Overman: In response to your letter of February 3 I inclose lists giving the names, compensations, and dates of appointments of all persons employed in the several bureaus of the Department of Agriculture and in the Bureau of Education of the Department of the Interior as collaborators and who receive compensation of from $1$ to $25$ per annum. According to the records of the commission, there are are no collaborators employed in other bureaus or offices of the Government.

ment.

The Commissioner of Education, in response to Senate resolution No. 307 of January 4, 1917, made a report, published as Senate Document No. 684, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session, relative to the relations existing between the Bureau of Education and the Rockefeller Foundation and the Carnegle Foundation and other private or corporate organizations. This report contains information additional to that which you ask of the commission, inasmuch as it shows the private or corporate body by which salary is paid to the collaborators and the salary paid by such body. The records of the commission as to the names of the collaborators correspond with this report, except that the name of Thomas H. Briggs was perhaps through inadvertence omitted from the commissioner's report.

I would call attention to department letters published in the Congressional Recompt for August 3, 1916, pages 12027 to 12032, concerning employees carried on the rolls of the various departments at nominal compensation.

By direction of the commission.

By direction of the commission. Very respectfully,

CHAS. M. GALLOWAY, Acting President.

Names, compensation, and dates of appointment of collaborators in the several bureaus and offices of the Department of Agriculture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be

The Secretary. It is proposed to insert, at the proper place in the bill, the following:

That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to examine into the extent and conditions of the practice of experimentation on living animals in laboratories for research, and in hospitals or other establishments, and in the commercial production of serums and vaccines for sale, for the purpose of ascertaining whether such experiments and practices are attended with unnecessary and preventable suffering arising from useless repetitions of experiments, want of proper skill in the experimenters, nonuse of anesthetics, and the absence of proper care of the animals upon which such experiments or operations are conducted, and to report the results of such examination and investigation to the Congress of the United States.

United States.

That the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the expenses of such examination and investigation, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture.

That the experts, special agents, clerks, and stenographers employed under this appropriation shall be selected from persons eligible on any civil-service register.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I shall have

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana has the floor.

Mr. MYERS. I have the floor, and I do not yield.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I just rose to a point of Mr. MYERS. I do not yield, because I want to say a few words about this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will reserve the point of order, then.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, there has grown up in this country amongst intelligent and thinking people and those who give attention to humanitarianism a strong demand that the practice of vivisection on animals cease. It has been discussed, attention has been brought to it in schools, colleges, cussed, attention has been brought to it in schools, colleges, churches, and civic societies, and the sentiment is growing. It has spread all over the country, and some of the foremost publicists, scholars, and humanitarians of the country have given their support to the movement to stop that vicious practice; many resolutions have been adopted by societies demanding that the practice be stopped and that legislation be enacted to prevent it.

There has been formed a national antivivisection society which has its headquarters here in Washington, I believe, and holds annual meetings. The membership is large, and it is composed of highly intelligent and benevolent men and women. They have agitated for some time the matter of bringing to the attention of Congress this practice to which they are so justly opposed, and they have enlisted the sympathies of some Members of this body. The distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger], who is very heartily in sympathy with the movement to put a stop to this practice, has introduced in the Senate a bill which is now pending and embodies substantially the provisions of my amendment; but, while he is very heartily in favor of the proposed legislation and has given it all possible attention, it has not made any headway yet. It seems to be impossible to make any progress with it on account of the Senate, I suppose, being engrossed with what are supposed to be larger and more important matters. I therefore consented to present this amendment, embodying substantially the provisions of his bill, with his knowledge and consent, and with his hearty approval; and I believe that this appropriation ought to be made. It only asks for $20,000. If there is any objection to the amount I would be willing to make it $10,000. I believe that this is a very worthy amendment. It only provides for an investigation to learn to what extent the practice of vivisection is carried, and how and under what circumstances and for what purposes and reasons, and to what extent it may come under the jurisdiction of Congress in order that Congress may then, after having had a report, enact appropriate legislation, if it should see fit, to stop these practices

I think this is a matter on which we ought to have enlightenment. We have been talking here for two or three hours about enlightenment afforded by the Carnegie endowment and the Rockefeller endowment, and there is objection made to it because the funds therefor come from private sources. I have heard it stated a dozen times on the floor of the Senate during this debate that these things should be done by the Government; that when the Government can do anything just as well as an individual or corporation it ought to be done by the Government. Here is an opportunity for the Government to engage in highly laudable work of a very benevolent character, instead of waiting for the Rockefeller foundation or the Carnegie foundation or some other rich concern to furnish the money with which to do it. I believe the Government ought to do this and I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I make the point of order that the amendment has not been reported from a standing committee and has not been estimated for, and is entirely new matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that the point of order is well taken, and sustains it.

Mr. MYERS. While I have the floor I desire to offer another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 21, line 16, strike out the figures $176,505" and insert "$179,005."

Strike out lines 24 and 25 on page 21 and lines 1 and 2 on page 22 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "For testing and breeding fibrous plants, including the testing of flax straw, in cooperation with the Montana Agricultural College, $8,000, and in cooperation with the North Dakota Agricultural College, $16,760; in all, $24,760, which sum may also be used for paper making." making.

Page 22, line 23, strike out the figures "$160,000" and insert $170,000."

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I think I ought to have the support and cooperation of the Senators from North Dakota in this amendment. Here is an amendment which proposes very bene-ficial work along educational lines. We have just been com-plaining that the Government should not accept money from private sources for work of this character, but that this great Government is able to carry on all work of this character and pay for it. Here is an opportunity to have the Government do it in a matter which is of the highest importance and very necessary to educational work and to the advancement of agriculture in the States mentioned in the amendment,

In view of what we have heard here about the duty of the Government to pay its own expenses in this line of work and not to accept moncy from rich men or rich institutions, I think this amendment should undoubtedly be adopted. Here is a chance for the Senate to put in practice what we have heard advocated during the last two or three hours.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I make the point of order also against this amendment.

reported by a standing committee.
The Chair sustains the point of

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have an amendment to offer to the bill, which I send to the desk with the observation that perhaps the acting chairman of the committee and others will accept it.

It does not carry any additional appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. It is proposed to insert the following as an additional section: Sec. —. That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to prevent cruelty to animals while in transit by railroads or other means of transportation from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia into or through another State or Territory or the District of Columbia, and repealing sections 4386, 4387, 4388, 4389, and 4390 of the United States Revised Statutes," approved June 29, 1906, be amended to read as follows:

"That no railroad, express company, car company, covered as states."

States Revised Statutes," approved June 29, 1906, be amended to read as follows:

"That no railroad, express company, car company, common carrier other than by water, or the receiver, trustee, or lessee of any of them, whose road forms any part of a line over which cattle, sheep, swine, or other animals shall be conveyed from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia into or through another State or Territory or the District of Columbia, or the owners or masters of steam, sailing, or other vessels carrying or transporting cattle, sheep, swine, or other animals from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia into or through another State or Territory or the District of Columbia into or through another State or Territory or the District of Columbia, shall confine the same in cars, boats, or vessels of any description for a period longer than 28 consecutive hours without unloading the same in a humane manner, into properly equipped pens for rest, water, and feeding, for a period of not less than 5 nor more than 12 consecutive hours, unless prevented by storm or other accidental or unavoidable causes which can not be anticipated or avoided by the exercise of due diligence and foresight: Provided, That upon the written request of the owner or person in custody of that particular shipment, which written request shall be separate and apart from any printed bill of lading, or other railroad form, the time of confinement may be extended to 36 hours, and the time for rest and feeding to a period in excess of 12 hours. In estimating such confinement the time consumed in loading and unloading shall not be considered, but the time during which animals have been confined without such rest or food or water on connecting roads shall be included, it being the intent of this act to prohibit their continuous confinement beyond the period of 28 hours, except upon the contingencies hereinbefore stated: Provided further, That it shall not be required that sheep shall be unloaded in the nighttime, but where the time

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President

Mr. BRADY. Will the Senator yield to me? Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield for a question.

Mr. BRADY. This amendment seems to change a number of sections of the existing law. I understand that it repeals certain sections of the law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I think I can relieve the Senator's mind upon that point.

Mr. BRADY. At any rate, it makes certain changes. I would be very much pleased to have the Senator from New York explain why he thinks these changes are necessary.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am very glad, indeed, as, of course, it is my duty, to explain what the amendment proposes to do. The Senator from Idaho and other Senators who are interested in this matter and Senators generally will remember that under the present law live stock shipped in transportation may not be confined in railroad cars in excess of 28 consecutive hours, unless the shipper signs an agreement to the effect which will permit them to be confined in railroad cars 36 consecutive The present law also provides that at the end of the 28 hours or of the 36 hours, whichever may be the case, the railway company must unload the cattle, sheep, or horses, whichever they may be, in suitable pens for resting and feeding, not less than 5 hours.

The amendment which I sent to the desk simply provides that the cattle or live stock shall be unloaded, rested, and fed not less than 5 hours nor more than 12 hours, with the single exception that upon the consent of the owner or shipper they may be rested more than 12 hours. That is all.

Mr. BRADY. What, in the Senator's opinion, is the necessity for a change in that respect?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will endeavor to explain that. operation of the 28-hour law has had a rather unlooked-for effect in one respect. One of the motives back of the enactment of that law was to prevent cruelty to cattle and other live stock !

in its transportation. Another motive back of the enactment of the law, I think I am accurate in saying, was to expedite the shipment of live stock. The first motive has been attained; cruelty to animals has been in a large measure obviated. The second motive, that of expediting the shipment of live stock, has not been attained, and, in fact, the operation of the law in some respects is such as to slow down the shipment of live stock, when one stops to consider the manner in which the law is obeyed by the railway companies, for let me say to the Senator that so long as the railways keep the cattle in the feed pen resting and feeding for 5 hours they are complying with the law, and there have been many, many cases brought to my attention where railways have kept cattle confined in feed pens not only for 5 hours, but for 12 hours, 18 hours, and 24 hours, and yet in utter compliance with the law. I have known of many shipments of cattle, we will say between points in northern Michigan and East Buffalo, a distance not in excess of 400 or 500 miles, which under ordinarily efficient railway transportation should be covered within 36 hours, or at least with the necessity involved of but one unloading for feed, water, and rest, and those same shipments unloaded twice and even three times, and kept hour after hour in the pens, with no benefit whatsoever to the cattle, tremendous delay at the other end of the line, and grave loss to the shipper, who when he originally loads the live stock at the point of departure makes his calculation that they shall reach the market on a certain day, a day which according to his judgment is the most favorable market day for the sale of his cattle or sheep or hogs, or whatever the live stock may happen to be.

Mr. President, I realize that this matter is rather an important one to bring before the Senate in this comparatively sudden manner. I will say partly in explanation that I have consulted with the officials of the Bureau of Animal Industry and with delegations of live-stock men who have been here in the last two or three days and who have presented to me a description of a state of affairs which quite passes my capacity to understand relative to the delays incident to the shipment and transportation of live stock.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do.

Mr. BRADY. That is the very point upon which I was desiring information. I did not understand why the railroad companies would wish to delay shipments simply by having the cattle confined in the feed pens.

Mr. WADSWORTH. When the railway company unloads two or three cars into a pen for rest and feed, of course they must When the 5 be kept there 5 hours under the existing law. hours are up, it then rests in the option of the railway company whether to load them up and send them on; and it would seem from observation which I have made upon the subject that in many cases the yardmaster of the railway in which the feed yards are located is quite indifferent as to whether he makes up a train to take out the live stock in 2 or 3 hours, 6 hours, or 10 hours. He tells the shipper or drover who may be accompanying the cattle he will put them out when they are good and ready; and many an instance has arisen where the cattle have been loaded into cars out of the feed pen, which are kept standing on the sidetrack so long that they have had to be unloaded a second time and refed in the same yards, on the ground that the railway was unwilling to attempt to send them to the next feeding point within the 36-hour limitation provided by law; they would not take the chances, although the great waste of time which had taken place while the cattle, after they had been fed, were in cars standing on the sidetrack was the fault of the railway. So the cattle in many, many instances are left either confined in feed pens resting or feeding or else upon sidetracks confined in cars such a length of time as to induce the railway to offer the excuse that they can not reach the next 36-hour limit without unloading and feeding again.

It is the object of this amendment to place a limitation on the length of time which the railway companies may keep cattle confined in the pens unless the owner himself consents to an extension of the period of 12 hours.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President—

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BRADY. This amendment is of such vast importance to the live-stock interests of the West that I fear it would be impossible for us to get sufficient information to act intelligently upon the matter. From the Senator's statement, it seems to me, there is great need of some legislation along this line. I wish to ask the Senator whether he feels that this amendment has the full approval of the department of the Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will say that the amendment as drafted in this form was not submitted to the department, but the officials of the Bureau of Animal Industry are in complete sympathy with this limitation on the time of confinement in feed pens; at least I so gathered in conversation with them.

Mr. BRADY. Does the Senator feel that the owners and shippers of live stock need this regulation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am very certain that the live-stock shippers need legislation of this character. May I be permitted to say that I have racked my brain to think of any portion of the country where the live-stock owners would be injured by this amendment. The 12 hours limitation on the confinement of cattle in feed pens seems to me to be very generous.

Mr. FALL rose

Mr. WADSWORTH. Both the Senator from New Mexico and myself have had some experience in shipping cattle in the West, and it has not been my experience that cattle have ever needed to be held in excess of 12 hours, except under most un-usual circumstances, in which the owner himself has asked that they be held more than 12 hours.

Mr. BRADY. I want to do everything that can be done to benefit the live-stock interests. Mr. FALL. Mr. President-

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico

Mr. FALL. I wish to ask the Senator, for the benefit generally of the discussion, as a cattle owner himself, does he not think that it should be in his power to compel a railroad company to load the cattle and ship them in 12 hours? If the Senator himself chooses to extend the time, that is all right. It must benefit the cattle; it must be a benefit to the consumers. You do not want to hold the cars on a sidetrack until the cattle get car fever, to which we all know to some extent they are liable. Should it not be within the power of the owner or shipper himself to say, "You are compelled to keep them for 5 hours; you shall not keep them over 12 hours without my consent"? That is the whole object.

Mr. BRADY. That is the purpose of the amendment. The Senator from New Mexico knows as well as any Senator on this floor how hard the stock interests of the West had to work to secure the 28-hour law, and I do not want to see anything done that would in any way impair that law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would be probably the last man in the Senate to attempt to break down the provision as to 28 hours, even though it would involve the confession also of somewhat selfish motives on my part, because I am a shipper of live stock.

Mr. BRADY. This provision appears to be quite necessary in the judgment of the Senator. On the other hand, it is so drawn and there is so little time to consider it that we must depend upon his good judgment in the matter in supporting the amendment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I have not intervened in the debate thus far because I was aware that the Senator from New York was addressing himself to a rather serious question, and I was glad to obtain the enlightenment of his views upon the subject; but this legislation is subject to the point of order that it is new legislation. The Secretary of Agriculture has sent me his recommendation in the form of a bill with reference to an amendment of the existing statute relating to the transportation of live stock, and whilst I have not examined it minutely I imagine it covers some of the features urged by the Senator from New York. That bill will be introduced by me to-day and read and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and it will receive consideration as soon as I can secure it in that committee. As the Senator is aware, of course, that committee is under great pressure now with reference to various matters of legislation, and there may be some delay regarding it.

I would be very glad to see relief given, and promptly given, but my experience teaches me that it is never wise to yield to the urgency of legislation upon a subject of this kind without going through the usual processes of committee reference and hearing. I know in numerous matters that have come before our committee legislation that was apparently innocent in appearance has been proved to be burdened with very serious results.

This legislation relates in part to the congestion of traffic, and congestion of traffic is now a very serious question with almost all the railroads of the country. Both the railway executives and the Interstate Commerce Commission are applying themselves now to some solution of the question.

I can not, therefore, yield to the urgency of this situation and must insist upon my point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It seems to the Chair that the point of order is well taken. The Chair will therefore sustain it

Mr. JONES. I desire to offer an amendment which I send to the desk

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 25, line 24, strike out the numerals $62,740" and insert in lieu thereof "$65,240."

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I will say that this increases the amount $2,500 and is estimated for by the department. I wish to give the reasons for it in a few words. The Government has been operating a bulb farm at Bellingham, Wash., of about 10 acres, for several years. They have demonstrated that the climate and soil there are especially adapted to the propagation of bulbs. Our import of bulbs into this country is about a million dollars a year, and if we can develop the propagation of the bulbs in this country, it means a great deal. As I said, they have already demonstrated that the climate and soil of Bellingham are especially adapted to this line of work.

The people there are giving to the Government a tract of 60 acres. There is a provision in another part of the bill appropriating $10,000, included in one of the lump-sum items, for the necessary buildings and the improvements and getting the tract in shape. The department included an estimate of $10,000 for the propagation and cultivation of bulbs on this 60-acre tract.

Mr. CLARK. For experimental purposes?

Mr. JONES. For experimental purposes, of course. They are very anxious to have the full amount, and I hope the full amount will be allowed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the acting chairman of the committee to a provision in the bill, and later, before I conclude, I will offer an amendment that, I believe, will receive the approval not only of the acting chairman but of everyone who will listen to the statement.

The amendment that I propose to offer is on page 38, commencing with line 2. I am going to move to strike out that appropriation and insert it in a little different language, with an increase of $1,200.

Mr. President, I appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and offered an amendment to increase the appropriation provided for for this national forest by $5,000. I was under the impression—in fact, I know—that those in Agricultural Committee who really had charge of the matter were favorable to it, but the amendment was referred to the Secretary of Agriculture. The committee will remember that the letter of the Secretary was read. He agreed practically to the thorough desirability of the increase, but said on account of the financial condition of everything he desired to curtail all possible expense, and he could not give his approval at this time. So the provision was not put in the bill; but the committee did allow a provision to remain in the bill, as follows:

So much, not exceeding $1,200, of any funds hereafter appropriated for the Nebraska National Forest for any fiscal year to and including the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, as may be necessary shall be available for the purchase of land now under lease and used as a nursery site for the Niobrara division of the Nebraska National Forest, $6,165.

That was in the bill as it passed the House, and was put in at the suggestion and request of the department, because it is recognized that that land must be purchased at some time. There is no appropriation in the bill to pay for it, although it gives authority to take it out of the appropriation. The appropriation for the Nebraska National Forest, on page 27, line 13, to the land of the second states. is only $1,165. It is true there is an appropriation of $5,000 to carry on the nursery work at the Niobrara station at the same time. If this $1,200 were taken out, there would be practically nothing left, and it would not be taken out, of course, unless there was a distinct appropriation made; but they would run on the theory that they would take it out in some years between now and 1920.

I want to call the attention particularly of the acting chairman to the fact that the bill as it comes from the House and as reported from the committee has the announced intention of buying that land. It comes about from the fact that when this national forest was inaugurated this particular 80 acres of land and another piece that my amendment does not affect were supposed to be within the boundaries of the forest reserve. As a matter of fact, when it was properly surveyed it was found that the 80 acres that they are now using for a nursery and 181 acres composing another tract were outside of the forest grounds and were owned privately. This land in question is bottom land on the Niobrara River. There is not and was not any land within the forest itself suitable for the work of raising and producing nursery stock that they are producing there, and they have been producing it for several years. You will remember that this is a forest reserve where there is no forest, but they are attempting to grow it. So they had to lease this private land. It is under lease now, and they have been using it under that lease. It includes the provision, as I understand, that they should have the right to buy at any time this 80 acres of land for $1,200, and that privilege will expire in 1920. The reason why the provision was put in the bill was to enable the department to use any money appropriated to buy this land at any time under any appropriation between now and 1920.

I am only anxious to have this land purchased now and to make an appropriation in this bill for that specific purpose, so that the matter may be ended. If something should happen to prevent the purchase of the land it would seriously cripple the work of the service, because it would take the land away from the nursery grounds mainly. There is this note, which Senators who have the committee print of the bill before them will see;

Through an error in the public-land surveys this tract-

That is, the 18.25-acre tract, not the one which I am now proposing to purchase-

Through an error in the public-land surveys this tract was inadvertently included in the principal nursery which supplied the Nebraska National Forest when that nursery was established. The second tract, containing approximately 80 acres—

That is the one that is under lease and which this appropriation would enable the department to purchase and to add to the reservation-constitutes the Niobrara nursery site, which for several years has been in use under lease, with an option for purchase. The addition of these tracts is essential to the successful development of reforestation in Nebraska, and suitable national-forest land is not available for the

Mr. President, the effect of my amendment will be that, in lieu of the language now in the bill, providing that any of the funds appropriated between now and 1920 to the extent of $1,200 may be used for the purchase of this tract of land, it makes a definite appropriation now of the amount. In fact, the estimate of the department increased the amount by exactly this particular appropriation; that is, instead of having, as in the committee print of the bill, on line 22, page 35, $1,165, the estimate was $2,365. That is just $1,200 more than the amount now named in the bill. Instead of leaving it as it now is, in order to enable Senators to know exactly for what purpose the money is to be used, I thought it better to make a specific appropriation of the $1,200. I have not, however, changed the amount in line 22, page 35, but have added this specific appropriation. I will now send the amendment to the desk and ask the Secretary to read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 38, line 2, beginning with the words "so much," it is proposed to strike out down to and including the numerals "$6,165," in line 8, and to insert the following in lieu thereof:

For the purchase of land now under lease and used as a nursery site for the Niobrara division of the Nebraska National Forest, $1,200; in all, $7,365.

Mr. NORRIS. That increases the amount exactly $1,200, Mr. President.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—
Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.
Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator how large the tract of land is?

Mr. NORRIS. It contains 80 acres, as stated by the depart-I have never seen it.

Mr. GRONNA. I have no objection to the amendment.
Mr. NORRIS. It is bottom land and is situated directly on the Niobrara River, I am told.

Mr. BRADY. Is the land owned by private individuals?
Mr. NORRIS. It is owned by a private individual. It was supposed when the survey was made that the land was public land, but when they came to make a definite survey it was found that this particular 80 acres, together with another tract, which is being used in another place and which this does not affect, was in fact privately owned land.

Mr. BRADY. Is the Senator sure that the appropriation of $1,200 will enable the department to buy the land?

Mr. NORRIS. I understand the department have an option to buy the land for $1,200.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I merely want to make a brief statement. The committee went pretty fully into this matter. As the Senator from Nebraska has already indicated, it seemed to the committee that the recommendation of the department was sufficient, but the action of the committee was incorporated just as it appears in the bill. followed the recommendation without any change at all, but we inserted the following proviso, to which the Senator has called attention:

Provided further, That the cost of any building erected at the nurseries on the Nebraska National Forest may amount to but shall not exceed $1,000.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me, that amendment, of course, makes no appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No. Mr. NORRIS. That has nothing to do with the amendment I am now offering, but is an amendment which has already been adopted.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The point I am making in reference to this is that the Secretary of Agriculture seemed to think that conditions just now were not pressing and did not warrant any other language than that which is found in the bill. That language is:

So much, not exceeding $1,200, of any funds hereafter appropriated for the Nebraska National Forest for any fiscal year to and including the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, as may be necessary, shall be available for the purchase of land now under lease and used as a nursery site for the Niobrara division of the Nebraska National Expect $6.165. nursery site f Forest, $6,165.

I want to say that the amount is very small; the Government is contemplating buying the land; and as the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska only anticipates what the department seems to have in mind anyway, as acting chairman of the committee I have no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, to come in on page 26 of the bill, line 23, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 26, line 23, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That $4,000 of the sum appropriated in this section shall be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture in cooperative work in forage-crop investigation in the State of Washington east of the Cascade Mountains, to be used under the direction of the Office of Forage-Crop Investigations of the Department of Agriculture, in cooperation with the Washington State Experiment Station, and upon the condition that the said Washington State Experiment Station shall contribute an equal amount to be used in such work, together with the amount hereby specified under the same direction and cooperation as herein indicated.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator from Washington that this amendment has not been estimated for nor has it been considered by the Committee.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the amendment does not increase the appropriation, and it is in line with the work for which this general appropriation is made. It has been requested by the chief of the Division of Forage Crop Investigations

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Has it been requested by the chief of that investigation who has charge here?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; it has been requested by the chief who has charge here. The amendment is simply intended to enable a great section of the country which is described in the amendment, in which is particularly felt the need for the development of forage crops on account of the semiarid character of the country, to get some share of the $139,180 which is provided for the investigation.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think, if the Senator from Washington will study the language of this paragraph, he will find that it provides for identically the thing which he desires.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It does not provide, Mr. President, that any portion of this money shall be expended in the State of Washington. I have sat here and have voted for these large appropriations for forage-crop investigations year after year, and have had promises year after year from the Agricultural Department that a portion of the appropriation would be expended in our State, where there is particular need for this very sort of demonstration work, and every year we are put off with the promise that we shall have it next year. Now, it seems to me that, in view of the contribution that we make to these general funds, we are entitled to have a portion of this money expended in our State.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I notice that $92,980 is being used for this identical purpose. The Senator can readily understand that we could not begin legislating here and naming States specifically where the general fund pertaining to all of the States is being appropriated for, as in this bill. I recognize the difficulty under which the Senator is laboring in having the department make these investigations in his State; but the best that can be done in the present form of the bill is to see that justice is done so far as we may; but to single out individual States would be impossible. We could not have legislation of that kind. I am thoroughly in sympathy with the Sen-ator in getting this investigation in his State, but as acting chairman of the committee I could not give my consent to have this precedent established here for this specific purpose within a specific State. It is for a specific purpose that the whole $139,180 is appropriated, but we can not name the specific States in which wholly or in part it shall be expended.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the amendment provides for cooperative work between the Agricultural Department and the State experiment station; that a similar amount to that provided for in the amendment shall be provided by the State experiment station. It is absolutely necessary that there should be a specific authorization by law in order to bring about that result.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, my attention has been called to a provision in the program of work of the United States Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1917, along this same line. It says:

Extensive tests have also been carried on for the past year at Pullman, Wash.

I want to suggest to the Senator that if those in charge of this fund here are solicitous to have this work done in Washington, there is nothing in the world to hinder them from doing so. The appropriation is general, and next year they can take any amount that in their judgment is deemed necessary to do the work. So, if in the Senator's State the work is cooperative and the State makes the proper appropriation, I see nothing in the world to hinder the utilization of the amount indicated along the lines the Senator desires.

Mr. President, the only thing which Mr. POINDEXTER. would prevent it would be an order of the Secretary of Agriculture that it be used in some other State. That is the only objection.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I can not conceive how a matter concerning which money is needed, so much so that an officer having charge of the investigations has so stated, will not be provided for by the department under the general appropriation here made. Here is an appropriation of $139,180 for all the States to cover this specific work. I think all that would be necessary would be to call the attention of the proper authorities to the item the Senator desires taken care of. In fact, I have no doubt their attention has been directed to it already. They certainly have not asked us for any greater appropriation to carry on this work, however. If a larger estimate had come from the department stating that certain States were asking that certain very necessary work be done, it would be a different proposition; but they have not so done. The Senator will realize the force of what I am saying, that we can not, out of a fund appropriated for a specific purpose for all the States, select a given amount, and set it aside for a particular State.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I do not care to occupy any great amount of the Senate's time in arguing the matter; but it is perfectly obvious that we can do that very thing. There is nothing to prevent Congress from specifying how a certain portion of this fund shall be used; and it is very likely that it will not be used for that purpose unless a specification in the appropriation act so provides. The officer in charge of forage-crop investigations has not the discretion to apportion this fund, but it is apportioned by the Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary of Agriculture has a great deal of power where we appropriate several million dollars in lump sums and leave it to his unrestricted discretion as to where he shall use it and how he shall use it. I am very much in hope that the Senator will accept this amendment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The appropriation in the bill of $139,180 is for identically the kind of work the Senator has reference to in the region indicated by the Senator. If he will read the paragraph, he will see that it provides:

For the purchase, propagation, testing, and distribution of new and rare seeds; for the investigation and improvement of grasses, alfalfa, clover, and other forage crops, including the investigation of the utilization of cacti and other dry-land plants; and to conduct investigations to determine the most effective methods of eradicating weeds, $139,180.

It covers the identical work that the Senator desires to have

Mr. POINDEXTER. What the Senator has read illustrates the difficulty of lump-sum appropriations. The Secretary of Agriculture may take the entire amount of the appropriation to investigate cacti or to investigate the eradication of weeds. What we desire is that the small sum of $4,000, which is to be put with a like amount to be contributed by the State experiment station, shall be used for what I think is a more desirable purpose than either one of the others; that is, in experiments in the production of forage crops in a section of the semiarid part of the country, where that is a very difficult problem.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will allow me. I think a very liberal amount of the appropriation for this purpose for the current fiscal year, namely, $92,000, is being used for investigating forage crops; and I think if the Senator will call the attention of the proper authorities to the needs of his State and the willingness of the State to cooperate he will have no difficulty in getting a proportionate share of this money for the State of Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator is so committed to the idea of lump-sum appropriations without any restriction made by Congress as to how the money shall be distributed, why has he taken the pains in this same paragraph to provide that $60,000 of the amount appropriated shall be used in the distribution of seed? Why not leave that question with the Secretary to determine how much of it he will use for the distribution of seed?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator is losing sight of the same principle, because this $60,000 item for the distribution of seeds covers all the States. It does not say that $60,000 shall be used for the distribution of seeds in the State of Washington. The Senator is seeking to make out of the general fund applicable to all of the States a special appropriation for his State. Now, we say in the bill that wherever it is found that there is necessity for developing and distributing these seeds, the appropriation may be used, and the Senator's State will share alike with all the other States

Mr. POINDEXTER. On page 69, of the appropriation bill, beginning in line 7, there is an illustration to which I wish to call attention. There is an appropriation of $578,240 for the Senator's section of the country. Why does he specify that?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I beg the Senator's pardon. That amount is to be used outside of the section of the Senator from South Carolina. It specifically says "outside of the cotton belt."

Mr. POINDEXTER. I see I was mistaken as to that, but the next paragraph contains an appropriation of $659,560 to be expended inside of the Senator's section of the country. one case it is specified that the amount shall be expended inside of a certain section and in the other case that it shall be expended outside of a certain section. Why specify either one of

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Because there are conditions general to the entire section, including all of the States in that section, due to the ravages of the boll weevil, threatening the greatest monopoly that any country was ever given by the hand of God, the textile business of the world.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The only difference is that the Senator from South Carolina is of the opinion that his interests are of more importance than the interests of anybody else.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, No.
Mr. POINDEXTER. That is the logical result of his argument.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. On the other hand, practically an equal amount was given for use outside of the cotton belt, without there being any indication of a great menace threatening any one of the staple crops there. I do not know what was the purpose of those who framed that provision-I did not frame it—but I see that the appropriations are pretty well balanced, for there is appropriated over a million dollars for demonstration work in the entire United States. This bill divides the appropriations as they have previously been divided.

Mr. POINDEXTER. They never were divided in this way before, Mr. President, because there are several hundred thousand dollars more appropriated than ever were appropriated before. I think this is the first time I have ever called attention to the division of these appropriations, for it is a little foreign to my disposition to quarrel with an appropriation of this kind; and I do not quarrel with it; but I do quarrel with the disposition of the Senator to specify appropriations when they are given to his section and when I seek to obtain a small specification for work which is of importance to a great section of the country within the State of Washington—what is called the Inland Empire—with conditions peculiar to itself, climatic conditions which are different from those of any other State in the Union, the Senator answers that by saying that there should be simply lump-sum appropriations for general distribution throughout the country; and yet we are confronted here with an appropriation of $659,000, with a specification that it shall be used in his section of the country.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Now, the Senator says that he has a quarrel with the Senator from South Carolina because of this lump-sum appropriation. I have simply called attention to the fact that the amounts appropriated were to be used for a specific purpose generally in every State where the use was indicated. So that the $578,240 is to be used in every State outside of the cotton belt where its use is indicated, and the $659,560 is to be used in every State in the cotton belt where its use is indicated. The Senator from South Carolina is contending that it would be wrong in principle for one State in a given section for which provision is made to come in and demand that a specific amount of the appropriation should be set aside for identically the same work within that State.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, how does the Senator distinguish in principle between that and the appropriation for several

If there is a peculiar situation existing in a State which is different from the situation in other States and if the interests that are involved are of sufficient importance, upon what principle does the Senator say there should be no specification for that when he specifies the amount that shall be used in a particular area of the country? The Senator does not contend that the boll weevil is an instrument of interstate commerce and comes under the commerce clause of the Constitution,

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What I am trying to get at is why the Senator holds there should not be an appropriation to meet the peculiar conditions existing in the State of Washington?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. This appropriation of $139,000 is exactly along the line of the argument of the Senator. It is appropriated for the semiarid region to take care of certain conditions that arise there. The Senator's State happens to be located in that section, and therefore the amount is available for his State. It is available for all the States that fall under that specification. That is exactly the same principle that is carried out in the other provisions.

I hope the Senator's State will get its share of this appropriation. I am not arguing against that; but I am simply saying it would hardly be fair to the sister States of Washington or to communities situated like his, for him, out of this general appropriation made for a particular section, to ask to specify an amount for his State, and leave the others without their pro rata share.

Mr. JONES. With the permission of my colleague, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether he would object to an amendment increasing the amount in the bill by $4,000, to be used in the State of Washington, on condition that the State shall appropriate $4,000 to be used in cooperation with the appropriation of the National Government?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It is a small amount, and if the State contributes a similar amount, I do not see why an arrangement can not be made with the Agricultural Department to carry on the experimental work.

Mr. JONES. I do not think the Senator should object to an amendment of that kind, because I will say that the department has the work for the ensuing year mapped out under the items included in the general program, and, unless such a pro-vision is made as has been indicated, I presume that our State will not get anything.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not see why it would not

Mr. JONES. I do not think it would unless the department has already planned to do it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I want to say to the Sena-tor that the department has not sent in any further estimate. We allowed the amount for which they estimated.

Mr. JONES. I understand that.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. And I feel sure that if the proper officer of the department recognizes the necessity for this work being done in Washington they have probably already included it; so that I really do not think it is necessary to change the provision of the bill. I think it would be sufficient to call the attention of the department to it.

Mr. JONES. They have not been doing this work, as I understand, in the State of Washington, and no doubt they have already mapped out their work for the next year and the money that is specified in this paragraph has already been apportioned, and under the provision as it now is we can not hope to have anything for our State; but if we can, by increasing the appropriation by no greater amount than $4,000, get how could I stand here and commit myself to a definite amount when it might work an injustice to other States?

Mr. JONES. It is not proposed to take it out of the amount that is now carried in the bill. It is not my suggestion that we disturb that at all; I do not want to disturb what the department has mapped out; but what I suggested was to increase the amount in the bill by whatever amount we agree upon-$4,000 my colleague has suggested—and then that amount will go to the State, and it will not work any injustice anywhere or interfere with any work the department has mapped out. It would not interfere with that at all.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Had this matter been brought to the attention of the committee, we could have gone into its details and investigated it; but I can not understand why the Senator's State can not receive its share of the benefit of this appropriation. The forage crops are now being investigated and bulletins are now being sent out giving the results of the investigation on this very matter.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I want to read, in connection with the suggestion of my colleague and the observation of the chairman of the committee, a statement from the director of the agricultural experiment station at Pullman, in the State Washington. He says:

You are doubtless aware of the fact that agricultural conditions in the State of Washington, both east and west, are radically different from any other part of the United States except portions of Oregon. It is also a fact that relatively little has been done along the line of forage-crop investigation for this district. We are making efforts along these lines in our State experiment station, but lack of funds prevents our doing as much as we should.

Then he suggests an appropriation of four or five thousand dollars for cooperative work in forage-crop investigations in the State of Washington, to be used under the direction of the Office of Forage Crop Investigations in cooperation with the Washington State Experiment Station, on condition that the Washington station contribute a like amount for such work.

We are especially desirous of conducting this type of work in the drier portions of the State, such as Adams, Lincoln, and Douglas Counties. You, of course, are perfectly cognizant of the needs in this district. There is also the same need, though perhaps not so critical, in the Palouse and Walla Walla country and in the district west of the Cascades for investigation in forage crops.

In this connection I would call your attention to the fact that the Great Plains district, through the Office of Dry Land Investigations, has secured very large Federal appropriations for conducting this kind of work, whereas our own State has received for such work little or nothing. It would seem, therefore, that the above-mentioned request could not be regarded by the national legislators as at all unreasonable.

I have some personal knowledge of the difficulty of obtaining proper recognition of the section of the country which is described in this letter from the department. Because of the interest, and perhaps the influence, of that section of the country which he describes there as the Great Plains section, we have simply been overlooked and neglected; and there is no substantial reason, there is no satisfactory reason, why Congress should not settle the matter by directing in the appropriation bill that a reasonable amount of this money should be expended in this section.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Daketa?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. If I may have the attention of the acting chairman of the committee, I suggest that a provision be inserted permitting the expenditure of a limited amount in cooperation with this experiment station. That is frequently done, and we have some of those same provisions in this billnot more than a specified amount may be so expended.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator must understand that all this work is done under the cooperative plan

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator from Washington, in the letter that he read from a citizen of his State-Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will allow me, he is not only a citizen but the director of the agricultural experiment station.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That emphasizes more the point I want to make. He claims that in the State of Oregon and in the State of Washington similar conditions exist. The Government is making these experiments in the State of Oregon now, so that the findings of that investigation are just as availthat specifically directed to our State, then, of course, by near they will plan to carry the work out.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I can not, as acting chairman of the committee, agree to that, for this reason: I do not know what, in the judgment of the department would be the proper proportionate share of the State of Washington. So to duplicate the work that is being done in Oregon that is a different proposition.

The Government says: "We are covering this very identical matter now in Oregon, and whatever results we find from our experiment station there are just as available for Washington as though the work were done in Washington." Now, it may be true that very little is done in Washington, and it may be true also that it is not necessary because the same work has been done in some other contiguous State under like conditions.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator for a question. Mr. FALL. I should like to ask the acting chairman of the committee if the appropriation of this amount is made upon the estimate or request of the department?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It is.

Mr. FALL. Do they not make requests based upon some estimates, so as to give the committee the information?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I called attention to what they were doing. Ninety-two thousand dollars is set aside for the forage-crop investigation.

Mr. FALL. Where?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Book of Estimates for 1917 gives a detailed statement.

That is satisfactory.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. In that detailed statement they say that work is being done in Oregon that is exactly of a like nature with that being done in Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will withdraw that amendment for the time being, Mr. President.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to be inserted at the end of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated The Secretary. It is proposed to insert, at the end of the bill, the following:

That the act of August 30, 1890, entitled "An act providing for an inspection of meats for exportation, prohibiting the importation of adulterated articles of food or drink, and authorizing the President to make proclamation in certain cases, and for other purposes" (26 Stat. L., p. 414), is hereby amended so as to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture, within his discretion and under such joint resolution as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury, to permit the admission of tick-infested cattle from Mexico, South and Central America, the islands of the Gulf of Mexico, and the Caribbean Sea into those parts of the United States below the southern cattle quarantine line at such ports of entry as may be designated by said joint regulations and also subject to the provisions of sections 7, 8. 9, and 10 of said act of August 30, 1890.

That all such cattle, when entered, shall be subject to the regulations governing the handling and transportation of cattle from the districts infected with the Southern, Texas, or splenetic fever.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, this amendment was considered by the Senate last year. The particular amendment was voted down, but in its place there was offered an amendment wiping out the discrimination that now exists in the statute. I feel that that discrimination is a very great injustice to the other ports and other States than the State of Texas. I am not going to go into a long discussion of the amendment this afternoon, but I am not willing to abandon the subject entirely.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator? The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield. Mr. PAGE. I recall very distinctly the discussion had a year or two ago upon this matter, and I am certain that this amendment will not be adopted, if we have a quorum of the Senate present, without a good deal of discussion. I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry, as to whether this amendment is not open to a point of order. Would a point of order lie as against this amendment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator that I did not yield for the purpose of a point of order being made at this time.

I thought I yielded for a question.

Mr. PAGE. I will simply say that I am sure there will be decided opposition to the Senator's amendment, and I hope he will not take too much time if, after the discussion is all over, the amendment will be ruled out on a point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, When I take my seat the Senator will have the privilege of making the point of order, if he desires to do so. I do not intend to take a great deal of time in debating the question at this time, Mr. President, because I know that the Senate thoroughly understands the question, as it was debated only a year ago. I should like to discuss it to some extent this afternoon, but I find that my voice is in such a condition that I can not go on with the discussion, except to say this: Under the existing law this class of cattle are admitted into the Texas ports below the quarantine line. I can see no reason why they should not be admitted into the other ports below the quarantine line. That is the purpose of the amendment, and that is the reason why I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, Senators will recall that we had a very thorough discussion of this proposition when the Agricultural appropriation bill was before the Senate during the last session. The Senate decided overwhelmingly against this amendment. It was suggested, in the course of debate, that inasmuch as we were appropriating hundreds of thousands of dollars in order to destroy the cattle tick, we ought not to permit the unqualified admission of tick-infested cattle through all our ports on the southern coast. I do not believe that it would be good policy to adopt this amendment, and I make the point of order that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to the fact that in offering an amendment yesterday to the appropriation bill, on page 14, line 4, I omitted to change the aggregate by the amount that was added by my amendment. My attention was called to the matter this morning by the department. If it is essential, as perhaps it is, that we increase the amount from $262,580 to $277,580, on page 14, line 4, I propose that amendment

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will be authorized to correct all totals.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, as a matter of information, I should like to inquire of the Chair if such a course is necessary, because it affects other items.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The ruling of the Chair is to the effect that when the general sum has been increased by these appropriations the Secretary will be authorized to correct the totals. The VICE PRESIDENT. That does not apply in this case. It will be necessary for the Senator from Vermont to move to amend in this case. Mr. PAGE. I think it is necessary, Mr. President, and I hope the amendment will be agreed to. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the

Mr. PHELAN. I ask at the same time that the aggregate be increased where an appropriation was made for the plantintroduction station in Chico, Cal., by an amendment adopted yesterday afternoon. I move that as an amendment. It is germane at this time—that the aggregate also be increased.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont is before the Senate. The Secretary will state it. The Secretary. The Senator from Vermont moves to strike out of the amendment agreed to yesterday "$254,200," on page 14, line 4, and to insert "$269,200."

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I think the Secretary has made a mistake. As I understand, on line 4 of page 14 the amount provided for is $262,580; and I move to amend by striking out that sum and inserting $277,580.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that $254,200 was the aggregate, and therefore that it should be increased to $269,200. The total amount was $254,200; There had been a decrease. and the Secretary is correct in the figures he has now given.

Mr. PAGE. I accept the correction and make the motion to correspond.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now the Senator from California offers an amendment.

Mr. PHELAN. I move that the aggregate be increased following my amendment, which I will have before me in a moment, by $35,000, and ask that the Secretary be directed to make the change of the total.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not recall just now on just what page the amendment offered by the Senator from

The Secretary. At the bottom of page 82 there was inserted an amendment as follows:

For the purchase, preparation, and irrigation of not to exceed 150 acres of land at Chico. Butte County, Cal., the same to be an additional to the existing 80 acres now used as a plant-introduction field station, $35,000.

Mr. PHELAN. The motion, then, is that on line 11, page 84, the aggregate be increased on that account by $35,000. The Secretary. So that it will read "$139,500."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, before the amendment is agreed to, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee this was estimated for?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It was estimated for.

PHELAN. This item was estimated for and recommended by the department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is in the bill. We are doing nothing except correcting the total now. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Cali-

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I offer an amendment on page 23 of the bill, on line 13, after the word "straw," to insert "and hemp."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. On what page and line?

Mr. GRONNA. On page 23, line 13.

The Secretary. After the words "flax straw," on page 23, line 13, it is proposed to insert "and hemp.'

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, on page 26, line 20, I move to strike out "$139,180" and insert "$143,180"; and after the word "seeds," in line 23, I move to insert the amendment which I send to the desk,

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 26, line 20, it is proposed to strike out "$139,180" and to insert in lieu thereof "$143,180"; and after the word "seeds," in line 23, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That $4,000 of the sum appropriated in this section shall be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture in cooperative work in forage-crop investigations in the State of Washington east of the Cascade Mountains, to be used under the direction of the Office of Forage Crop Investigations of the Department of Agriculture in cooperation with the Washington State Experiment Station, and upon the condition that the said Washington State Experiment Station shall contribute an equal amount to be used in such work, together with the amount hereby specified, under the same direction and cooperation as herein indicated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which send to the desk

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to strike out all on page 68 after the figures "$68,500," in line 24, and, on page 69, all down to and including the word "Congress," in line 6, in the following words:

And the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe the form of the annual financial statement required under the above acts, ascertain whether the expenditures are in accordance with their provisions, coordinate the work of the Department of Agriculture with that of the State agricultural colleges and experiment stations in the lines authorized in said acts, and make report thereon to Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, this amendment covers the part of the section which requires the different agricultural universities or colleges of the several States to make certain reports. This part of the bill says:

And the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe the form of the annual financial statement required under the above acts, ascertain whether the expenditures are in accordance with their provisions, coordinate the work of the Department of Agriculture with that of the State agricultural colleges and experiment stations in the lines authorized in said acts, and make report thereon to Congress.

The acts referred to in the part that is proposed to be stricken out are those of May 8, 1914, and July 2, 1862, and they embrace two lines of appropriations—one, those contained in the Agricultural appropriation bill; the other, the appropriations provided under the Smith-Lever Act of May 8, 1914, to which reference is made.

Originally, and long before the Smith-Lever Act was framed or thought of, these agricultural colleges were endowed by certain appropriations or land grants from the Government. These colleges were all created under acts of the legislatures of the several States. At the time these land grants were made the Government found itself in the condition of possessing a very large quantity of land. The public domain was much larger than the public funds. Lands were granted not only to colleges but to very many private enterprises not connected with the educational purposes of the country at all. But the original act, as far back as 1862, known as the Morrill Act—that was the original one, as I remember—donated land from the public domain to the different States for the purpose of providing endownents for such colleges as should be created by the State and supported otherwise by State appropriations.

Under this act a great many universities or colleges were organized in the various States. All of them are State institumaintenance, or their endowment funds, from direct taxes imposed by the legislature. These colleges or universities have developed through the years. It is now something over half a century since the original act was passed. The total appropriations for the several States aggregate very many millions of dollars. For many years these institutions received no annual appropriations or help from the Government. They were de-pendent entirely upon appropriations of the legislature. All they had received was a land grant. At that time, as suggested, the Government had more land than it had money. It was quite willing to grant the public domain to any of the States or any department of the State government that would create these State institutions for the purpose of promoting the cause of general public education.

The grants were made. The Commissioner of the General Land Office here patented the land to the different States, and it was appropriated for the foundation of these colleges. leges are distinctly State institutions. The greater part of their funds are paid by the taxpayers of the several States. Of late years, following the developments in many other lines, certain appropriations have been made by Congress to promote certain lines of educational work. Being agricultural colleges in their beginning, these appropriations took the form of sums of money designed to promote agricultural-extension work. The original promotion of agriculture came from the different State universities or colleges that were founded either at or before the time the several land grants were made. I only allude to this for the purpose of showing that the initial impulse for the creation of these colleges came from the States, came from State taxes, came from the activities of departments of the State or from its public officers.

There is an ever-increasing tendency to grant money by the Government for very many lines of effort not connected especially with agriculture that are either entirely those relating to private life, or those relating exclusively to the activities of the

The land-grant act of 1882 was followed by the Hatch Act of 1887, which was an act to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States. The second Morrill Act of 1890 was a further application of a portion of the proceeds of public lands to the more complete endowment and support of the colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts.

The Adams Act of 1906 followed, which provided for an increased annual appropriation for agricultural experiment stations and regulating the expenditure thereof. This, in 1908, was somewhat developed and applied by what is commonly called the Nelson amendment provision of the act making appropriations for the United States Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and providing for the further endowment of agricultural colleges.

Matters remained in that condition until the Smith-Lever Act of 1914. The Smith-Lever Act makes appropriations entirely distinct from the appropriations in the Agricultural appropriation bill, so that agricultural colleges in the several States re-ceiving funds from the Government of this character were upon two different bases of legislation. Those in the Agricultural appropriation bill are dependent entirely upon the act of Congress at its successive sessions. The Smith-Lever Act is permanent in its character and is designed without further congressional action to provide funds for the different agricultural colleges or universities.

Originally the Government did not undertake to found universities or colleges. It was content to promote by the grant of lands, and later by the grant of funds out of the Public Treasury, the activities of the several States, leaving to the local officers of the State and to the discretion of the State legislatures the extent to which they would develop these different institutions. So the Government did not found nor did it furnish the initial point out of which grew agricultural colleges or universities. That initial energy came from the several States.

So I think I am correct in saying that at least when appropriations are granted by Congress they ought not to attach any condition which will tend to impair the usefulness of the colleges of agriculture which existed before they were taken under the kindly ministration of Congres

Congress itself has made no difficulties. It has been content in the main to provide the appropriations within their discretion that they thought would maintain or furnish endowments. Out of these acts of Congress in the earlier times no difficulties have arisen, no friction has been created, neither has there been any trouble in administering the funds.

The first difficulty grew from a departmental regulation. was in effect legislation by the Department of Agriculture. For tions. All of them draw the greater part of their funds for I instance, the title of the Adams Act provides for the further endowment of agricultural experiment stations and reads as fol-

To provide for an increased annual appropriation for agricultural experiment stations and regulating the expenditures thereof.

This act provides that the funds shall be paid upon the warrants of the Secretary of Agriculture, and that their administration should rest with that officer. It is confirmed by congressional enactment, approving the office legislation of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Agriculture which had grown up under the Hatch Act.

On the Hatch Act I wish to make some observations. This is the act of 1887 requiring experiment stations to make an annual report to the governor of the State and transmit a copy to the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury. This is the act of Congress to which I referred. It also pro-

That whenever it shall appear to the Secretary of the Treasury from the annual statement of receipts and expenditures of any of said stations that a portion of the preceding annual appropriation remains unex-pended, such amount shall be deducted from the next succeeding annual appropriation to such station.

The Secretary of the Treasury declined to accept the reports of the stations as prima facie evidence of expenditure, but required a certification from the Secretary of Agriculture, whereupon there was established in the Department of Agriculture an "Office of Experiment Stations." It was the duty of that office to send a representative actually to visit each station, inquire into its expenditures, and disallow any vouchers which in the opinion of the visiting officer failed to come within the provisions of the law.

This was the beginning of a system of oversight which has been gradually extended and intensified with each succeeding This was office legislation. It was a departappropriation. mental ruling in the first place. It was not found in any act of Congress preceding. It was an addition upon the rules of the department to the condition surrounding the expenditure of the funds provided by Congress that made no such restriction upon the appropriation.

The Office of Experiment Stations continued. It followed the inevitable law of accretion in public pay rolls, that when by departmental action or by legislation a place is once created, a pay roll is once called into existence, it is endowed with the elements of immortality. The Office of Experiment Stations created by an act of the department has continued from that day to this, I think largely without proper supervision or observation by Congress. It was created in the covert and insidious situation in appropriation bills until it has become a fixed institution.

The Office of Experiment Station then called the attention of the various States to the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture was by the Adams Act definitely charged with the management of experiment station funds.

Mr. President, when the first agricultural experiment station was built in the Union there was not an officer in the Department of Agriculture who would have recognized or known what it was unless he had been led up to it blindfolded and a label put on and his blindfold taken off suddenly and he had been told to read it. In keeping with all those overgrown and swollen departmental functions when it once gets its nose in the basket it proceeds to appropriate the entire bakeshop. We raised corn in Indiana and Illinois before the department knew a nubbin of corn from a head of sorghum. And still it was the intention of Congress and the Secretary of Agriculture that the increase should be expended with greater restrictions than those surrounding the original fund, an intention that evidently lay with the Secretary of Agriculture and his advisers rather than with Congress.

The Hatch money, for instance, was available to conduct original researches or verify experiments. The Adams Act omitted the clause "or to verify experiments," but no specific restrictions were named. Under the wording of that act, indeed the Hatch funds were included with the Adams, and hence subject to some restriction, although the Adams Act otherwise is less restrictive than the Hatch Act.

I am talking about the Office of Experiment Stations that Congress never created. It was created by a ruling of the department some years ago, and then by a mere touch of a stenographer's fingers to the keyboard of the typewriter in the budget made up in that department it was suggested to Congress and came in here and became recognized by Congress in items or in appropriation bills, although originally it was a creation of the department and not of Congress experiment stations would cease to exist if this was wiped out of the Department of Agriculture. As a matter of fact every department in every agricultural university in the country would conduct its business as profitably to the world to-day and as efficiently in the administration of funds if the Office of Experiment Stations were entirely abolished in the Department of Agriculture.

The Office of Experiment Stations further pointed out that it would be entirely possible to go on as before, the stations using the funds as they might deem wise, leaving to the representative of the Secretary of Agriculture at the end of the year the task of determining whether or not all the expenditures had been within the limitations of the law. However, as the new money was to be expended much more rigorously than the old, it was pointed out that funds would be saved and irritation avoided if the stations and the offices at Washington could agree in ad-Accordingly, vance as to how the new funds were to be used. the Department of Agriculture proposed the "project system for the expenditure of the additional endowment to the State stations, and the funds have been so administered for 10 years. Thus did the act of auditing become essentially one of joint management.

The project system was an offspring of the fertile brain of this experimental stations department, an office which was created, as I have stated, by the department here.

Under the "project system" the State suggests the line or lines of investigation. It may be approved or disapproved by the office at Washington, which may suggest modifications, though it does not originate plans. As matters are operating now, station expenditures under Adams funds are not approved unless in furtherance of definite projects agreed upon in advance.

This was the condition of affairs between the States and the Federal Department of Agriculture in 1914, when the Smith-Lever bill was passed, appropriating funds to the different States for demonstration work in agriculture and home economics, with the proviso that the States, either from public or private sources, should duplicate the Federal appropriation.

Let me quote from the Smith-Lever Act of May 8, 1914: Sec. 2. That cooperative agricultural extension work shall consist of the giving of instruction and practical demonstrations in agriculture and home economics to persons not attending or resident in said colleges in the several communities and imparting to such persons information on said subjects through field demonstrations, publications, and otherwise, and this work shall be carried on in such manner as may be mutually agreed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture and the State agricultural college or colleges receiving the benefits of this act.

Who doubts but that is intended to operate by the mutual agreement of the States and the Federal authorities acting in the department here?

In section 3 it is provided:

That before the funds herein appropriated shall become available to any college for any fiscal year plans for the work to be carried on under this act shall be submitted by the proper officials of each college and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Section 4 provides, and this is a direct appropriation of money-

That the sums hereby appropriated for extension work shall be paid in equal semiannual payments on the 1st day of January and July of each year by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the warrant of the Secretary of Agriculture, out of the Treasury of the United States, to the treasurer or other officer of the State duly authorized by the laws of the State to receive the same; and such officer shall be required to report to the Secretary of Agriculture, on or before the 1st day of September of each year, a detailed statement of the amount so received during the previous fiscal year, and of its disbursement, on forms prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

This is a detailed statement which, in effect, is an account current for the expenditures of that year or for the semiannual period provided.

In section 5 it is provided that-

It shall be the duty of each of said colleges annually, on or before the 1st day of January, to make to the governor of the State in which it is located a full and detailed report of its operations in the direction of extension work as defined in this act, including a detailed statement of receipts and expenditures from all sources for this purpose, a copy of which report shall be sent to the Secretary of Agriculture and to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

And section 6 provides:

and on or before the 1st day of July in each year after the passage of this act the Secretary of Agriculture shall ascertain and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury as to each State whether it is entitled to receive its share of the annual appropriation for coperative agricultural extension work under this act, and the amount which it is entitled to receive.

These are the provisions under a specific act of Congress and govern the methods of receiving and expending the funds mentioned in the act.

At this time I shall not comment upon the procedure under the Smith-Lever Act. It is only with the amendment that I You will find the Office of Experiment Stations now referred to as a fixed institution. It is just like every other pay roll have proposed here by striking out the parts of the section that has ever been created. They tell you that agricultural mentioned in the agricultural appropriation bill that I am concerned. The part that I propose to strike out in the amendment is one that gives the Secretary of Agriculture entire power over the expenditure of these funds. It is that which has created the difficulty of which I now proceed to speak.

The Department of Agriculture, for instance, construes the word "plans" to mean projects, but even so there is nothing in this act that enables that department to go further in the administration of this fund than it had already gone for years in the administration of the Adams fund. It is in no sense a cooperative measure, and any disposition on the part of the Department of Agriculture to exercise any additional control over the States in the expenditure of Federal funds on account of the Smith-Lever Act is entirely without a legal basis, because all these appropriations in the Agricultural appropriation bill are covered by the provisions of the Smith-Lever Act, and it is sought by such a provision to be introduced here to make it so.

The facts are that the Smith-Lever bill, and I refer to that much of it, was agreed to at a meeting of the American Association of Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations as a cooperative measure in order that the Department of Agriculture might have an outlet to the people through the various State colleges, the understanding at that time being that direct appropriations to the Department of Agriculture for the purpose of local demonstration work should be abolished. American Association of Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations is the national council of all the State insti-tutions. At a meeting of this association for the purpose of discussing the "Relations between the Federal Department of Agriculture and the agricultural colleges and experiment stations," Dr. Jordan of New York, a member of the executive committee specifically asked Dr. Galloway, Assistant Secre-tary of Agriculture at that time and I think still in the Department, and representing the Department of Agriculture for the purposes of the discussion, whether it was the intention of the Department of Agriculture to continue its farm demonstration work in case the Lever bill, then under discussion, should pass Congress. Dr. Galloway replied unequivocably that it was not the intention of the department to continue the farm demonstration work on the then present basis, if the Lever bill should pass. The Assistant Secretary vouchsafed the opinion that the farm demonstration service had grown up largely through the demands of Congressmen and likened their attitude in this quarter to that which made impossible the discontinuance of the free-seed distribution which the department and the public had so long desired. This question and answer were not included in the official report of the pro-ceedings of the association, but they were vouched for by our Dr. Coffey, who heard them.

However, when the legislation came out of Congress the bill provided, "That pending the inauguration and development of the cooperative extension work herein authorized nothing in this act shall be construed to discontinue either the farm-management work or the farmers' cooperative demonstration work as now conducted by the Bureau of Plant Industry of the Department of Agriculture." Not only did the Smith-Lever Act thus guarantee the continuance of the independent work of the Department of Agriculture, in plain violation of the answer of the Assistant Secretary, but subsequent acts have appropriated additional funds for increasing its support, though the title of the Smith-Lever Act was left "cooperative."

My contention is that the Smith-Lever Act is not "cooperative" in any proper sense of the term. Neither is it safe or expedient to so consider it or to admit that the Department of Agriculture has any peculiar jurisdiction over the expenditure of these funds beyond that which it exercises over the Adams fund

Our cooperative relations with the Department of Agriculture are still further confused by reason of this enlarged appropriation to the Department of Agriculture for the same kind of work provided for in the Smith-Lever Act.

Under the rulings of the department, none of its funds will be expended in any State except under definite cooperative agreements with the college of that State. Under such agreement, however, the department insists upon paying a portion of the salary of the field men; then, instead of dealing with the institution in the State, the college, the university, it deals with the individuals direct, and in at least one case requires daily reports to Washington from a regularly elected member of the University faculty.

The original purpose when Congress began to make these appropriations, or when the land grants were had, was not for a department in Washington to begin detail work and to reach the individuals in the State in these experiment stations or in any of the extension work in the agricultural departments of the State colleges; but it was intended to act through the universities themselves. The department here, upon rulings of its own and by a gradual system of encroachment, has long since departed from that purpose. It now deals directly with the individual; it has enlarged the work until the department is now dealing with the general public outside of the agency of the State college or university. It is in a sense a rival, it is attempting to build up a separate department of work. If persevered in, it will either become an active competitor or will ultimately absorb and destroy the State institutions.

The Federal authorities have claimed a general right to exercise control over the expenditure of appropriations upon the theory that Federal appropriations are gifts to the States. This is an argument, however, that I sometimes fail to see the force of. If they were gifts to the States either as land grants or appropriations, then follow the original purpose, and let them be administered by the agricultural colleges that the Government did not and could not create in the beginning. It left it to the instrumentalities created by the State to do this. For instance, take my own State of Illinois; and I think we pay a fair share of the public taxes to the Government. Our agricultural values of land and our production rank fairly respectably in the 48 States of the Union. We developed agricultural experiment stations and placed an agricultural department by State legislation in the university of that State at Champaign years ago. We have made practical farmers. They are not professors; they are not men who go and study in a college or a university and then go out and call themselves agriculturists; but the graduates of that department are farmers and stock

In the State of Illinois, for instance, we receive from all Federal sources direct appropriations of three items:

First. For the endowment of teaching in agriculture and the mechanic arts—the Morrill and Nelson funds, the Nelson fund being the later act, and these two acts being the original acts—we receive annually $50,000.

Second. For investigations in agriculture, the Hatch and Adams funds, annually $30,000.

Third. For demonstration work in agriculture and home economics, under the Smith-Lever fund of 1916-17, $58,184.03. We received a total of $138,184.03 for last year.

Now, I wish to hurry along and not take up any more space or time than is indispensably necessary; but I summarize in this way:

That the United States Department of Agriculture is more and more dominating the work of the State universities and controlling the men of the State universities. It is now engaged in trying to reorganize the agricultural colleges in the West and disrupting the internal relations of the colleges themselves. It is drifting away more and more from the original policy of research and development in large matters, and going over into the neighborhood of individual uplift work.

The Department of Agriculture here seems to feel that it has the American farmer and his whole family on its hands. The system that is growing up is becoming more bureaucratic every year; it is intolerable, and many of its 16,000 employees that are scattered all over this country are incompetent. Some of them actually would make the poorest farmer in my State blush if they arose on the platform and undertook to expound their agricultural knowledge in the presence of an audience. They know more about ward politics in some place or township activities and primaries than they do about pumpkins, cattle, hogs, corn, and hominy.

That does not belong, Mr. President, to this administration; it belongs to its predecessor. The disgraceful incompetency of Government experts sent out over the country is enough to condemn the system. A farmer who did not know more than the agricultural expert from the department here does would starve to death the first 12 months he undertook to live on a farm. He would drown in the swill pail or be gored by an infuriated bull the first time he went out in the cattle yard. [Laughter.] These experts know no more, Mr. President, about marking a pig than they know of the hieroglyphics on the monuments of Egypt; still, they are Government experts, and they have been going out from Washington for the past 10 or 15 years. They could not tell hard cider from branch water. [Laughter.] tell hard cider from branch water. [Laughter.]

There is a reason for it. The salaries are too small to invite men of any ability. Experts! They do not know the black soil in the corn belt of Illinois from a tar bucket that used to hang under their ancestor's wagon when he moved out from the Allegheny Mountains 70 years ago. [Laughter.] Analyze soil! Tell us about the plant industry! It is a jest, and an expensive jest at that, Mr. President.

Of course the salaries are small. With 16,000 employees swarming about over the country, you can not pay them large salaries, because it would subdivide the fund too much and require to increase the salaries an appropriation that would go beyond the discretion of Congress. The conditions of work are too mechanical, under ironclad instructions from the de-The conditions of work partment here, to be attractive to men of the highest ability.

If they do not know any more in the future than they knew about the foot-and-mouth disease a year and a half or so ago, what encouragement, Mr. President, is there to hope that they can tell us how to exterminate ragweeds or the boll weevil or drive chinch bugs out of the country or stop the curculios from climbing the apple trees? Why, one of the experts who was here testifying—I can get his evidence from the printed hearings of the Committee on Agriculture-asked if a Holstein cow was beef cattle. He was an agricultural expert telling the farmers in my section of the country how to raise dairy and beef cattle, an industry in which they have been engaged for a half century. He would not know a Holstein cow from a Brahman priest in a Hindu temple. [Laughter.] If he should meet one face to face, he would think it was a sacred animal. He would not know a Guernsey. Why, bless my life, if he should see one he would not know it from the white bull and sacred heifer of ancient Egypt. [Laughter.] Still he is an expert. Anybody is an expert here who can get on the pay woll and that has been true for years. A Government employee roll, and that has been true for years. A Government employee, when he got out into the country where I used to farm, never had cast about him any peculiar sanctity growing out of the fact that he had a Government job. We put him out into the field and found out whether he knew a ragweed from a cabbage, and some of them hardly knew that.

There is no general basis either for the cooperation between the United States Department of Agriculture and the State in-The work of the department ought to be, as it was in the beginning, devoted to research and regulation in matters of large scientific or geographical import. The detail work must be left to the State agricultural universities, to the men who know, the men whose sons graduate from the agricultural colleges and become farmers living by the sweat of their faces and not by merely a sharpening of their wits in a college.

If these tendencies are not checked, Mr. President, one of two things will happen. Either the larger States will cease to avail themselves of these appropriations, or in the smaller States the department, and ultimately the Government, will absorb the agricultural universities, and they will become in fact Government institutions, a part of the Government's educational system. There is no remedy if matters proceed to their ultimate conclusion as they are now proceeding.

Furthermore, there is friction. The board of regents or the trustees of my own State university have men on their pay roll whose compensation comes from appropriations of the State legislature. Only $138,000 comes to the entire State from the Federal Treasury, while our appropriations mount up into the millions at every biennial session of our legislature. have been absent from the State so much of late I do not know what the amount now is annually, but I presume that it is not much short of $3,000,000. The $138,000 contributed by the Federal Government is a mere bagatelle; it is only a drop in the bucket. If this friction continues, if one set of orders comes from the department here to men on the pay roll-the farm demonstrators and the live-stock experts who have been raised on a farm and who know what they are doing and have been put there for their fitness-if they are to be directed by the head of a department or some autocratic head of a bureau in Washington, it will be a very short time until that State and other States I know of will cease to take the money out of the Public Treasury. The price is too great. The State instrumentality that we have created in years past and that we have developed since 1862 with millions of dollars out of our State treasury will decline to receive the pittance doled out at the Capitol or at the Treasury Department as the price of surrendering the control of the university.

I have no superstitious reverence merely for the rights of a State, but I know just as well as my colleagues do that there are certain local inherent reserved rights in the Ctate that this Government never ought directly or indirectly to invade,

The invasion provided for by the provision I seek to strike out is of that insidious character more dangerous than a direct attack. I believe in a strong local self-government in all matters concerning the reserved rights of the States. Certainly the educational system of a State is something peculiarly within its own powers. Search the Constitution of this country and you will find nothing in it in direct terms, no granted power, for creating educational systems or instrumentalities, except as they may be connected with the promotion of agriculture and under the general-welfare clause of the Constitution. These attacks are like hundreds of others. They are ceaseless in their operation. Their erosions are constant from year to year. There is a constant advance on the part of every department.

I say to the majority side of this Chamber that not one of you has a greater pride in the activities of his State than I have I think I know where the limitations are, and I am as jealous of their invasion by the Government, and especially the autocratic action of bureaus and departments, as any Senator in this body. All of my activities in public life up to the time I came here were occupied in the affairs of a large State, with millions of inhabitants, with the second largest city on the Western Hemisphere within its borders, with the most expensive land on the continent, and with men who from their earliest ancestry have been farmers, coming from Virginia, Kentucky, Indiana, and from east of the Allegheny Mountains. We are half-and-half Southern people and half-and-half New Englanders, with a fair sprinkling from the border States, one of which lies immediately across our line. I never go to the Ohio River without seeing the Kentucky shore. Our people have the same impulses and the same ambitions and local pride in holding their State affairs intact from these insidious assaults by the National Government that you have.

I have been reading to some extent from the information given me by the College of Agriculture of the State of Illinois. More than 6,000 pupils are in that institution, and many thousands of its graduates are found in this Republic. sprinkled the far West, they have gone over the Great Divide, and are found on the coast. These men are trained agriculturists. I never did like that word. When they are directing the actual operations of the soil, I prefer to call them "farmers, and that is what they are-farmers and stock raisers. The dean of this college, who has been there for many years, calls attention to the intolerable system that has grown up. There are men who are members of that faculty paid out of the appropriations by the State, with a small contribution given by the General Government: but the General Government issues orders by the department here and directs them to make daily reports of their operations. It would take one-half the time of a professor to do

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator let me ask him a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Upon what legal authority do they issue such orders? Under what statute can that be done?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is merely a departmental ruling, I will say to the Senator. They will that that shall be done. It would take nearly half the time of the professor himself to make out the report.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am aware of no statute that justifies any such direction-

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. By that department; and, if they do it, I think they should be called down for it and their action

Mr. SHERMAN. I am very glad to hear the Senator say so. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will notice, in the extension-work bill we have carefully guarded the rights of the colleges. Their plans are to be submitted, and the department here is to agree upon their general plans.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is all right.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But the execution of the demonstration work is solely through agents selected by the colleges of Mr. SHERMAN. That is my understanding, and has been since I began to study the question some years ago. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I helped draw the bill, and carefully guarded, as I thought, the execution of all work by State agents, to avoid friction with men in Washington who might not comprehend local conditions.

Mr. SHERMAN. Without going more into detail, I will refer to the case of one man who has been on the faculty in Illinois for many years, and is engaged in the agricultural-extension work, going out for days and weeks at a time, through all kinds of weather, to the point where the stations are located that the State built many years ago, keeping them up with the times from year to year. He goes there. He is paid a small part of the expense involved out of funds furnished by the Government. The large part of the expense, of course, as the Senator understands, is paid from State appropriations. He is now directed by an order from the department to make daily reports of his operations in Illinois as a member of this faculty. The faculty itself, acting through its board of trustees, has directed him not

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to suggest that if he will call the attention of the Secretary of Agriculture to any such arbitrary direction by the head of a bureau in the department, I am sure the Secretary will promptly give relief to the officer.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am very glad to hear it. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I can not think it possible that that is approved by the Secretary.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall be very glad to have the relief as promptly as possible, to avoid friction. If it is cooperation, I shall be very glad to do anything within my power-

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is only cooperation. execution, so far as the agricultural-extension work is concerned, is under the direction of the college, and not under the direction of the department here.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. After the plans have been agreed upon, it is not cooperation; it is entire authority in the college. Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

RELATIONS WITH GERMANY.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, with the consent of the Senator from Illinois-

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. SAULSBURY (continuing). And of the acting chairman of the committee

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I shall have to object to any extraneous matter being inserted in the Record at this time. It is against the rules of the Senate. We have been here all day. We will be through with this bill, I hope, in a few minutes, and we will have ample time then for these other atters. If I yield to one Senator, others will come in.
Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I rise to—The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois

yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will yield if I do not lose the floor. Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois is perfectly willing to yield to me, but I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to state that I hold in my hand a telegram just received from the speaker and chief clerk of the House of just received from the speaker and chief clerk of the House of Representatives of the State of Delaware, giving a copy of a telegram they have sent to the President of the United States pledging the loyalty of all the people of Delaware, without regard to party, to the action of the President in severing diplomatic relations with Germany and in any eventuality.

I think that a matter of this kind, showing the action of a sovereign State, where a resolution was passed unanimously by both houses, one house being controlled by Democrats, the other house by republicans, is a matter of such high privilege that it should be stated at the first opportunity in the Senate of the United States of the United States.

Mr. JAMES. Let the telegram be read.
Mr. SAULSBURY. May I have the telegram printed?
The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. JAMES. It ought to be read, too.

The telegram is as follows:

DOVER. DEL., February 8, 1917.

WILLARD SAULSBURY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:
To the President of the United States, Washington:

The General Assembly of the State of Delaware, now in session, has unanimously passed a joint resolution commending you in your action severing diplomatic relations with the German Empire and pledging our loyal support both now and in any eventuality.

W. H. Poore,

Chief Clerk House of Representatives.

Hervey P. Hall,
Speaker of Delaware House of Representatives. AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19359) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, we certainly can take a moment for a message of that kind from the legislative authority

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, we certainly can take a moment for a message of that kind from the legislative authority of a State.

The language that I fear in the provision that I seek to strike out is this:

The Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe the form of the annual financial statement required under the above acts, ascertain whether the expenditures are in accordance with their provisions.

Now, while it says "the Secretary of Agriculture," in reality the Secretary of Agriculture acts here purely formally. In reality it is the head of a bureau, either the head of the Office of Experiment Stations or the director of the Bureau of Plant Industry or some other of the various subdivisions made by the department of its various lines of work. So, if the officer or the professor of the faculty, acting under the direction of the board of trustees of the State institution shall refuse to comply with the making of the daily reports that are required by some head of a bureau here, the bureau head would insert in the report at the end of the year a finding that the university has not complied with the provisions of the law.

I shall be very glad to adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia, and call the attention of the head of this department, the Secretary of Agriculture, to this ruling which has been made, which I think is not only calculated to hinder the usefulness of the force, but to create friction. I know it has already done so. The dean of the agricultural university was here and expressed himself regarding it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator the exact words that he desires to strike out.

Mr. SHERMAN. Beginning on page 68, line 24, after the figures "$68,500."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let me ask the Senator if he is not wrong—if he really wants to strike out that much. Merely to require the Secretary of Agriculture to ascertain whether the expenditures are in accordance with the provisions of the acts, and coordinate the work of the Department of Agriculture with that of the State agricultural colleges and State experiment stations, and make report to Congress, would not be objectionable. That would give him no authority to do anything locally except to get information and to coordinate his work with what the college of agriculture is doing; not to control the college of agriculture, but to make his work their work. If we should just strike out after the word "shall the words "prescribe the form of the annual financial statement required under the above acts "——

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the Senator is right.
Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If we should strike out that language, we would take everything from this that gives him any power whatever; and so far as I am concerned I will join the Senator in the suggestion that those words be stricken out.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the Senator is correct. "The annual financial statement" is the language used in the Smith-Lever Act, and I think it refers to that. I think if it could be stricken out in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator, that will answer the purpose intended.

The Secretary. After the word "shall," in line 25, going down to and including the word "acts," in line 1, page 69.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; I will modify the amendment accordingly, Mr. President.

The Secretary. On page 68, beginning with the word "prescribe," in line 25, it is proposed to strike out the words "prescribe," in line 25, it is proposed to strike out the words "prescribe the form of the annual financial statement required under the above acts," and the comma.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to insert in the Congressional RECORD, without reading, a statement of Eugene Davenport, dean of the agricultural college of the University of Illinois; also a letter from Francis G. Blair, the superintendent of public instruction of the State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that may be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The matter referred to is as follows:

The United States Department of Agriculture is more and more dominating the work and the men of the State institutions.

It is attempting to reorganize the agricultural colleges in ways that disrupt their internal relations.

It is itself drifting more and more away from its original policy of research and development in large matters, and going over into neighborhood and individual uplift work. It seems to feel that it has the American farmer and his family on its hands.

Its bureaucratic system is intolerable and many of its 16,000 employees incompetent. The salaries are too small and the conditions of work too mechanical to be attractive to men of the highest ability.

No general basis for real cooperation between the United States Department of Agriculture and the State institutions exists. The work of the department should be, as it was in the beginning, research and regulation in matters of large scientific or geographical import. The States deal with teaching and with research in matters local.

DISCUSSION OF FEDERAL LEGISLATION ENDOWING EDUCATION, RESEARCH, AND DEMONSTRATION WORK IN THE SEVERAL STATES OF THE UNION, WITH SPECIAL REFERENCE TO ADMINISTRATIVE CONTROL.

4. The Adams Act of 1906: "An act to provide for an increased annual appropriation for agricultural experiment stations and regulating the expenditure thereof."

5. The Nelson amendment of 1908: "Provisions of act making appropriations for the United States Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, for the further endowment of agricultural colleges."

6. The Smith Lever Act of 1914, "The Act of the Smith Lever Act of 1914,"

6. The Smith-Lever Act of 1914: "An act to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States," etc.

OBJECTS OF THE SEVERAL ACTS.

The purpose of the land-grant act was clearly to establish a new kind of college. The Hatch Act, 25 years later, was designed to obtain more reliable scientific information than the art of agriculture had afforded. The second Morrill Act, with the Nelson amendment, was for the purpose of further endowing the colleges, and the Adams Act for strengthening the experiment stations, while the Smith-Lever Act was designed to reach the farmer on his farm and the housekeeper in her home by means of actual demonstration.

NATURE OF THE APPROPRIATION.

Under the land-grant act of 1862, 30,000 acres of public land for each Senator and Representative then in Congress were "granted to the several States," and while later phraseology varies to some extent, in every case the funds are appropriated directly to the States, to be expended for the purposes recited in the acts; and, to quote the Hatch Act, "having due regard to the varying conditions and needs of the respective States and Territories." There is no question of the intent of Congress to appropriate the funds directly to the States, to be managed by boards of control appointed by the States.

It is the purpose of this discussion to show how the State institutions, endowed by Federal funds but largely supported by the States, have come more and more under the dominance of the Department of Agriculture, until we are near violating the principle laid down in the Hatch Act, "that nothing in the act shall be construed to impair or modify the legal relation existing between any of the said colleges and the government of the States and Territories in which they are respectively located."

HOW THE SITUATION DEVELOPED.

The Hatch Act of 1887 required experiment stations to make an annual report to the governor of the State and to transmit a copy to the Secretary of Agriculture and to the Secretary of the Treasury. It also provided (sec. 6) "that whenever it shall appear to the Secretary of the Treasury from the annual statement of receipts and expenditures of any of said stations that a portion of the preceding annual appropriation remains unexpended, such amount shall be deducted from the next succeeding annual appropriation to such station." etc.

annual appropriation remains unexpended, such amount shall be deducted from the next succeeding annual appropriation to such station," etc.

The Secretary of the Treasury declined to accept the reports of the stations as prima facie evidence of expenditure, but required a certification from the Secretary of Agriculture (office legislation). Whereupon there was established in the Department of Agriculture an "Office of Experiment Stations."

The duty of that office was to send a representative actually to visite each station, inquire into its expenditure and disallow any vouchers which, in the opinion of the visiting officer, falled to come within the provisions of the law. Here was the beginning of a system of oversight which has been gradually extended and intensified with each succeeding endowment.

For example, the title of the Adams Act, passed nine years later for the further endowment of the agricultural experiment stations, reads as follows: "To provide for an increased annual appropriation for agricultural experiment stations and regulating the expenditure thereof." This act provides that the funds shall be paid "upon the warrant of the Secretary of Agriculture"; and that their administration should rest with that officer, thus confirming by congressional enactment the office legislation of the Secretaries of the Treasury and of Agriculture which had grown up under the Hatch Act.

The Office of Experiment Stations then called the attention of the various States to the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture was by the Adams Act definitely charged with the management of experiment station funds; and that it was the intention of Congress and of the Secretary of Agriculture that the increase should be expended with greater restrictions than these surrounding the original fund, an intention that evidently lay with the Secretary of Agriculture and his advisers rather than with Congress. The Hatch money was available "to conduct original researches or verify experiments, etc." The Adams Act onitted the clause were included with the Adams and hence subject to the same restriction, though the Adams Act is otherwise less restrictive than is the Hatch Act.

The Office of Experiment Stations further pointed out that it would be entirely possible to go on as before, the stations using the funds as they might deem wise, leaving to the representative of the Secretary of Agriculture at the end of the year the task of determining whether or not all the expenditures had been within the limitations of the law. However, as the new money was to be expended much more rigorously than the old, it was pointed out that funds would be saved and irritation avoided if the stations and the offices at Washington could agree in advance as to how the new funds were to be used. Accordingly, the Department of Agriculture proposed the "project system" for the expenditure of the additional endowment to the State stations; and the funds have been so administered for 10 years. Thus did the act of auditing become essentially one of joint management.

Under the "project system" the State suggests the line or lines of investigation. It may be approved or disapproved by the office at Washington, which may suggest modifications, though it does not originate plans. As matters are operating now, station expenditures under Adams funds are not approved unless in furtherance of definite projects agreed upon in advance.

This was the condition of affairs between the States and the Federal Department of Agriculture in 1914, when the Smith-Lever bill was passed, appropriating funds to the different States for demonstration work in agriculture and home economics, with the proviso that the States, either from public or private sources, should duplicate the Federal appropriations.

SMITH-LEVER WORK DECLARED COOPERATIVE.

SMITH-LEVER WORK DECLARED COOPERATIVE.

This Smith-Lever Act goes one step further in Federal control by declaring in the title that the work is to be "cooperative" between the agricultural colleges in the several States and the United States Department of Agriculture, and the language of the act specifically provides that "this work shall be carried on in such manner as may be mutually agreed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture and the State agricultural college or colleges receiping the benefits of this act."

However, this work is not properly "cooperative" as declared in the title, because, as in all the acts, the appropriation is direct to the States; the Department of Agriculture gets none of the appropriation neither can it make suggestions as to its expenditure, because the act specifically provides "that before the funds herein appropriated shall become available to any college for any fiscal year plans for the work to be carried on under this act shall be submitted by the proper officials of each college and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture."

The Department of Agriculture construes the word "plans" to mean "projects"; but even so there is nothing in this act that enables that department to go further in the administration of this fund than it had already gone for years in the administration of the Adams fund. It is in no sense a cooperative measure, and any disposition on the part of the Department of Agriculture to exercise any additional control over the States in the expenditure of Federal funds on account of the Smith-Lever Act is entirely without legal basis.

The facts are that the Smith-Lever bill was agreed to at a meeting of the American Association of Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations as a cooperative measure in order that the Department of Agriculture for the purpose of local demonstration work should be abolished.

(The American Association of Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations is the national council of all the State institutions. At a meeting of this association for the purpose of discussing the "Relations between the Federal Department of Agriculture for the purpose of local demonstration work should be abolished.

(The American Association of Agriculture, and the agricultural colleges and ex of the associ and answer were not included in the official reports of the proceedings of the association, but they are vouched for by our Dr. Coffey, who heard them.)

This was in line with the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture uttered at that time (quoted by Collier's, October 25) that "the State is the smallest unit with which the Federal Government should be required to deal." (At the time this bill was drawn up the Secretary of Agriculture was in favor of discontinuing the demonstration work them conducted by the department, but has since changed his opinion and has advocated an increase. See hearings, 1916, pp. 1662–1669.)

However, when the legislation came out of Congress the bill provided "that, pending the inauguration and development of the cooperative extension work herein authorized, nothing in this act shall be construed to discontinue either the farm-management work or the farmers' cooperative demonstration work as now conducted by the Bureau of Plant Industry of the Department of Agriculture." (The obvious intention of Congress to ultimately discontinue the direct appropriations for demonstration work conducted by the department has evidently been changed, through the influence of the Department of Agriculture, and the amount increased by $100,000.) Not only did the Smith-Lever Act thus guarantee the continuance of the independent work of the Department of Agriculture, in plain violation of the answer of the Assistant Secretary, but subsequent acts have appropriated additional funds for increasing its support, though the title of the Smith-Lever Act was left "cooperative."

My contention is that the Smith-Lever Act is not "cooperative" in any proper sense of the term. Neither is it safe or expedient to so consider it or to admit that the Department of Agriculture has any peculiar jurisdiction over the expenditure of these funds beyond that which it exercises over the Adams fund.

Our cooperative relations with the Department of Agriculture are still further confused by reason of this enlarged appropriati

HOW THE ACCOUNT STANDS WITH ILLINOIS.

The total appropriation to the Department of Agriculture is approximately $25,000,000 annually. In addition to this amount there are the following appropriations from Federal funds: Morrill and Nelson funds, $2,400,000; Hatch and Adams, $1,440,000; Smith-Lever (1916-17), $1,580,000; meat inspection, $3,000,000; printing funds, $600,000; a total of approximately $34,000,000 for agricultural purposes.

The population of the State of Illinois is substantially one-sixteenth of that of the United States, and I estimate the amount of money contributed by the citizens of Illinois to congressional appropriations on account of agriculture at approximately $2,120,000 annually.

Of this amount only the $138,184,03 come back to the State—all of which means that nearly $2,000,000 of Illinois money is every year invested to the activities of the Department of Agriculture.

This is four times what the State is paying for its agricultural college and experiment station, and more than it is putting into the entire University of Illinois, except for its building enterprises. All the funds here under discussion therefore come directly from the State of Illinois, and any attempt at domination from the Federal department can not be defended upon the argument of an outside appropriation.

Furthermore, to consider the Smith-Lever work as cooperative leads to an absurdity, because the act requires of the States a full offset to the Federal appropriation, and to put these State funds also under Federal control is clearly offensive to the State. It is especially true in the case of this particular fund because all the people of Illinois contribute by indirect taxation, while the distribution is only in proportion to the agricultural population, which in this State, with a city like Chicago, is relatively small. In this deal we put up three dollars to get one.

My criticisms of the Department of Agriculture in its relations to My criticisms of the Department of Agriculture in its relations to the States are as follows:

1. That through office legislation in part made statutory by successive acts of Congress the Department of Agriculture is establishing a gradually increasing supervision over the legitimate and legal activities of the State institutions intended to be independently controlled by State boards of trustees the State institutions intended to be independently controlled by State boards of trustees.

2. That its system of administration is bureaucratic to a degree, laying upon busy men a large amount of paper duties having reference not so much to their work as to the convenience of administration and the amassing in Washington of data that can be readily put into form to lay before Congress, even though but a small amount of the salary of these men is paid from department funds.

3. That, under the system, regularly appointed members of the faculty of the University of Illinois (for example, Mr. Greene) are only partially administered through the organization of the university, but are required to make daily reports to Washington because a portion of their salary comes from department funds. (For the coming year the department has undertaken to require a complete list of office help employed under Smith-Lever funds—a request which I have refused to meet.)

4. That a former Secretary of Agriculture took the liberty of criticizing, before a committee of Congress, one of the principal State experiment stations supported by local funds (New York), and announced his intention of ultimately controlling the policy of the State institutions. (See Hearings before Committee on Agriculture, 1904, pp. 424-428.)

5. That the department is building up an extensive system of local dynamization environments and the principal State everythe environments.

his intention of ultimately controlling the policy of the State institutions. (See Hearings before Committee on Agriculture, 1904, pp. 424-428.)

5. That the department is building up an extensive system of local demonstration service scattered over the entire United States covering every concelvable feature of farming, small and great, and dealing with individual farmers and with local problems—a system that had its origin illegally under the funds appropriated for the improvement of cotton. (See Proceedings of the Twenty-seventh Annual Convention of the Association of American Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations held at Washington, D. C., November 12-14, 1913, p. 126.)

6. That instead of devoting its energies and increasing funds more and more to work of a highly scientific character or of wide geographical application with a minimum of administration it is building up a vast administrative system dealing with individuals and local conditions that should be left to the communities and to the States.

7. That the dominance of State institutions is further encouraged and the problem complicated by the "cooperative agreements" covering the joint expenditure of Smith-Lever funds and those appropriated directly to the Department of Agriculture for the same work done by the States under the Smith-Lever Act.

8. That the policy seems to be through cooperation or collaboration to pay a portion—generally a very small portion, sometimes only $1—of the salary of a man employed by State or local funds, and thereby, through office regulations and decisions, to largely control his activities. This principle was detected by a member of the Agricultural Committee at the last hearing, and was assented to by the representative of the Department of Agriculture.

(Mr. SMITH. The State and the department usually put in a sum not to exceed $1,200. The State puts in half of it and we put in half. Each puts in $600, though that may vary to meet the different conditions in different States.

Mr. Hellossen, But that is the

Mr. Helgesen. And the State of county sometimes puts in the balance?

Mr. Smith. Yes, sir.

Mr. Helgesen. And you only have enough in it to get control of it?

Mr. Smith. Yes, sir.

Hearings before Committee on Agriculture, 1916, p. 1130.)

9. That in the confusion of relations with the department it is impossible for the university to know its rights and duties or to enjoy its natural prerogatives. That the autocracy is benevolent and the officials involved are in many cases personal friends of ours is beside the point, for the system is fundamentally wrong and is resulting in a piling up of official regulations which, rather than the acts of Congress, are controlling the State institutions.

10. That in requiring the university to conduct its extension work through a separate administrative unit, the Department of Agriculture has interfered with the organization of the university to a dangerous degree, and its methods of administration trench upon the prerogatives of the board of trustees.

11. Finally, in the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture in Congress, the attitude of the department people is that they are engaged in building up a vast Federal system of demonstration service in agriculture and home economics in which the State institutions are not the active agents, but only the means to an end.

CONCLUSIONS.

CONCLUSIONS.

1. That cooperative relationship between the Department of Agriculture and the University of Illinois, as covering its local demonstration work supported by direct appropriations, should be dissolved.

2. That we maintain the position that the Smith-Lever work is not properly cooperative, and that the act should be so amended as to square with the facts of a Federal appropriation to the States with which to do a specific line of demonstration work, the authority of the Department of Agriculture being limited to ascertaining whether or not the States have met the provisions of the act; that is to say, to the auditing of the accounts.

3. That we maintain the position that the Department of Agriculture should retire from its demonstration service in local problems and direct its energies to research, demonstration, and police control in matters of large scientific import or of wide geographical application, and that the scientific work of the department should be under the purview of a body of scientists of recognized national standing, as was contemplated in the creation of the National Academy of Sciences in 1863.

DEAN OF THE COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE, UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS,
September 20, 1916.

Since writing the above there has come to my desk a "Memorandum of understanding between the States Relations Service and the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, concerning hog-cholera control and extension work."

This agreement between two Federal bureaus was made, the memorandum drafted and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture without consultation with this university, yet it undertakes to guarantee that "educational work in hog cholera will be conducted by the extension division of the College of Agriculture."

The States Relations Service agrees to "definitely advise the extension services of the State agricultural colleges that they * * will recognize the live-stock sanitary authorities as the cooperating agency, etc.," and this bureau further undertakes "to put the policy outline * * into effect in all of the extension divisions in all of the States, etc."

So are the duties of the University of Illinois signed, sealed, and delivered in Washington by two bureaus of the Department of Agriculture, and without the knowledge or consent of any representative of this institution.

STATE OF ILLINOIS, DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION, Springfield, January 22, 1917.

Senator L. Y. SHERMAN, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR SHERMAN: At various times I have had my attention called to bills before the National Congress whose object was the encouragement of certain forms of vocational education in the various Commonwealths.

It is the general forms couragement of certain forms of vocational education in the various Commonwealths.

It is the general feeling of the men connected with the commonschool systems in the various States, as I understand it, that they would look with favor upon such encouragement in the form of appropriations for the establishment, organization, and administration of such forms of education under the control of these various Commonwealths. So far as I know, none of these rich Northern States will be willing to surrender any of their authority and control over their State systems of public instruction in order to secure any appropriations from the National Treasury. It is a very general feeling that the autonomy of public education within the several States should in no wise be interfered with by the National Government. This arises out of no mean or little spirit. It arises out of long experience in public educational affairs which show clearly that confusion and waste result from too many forms of supervision and administration.

In Illinois, as you know, our theory is that the local board shall have almost supreme control of education within the district. However, above these local districts is placed a county superintendent who has certain large, general powers of supervision; then the superintendent, a constitutional officer, with rather large, general duties of supervision, advice, and leadership. Wherever national organizations, of whatever character, have obtruded themselves into the State, however good may have been their purpose, confusion and conflict has occurred in almost every instance. All this is said as introductory to a definite statement concerning the two bills which are now in Congress.

Dean Davenport, of the agricultural school, and myself have read to a definite statement concerning the two bills which are now in Congress.

Dean Davenport, of the agricultural school, and myself have read these bills with considerable care. It is our conclusion that the language in both of these bills can be easily construed by the National Vocational Board into a warrant for that board to exercise administrative powers in educational matters within the several States. The language in one place is, in effect, that in each of the several States a vocational board shall be created or designated which shall cooperate with the National Vocational Board in the administration of the provisions of the act.

We do not wish to quibble over words, and if there is a clear understanding that this language does not endow this national board with administrative powers within the several States, our objection would be withdrawn. I fear that all this is said too late for anything to be done in case you should agree with our point of view. I have, however, thought it worth while to write you and Representative Mann on the matter with a thought that something might be done in the conference committee to clear up this point.

F. G. BLAIR, Superintendent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.
The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.
The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, on page 78, line 23, there is a misprint. The third word is written "marketing." It ought to be "marking." I ask to amend by striking out "marketing" and substituting "marking."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 78, line 23, it is proposed to strike out "marketing" and to insert in lieu thereof "marking."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 19119-the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 19119) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, giving preference to the committee

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered. Is there any objec-The Chair hears none.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I was going to inquire of the Senator from Maryland whether he expects to go ahead with the bill this afternoon?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. There is no reason that I can see why we should not proceed with it. We can do an hour's work or more on it. I do not see any reason why we should not. have been trying to get the bill up for the last four or five days, and when I reported the bill to the Senate I gave notice that when the Agricultural appropriation bill was disposed of I would bring it up.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think it is pretty nearly time to adjourn, but I will not object to the request of the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "General expenses," on page 4, after line 14, to strike out:

Assessor's office: Assessor, $3,500; assistant assessors—3 at $3,000 each, 2 at $2,000 each; 5 field men at $2,000 each; record clerks—1 $1,800, 2 at $1,500 each, 1 $1,200; clerks—4 (including 1 in arrears division) at $1,400 each, 4 at $1,200 each, 8 (including 1 in charge of records) at $1,000 each, 2 at $900 each, 2 at $720 each; draftsmen—1 $1,600, 1 $1,200; 2 stenographers and typewriters at $1,200 each; assistant or clerk, $900; license clerk, $1,200; inspector of licenses, $1,200; assistant inspector of licenses, $1,000; 2 messengers, at $600 each; board of assistant assessors—clerk $1,500, vault clerk $900, messenger and driver $600; temporary clerk hire $500; in all, $68,340.

And insert:

And insert:

Assessor's office: Assessor, $3,500; assistant assessors—3 at $3,000 each, 2 at $2,000 each; 5 field men at $2,000 each; record clerks—1 $1,800, 2 at $1,500 each, 1 $1,200; clerks—3 (including 1 in arrears division) at $1,400 each (1 transferred to license bureau). 4 at $1,200 each, 7 (including 1 in charge of records) at $1,000 each (1 transferred to license bureau), 2 at $900 each, 2 at $720 each; draftsmen—1 $1,600, 1 $1,200; 2 stenographers and typewriters at $1,200 each; assistant or clerk, $900; 2 messengers, at $600 each; board of assistant assessors—clerk $1,500, vault clerk $900; messenger and driver $600; temporary clerk hire $500; in all, $62,540.

So much of existing law as provides that the assessor of the District of Columbia and the members of the permanent board of assistant assessors shall not be removed except for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office, is repealed: Provided, That on and after the date of the appreval of this act all records and accounts in any way relating or pertaining to the bookkeeping, accounting, and collection of taxes and assessments now prepared and kept in the office of the collector of taxes of said District; and the collector of the collector of taxes of said District; and the collector of the sasessor in relation to the preparation and issuance of tax bills and bills for special taxes and assessments; the preparation for public inspection of lists of all real estate in the District of Columbia heretofore required of the assessor in relation to the preparation and issuance of tax bills and bills for special tax or assessment; and said collector shall furnish, whenever called upon, a certified statement, over his hand and official seal, of all taxes and assessments, general and special, that may be due at the time of making the said certificate; and he shall prepare the lists of taxes on real property in said District subject to taxation on which taxes are levied and in arrears on the 1st day of July of each year; Provided further, Th

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Maryland briefly explain what change is made in existing law by this paragraph?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Instead of having the license department and the assessor's department together they are made two departments. As the Senator is aware, last year we changed the law requiring assessments every three years and provided that the assessments should be made every two years. The commissioners think that very much better service can be obtained by making them separate departments and having them act separately.

Mr. SMOOT. Does not this also provide for an annual assessment?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland, No; it does not change the assessments. The assessment period was changed last year from three to two years. It had formerly been every three years, and it is now every two years. The duties of the assessor's department and the license department are entirely different, and they want separate departments under separate guidance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 14, to insert: The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 14, to insert:
License bureau: Superintendent of licenses (who shall also be secretary to the automobile board without additional compensation), $2,000; clerks—one $1,400 (transferred from assessor's office), one $1,200 (formerly license clerk, assessor's office), one $1,000 (transferred from assessor's office), one $900 (formerly index clerk and typewriter, engineer commissioner's office); inspector of licenses, $1,200 (transferred from assessor's office); in all, $8,700.

All the authority, duties, discretion, and powers now vested by law in the assessor of the District of Columbia with respect to licenses and the issuance thereof, shall, on and after July 1, 1917, be transferred to and vest in the superintendent of licenses provided for in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 7, after "$11,800," to insert: "Provided, That the term of office of any member of the excise board whose nomination has been or may be rejected by the Senate shall be terminated by such rejection, and no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the salary of any member of the board whose nomination has been rejected by the Senate," so as to make the clause read:

Excise board: Three members at $2,400 each; clerk, $1,500; inspector, $1,500; messenger, $600; hire of means of transportation, $1,000; in all, $11,800: Provided, That the term of office of any member of the excise board whose nomination has been or may be rejected by the Senate shall be terminated by such rejection and no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the salary of any member of the board whose nomination has been rejected by the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 17, after the side heading to strike out "Two members at $300 each, $600" and insert "Three members, at $300 each, $900," so as to make the clause read:

Board of examiners, steam engineers: Three members, at $300 each, $900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 13, after line 18, to strike out:

Automobile board: Secretary or acting secretary, $300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Contingent and miscellaneous expenses," at the top of page 23, to insert:

Hereafter the register of wills of the District of Columbia shall be appointed by the justices of the supreme court of said District.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I desire, first, to make a point of order against the amendment. It is clearly a change of ex-

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, in regard to the point of order, I desire to say that a bill on the subject embraced in the amendment was introduced in the Senate and re-ferred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. It was there approved; it has been reported, and is now on the

Mr. HUGHES. That does not change the fact that this is clearly an attempt to pass general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that this legislation was asked for by the Supreme New Jersey that this legislation was asked for by the supreme Court of the District of Columbia. This officer is strictly under the jurisdiction of the court, and the impression is that better officers probably would be secured if appointed by the court than if appointed by the President of the United States.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, in regard to the statement of the Senator from Maryland that the District Committee at one time approved this bill, I desire to say that I have a very definite recollection that a bill of this character was called up in the recollection that a bill of this character was called up in the committee, of which I was a member at that time, and I then moved to lay it on the table, and that motion prevailed.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The bill was not disposed of at that time, I will say to the Senator from Kentucky, but was disposed of later, when there was a favorable report made

Mr. JAMES. I think, if the Senator from Maryland will look up the minutes of the committee he will find that I am correct. I am told, however, that the Senator from Washington was then present.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, my recollection now is that the measure to which the Senator from Kentucky refers was a bill proposing to give to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the power to appoint this officer. Mr. SMITH of Maryland. There were two bills. There was one providing that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia should appoint the recorder of deeds and another that the justices of the Supreme Court should appoint the register of wills. Both those bills were laid on the table.

Mr. JAMES. My recollection may be at fault, but it is very clear that this very proposition was before the Committee on the District of Columbia, to change the appointing power from the President and taking the right of confirmation from the Senate, and placing the appointing power in the justices of the District Supreme Court.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the law?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that the amendment proposes a change of existing law. The President now appoints this official, and he is confirmed by the Senate.

The Senate confirms him. Mr. JAMES.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senate confirms him.

Mr. JAMES. And the amendment proposes to take from the President and the Senate their power and to lodge it in the hands of the District judges.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is precisely what is contemplated.

Mr. JAMES. Of course it is a change of existing law.

Mr. HUGHES. There is no question about it being a change I will read the rule on the subject if the of existing law.

Chair has any doubt on that point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the Chair knows what the rule is, or he ought to know by this time; but as to District of Columbia matters the Chair last year was of the opinion that there was far more power in the Senate than there was as to other bills. If, however, there is a statute creating the office of register of wills and giving the appointment to the President of the United States, then the Chair sustains the point of order.

That there is such a law will not be denied,

Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, then, the Chair sustains the point of order.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 23, after line 3, to insert:

Office of recorder of deeds: For the purchase and exchange of 25 Elliott-Fisher bound-book recording typewriters and desks for the same, $5.409.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 6, to insert:

The next amendment was, on page 25, after time 6, to insert.

The recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia is authorized and directed to pay for copying instruments filed for record in his office 40 per cent of the fees collected by him for filing, indexing, and recording said instruments, and the same rate of compensation for making copies of the records of his office, and employees of the office of the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia when employed therein by the day shall receive compensation at the rate of $2.50 for each day so employed, payable out of the fees and emoluments of said office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 25, after line 6, to insert: For miscellaneous repairs to Eastern and Western Markets, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Improvements and repairs," on page 28, after line 15, to insert:

That part of the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1917 providing to "Repave with asphalt the roadway of Fourteenth Street NW., from Pennsylvania Avenue to F Street, 70 feet wide, $7,500," is hereby suspended until further action of Congress.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I shall raise the point of order as to that amendment.

myself, had the same idea regarding it as the Senator from New Jersey seems to have, but after investigation, when we saw the enormous outlay that has been made under an order of the Secretary of War and realized the enormous expenditure that would grow out of any change, we felt that this matter ought to have further consideration. It is a very serious matter to in-terfere with business interests without considering what it is going to cost them. I will let the amendment go over until tomorrow, however.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I shall not now argue the matter further, but I ask that it go over, and I shall reserve the right to renew my point of order then.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 30, after line 9, to insert:

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what good or intelligible reason he can offer to the Senate for changing the name of Oregon Avenue to Longfellow Street?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator the committee did not change the name. It had been changed previously.

Mr. LANE. How long ago?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I do not know as to that. I can not tell the Senator, as I did not inquire into it.

Mr. LANE. There has been a great mistake there.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. That was the name of the street as it came to us.

Mr. LANE. It is enough to condemn the entire bill, in my opinion.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the top of page 35, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 10, to insert:

Hereafter in all proceedings for the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of alleys and minor streets and for the establishment of building lines in the District of Columbia the jury of condemnation shall not be restricted as to the assessment area, but shall assess the entire amount awarded as damages plus the costs and expenses of the proceedings as benefits upon any and all lots, parts of lots, pieces or parcels of land which they may find will be benefited by the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of the alley or minor street, or by the establishment of the building line as they may find said lots, parts of lots, pieces or parcels of land will be benefited.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from Maryland would let that amendment go over. I do not know that there is any objection to it, but I should like to look into it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will inform the Sena-

Mr. NORRIS. Then I have no objection to it.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. There is no objection so far as I am concerned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that may be done.

The letter referred to is as follows:

OFFICE OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS, Washington, D. C., January 26, 1917.

OFFICE OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,

Washington, D. C., January 26, 1917.

Hon, George W. Norris,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator Norris: In compliance with your verbal request of some time ago, I take pleasure in submitting herewith for your information some facts and estimates in connection with the proposed establishment of a public bathing beach in the Tidal Basin in Potomac Park. I had hoped to be able to furnish you this data at a much earlier date, but in taking up the subject for that purpose I found that certain details as to the costs involved were not in such shape as to enable me to make a satisfactory statement.

Bathing in the Tidal Basin has been authorized by law since the approval of the act of September 26, 1890, by which the first appropriation was made for that purpose. Since that time appropriations have been made regularly to maintain facilities for bathing in this locality. The existing arrangements, however, do not provide adequate accommodations for the constantly increasing numbers of persons who desire to avail themselves of the privilege of using the public baths and enjoying the pleasures of swimming. In fact, the only means of securing the opportunity for unrestricted swimming is to patronize a private equipment maintained on the shore of the basin for the accommodation of the public.

There is at present no beach in this basin and persons who are not expert swimmers are deprived of the use of its waters. There is on its northeast side an unsightly structure which is used as a boathouse, bathhouse, and refreshment stand, but which does not meet the demands for bathing facilities. It is located at that portion of the basin where there is no current and where there is the least change in the water through the tidal action. The maximum number of persons who can be accommodated there is 600 per day. The building is owned by the Government and is occupied under a lease to the highest bidder for the public.

The Tidal Basin was designed and constructed to provi

Government and is occupied under a lease to the highest bidder for the privilege of serving, as far as conditions permit, the convenience of the public.

The Tidal Basin was designed and constructed to provide a reservoir of fresh water for flushing the Washington Channel of the river by means of automatic gates operated by the movement of the tides. In this way one-third, approximately 100,000,000 gallons, of the water in the basin is changed every 12 hours. The object of the proposed bathing beach will be to make this large body of water available to the public as an additional source of healthful out-of-door recreation.

It is now proposed to construct on the southeastern side of the basin a sloping sandy beach and a frame bathhouse, using in this connection all of the materials in the existing building referred to above. This location is well adapted to this purpose, owing to its proximity to the street car lines and its situation on the direct course of the current of fresh water between the inlet and outlet gates to the basin, which will insure a change of water at the beach twice in every 24 hours.

The basin has been thoroughly examined by the Public Health and Marine Hospital Service, whose reports indicate that while the water is not entirely free from pollution it could easily be made absolutely safe to bathe in. It is therefore proposed to install at the inlet gates a simple chlorine system which will purify all of the water as it enters the basin. Since one-third of the volume of water is removed every 12 hours and replaced by an equal amount of fresh water, the entire volume of water in the basin will be purified and renewed every 36 hours.

The estimate given below is believed to be approximately correct and

The estimate given below is believed to be approximately correct and sufficient to cover the cost of constructing the proposed bathhouse, beach, and purification system. The items of the estimate are as follows:

It is estimated that the cost of operating the chlorine plant so as to purify 200,000,000 gallons of water entering the inlet gate every 24 hours will amount to about 50 cents per million gallons, approximately $100 per day, or $10,000 per year, for the season during which the beach will be open for public use. Assuming an average of 2,000 persons per day using the beach, this cost would amount to 5 cents for each person. The expenses of operation would be in some degree offset by the collection of small fees charged for the use of bathing suits, soap, and towels the collection of small fees charged for the use of bathing suits, soap, and towels.

I can not but feel that the facilities now provided in Washington for the use of those who desire to enjoy the pleasures of swimming and out-of-door bathing are discreditable to the city as a community and as the Capital of the Nation. The large cities throughout the country furnish vastly superior opportunities for the enjoyment of this form of recreation, and it seems, to say the least, most unfortunate that Washington should be so inadequately provided for in this respect. Here is a great body of fresh water in one of the finest parks in the world, free from the dangers of traffic, dangerous currents, quicksands, treacherous holes, and other objectionable features which characterize many water sides which are used for bathing; yet no advantage is taken of this condition to provide the means of utilizing this asset for the great pleasure and benefit of the public.

I inclose herewith a draft of a bill which I have had prepared to remedy this situation, to authorize the construction of a bathing beach, as outlined above, and making appropriation with which to begin work upon the project. This is submitted in accordance with your request.

A design and plan for the proposed bathhouse and beach has been prepared in this office and approved by the Commission of Fine Arts, and which it is believed could be constructed for the amount of the suggested appropriation.

I trust that this communication may furnish you the data which you desire. If I can be of further assistance to you in this connection I shall be most happy to do so.

Sincerely, yours,

WM. W. Harts;

WM. W. HARTS; Colonel, United States Army.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, we seem to be getting along remarkably well with this bill. More than one-third of it has been covered already, I think. Would not the Senator in charge of the bill agree to an adjournment or a recess at this

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I suggest that we run until 6 o'clock. That is the usual hour for adjournment.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 44, after line 23, to insert:

For the purchase of lot 61, in square 555, for a playground site, $36,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 26, after the word "playgrounds," to strike out "$52,415" and insert "$88,415," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for playgrounds, $88,415.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Electrical department," on page 47, line 17, after the word "items," to strike out "$4,000" and insert "$4,700," so as to make the clause

For purchase and installation of 20 fire-alarm boxes, relocation of fire-alarm boxes, and purchase and erection of necessary poles, cross arms, insulators, pins, braces, wire, cable, conduit connections, posts, extra labor, and other necessary items, $4,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 24, after the word "ground," to strike out "$7,500" and insert "$9,000," so as to make the clause read:

For the erection of a brick or concrete storehouse on land belonging to the District of Columbia, to be used for the storage of material and supplies of the electrical department, including the inclosing, grading, and improving of the ground, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 48, to insert:

The next amendment was, at the top of page 48, to insert:

The Potomac Electric Power Co. is directed and required to remove all of the poles and overhead wires owned and used by it on Water Street, between Sixth and Fourteenth Streets SW., and on all reservations and public spaces adjacent thereto, and to install suitable and sufficient underground conduits, conductors, and appliances in lieu thereof. The removal of said poles and wires and the replacement thereof by underground constructions shall be upon plans to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and shall be completed within one year after the date of approval of this act: Provided, That if said company shall fall or neglect to remove such poles and wires, or shall fall or neglect to complete such underground construction within one year after the approval of this act, said company shall forfeit and pay to the District of Columbia the sum of $100 for each day of such fallure or neglect.

The reading of the bill was resumed, as follows:

ROCK CREEK PARK.

For care and improvement of Rock Creek Park and the Piney Branch Parkway, exclusive of building for superintendent's residence, to be expended under the direction of the board of control of said park in the manner now provided by law for other expenditures of the District of Columbia, $22,000.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, in regard to this item, Rock Creek Park, I wish to know whether it provides for the entire care and maintenance of that institution? It is a beautiful park, Mr. President. I have an idea that it is one of the finest parks in the country.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator that that

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator that that is all that was asked for. We gave them all they asked for. Mr. LANE. But there are some conditions which exist there which ought to be remedied. Now, this matter will not attract much of your attention and perhaps but little of your sympathy. It is very similar to the bill introduced by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson] the other night, when we had a arkansas fair. Robinsolvi the other high, which we had a night session here, in regard to the handling of calves and their shipment about the country without feed. If you go down near the Center Market you will find those young animals packed up in a narrow pen without food, perhaps for 48 hours, and maybe longer, bleating pitifully, as you go by, for something to Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Does the Senator wish to offer an amendment?

Mr. LANE. I want to say a word about this bill. Yes; I should be willing to offer two amendments to it.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. But the amendments of the committee are being considered now.

Mr. LANE. Then can this matter go over? Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The Senator can offer any amendment he pleases later on.

Mr. LANE. I want to inquire of the committee with regard to some features of the management of that park as to which did not know whether they were informed or not. Is that objectionable to the chairman, or does he wish me to do it later?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Not at all, sir. The only thing I thought was that we would get along as fast as we could, and that if the Senator wanted to offer any amendment he could offer it after the committee amendments have been disposed of.

Mr. LANE. I do not know that I do want to offer an amend-I do want as many Senators as are here to know certain things about it, and it does not particularly appeal to me that we should get through with this bill quickly so much as it does that we should get through with it rightly and properly.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I am offering no objection to any matter that the Senator wants considered. I merely stated that the committee amendments were being considered first, and that if the Senator wanted to offer any amendment it would be in order at any time after the committee amendments were disposed of.

Mr. LANE. But if I did not, I would then have nothing to address myself to. Is it understood that I can call attention to the item at any time?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. At any time the Senator desires.

Mr. LANE. I reserve that right, then. Mr. THOMAS. The Senator has that right, anyway. Mr. LANE. I reserve the right to do it later on.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Public schools," on page 56, after line 13, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, line 2, after the word "testimonials," to strike out "or for any purposes other than for the promotion of school athletics, including school playgrounds, vocation schools, school gardens, school publications, and commencement exercises of high schools" and insert "to school officials or for any purpose except such as may be authorized by the board of education at a stated meeting upon the written recommendation of the superintendent of schools," so as to make the clause read:

Appropriations in this act shall not be paid to any person employed under or in connection with the public schools of the District of Columbia who shall solicit or receive, or permit to be solicited or received, on any public-school premises, any subscription or donation of money or other thing of value from pupils enrolled in such public schools for presentation of testimonials to school officials or for any purpose except such as may be authorized by the board of education at a stated meeting upon the written recommendation of the superintendent of schools,

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 13, before the word "blind," to strike out "indigent," so as to make the clause

For instruction of blind children of the District of Columbia, in Maryland, or some other State, under a contract to be entered into by the commissioners, $7,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Metropolitan police," on page 68, line 4, after the word "precincts," to strike out "$32,500" and insert "$40,000," so as to make the clause

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 8, after the words "In all," to strike out "$94,100" and insert "$101,600," so as to make the clause read:

In all, $101,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, after line 5, to insert: For one gasoline launch, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, line 7, after the words "In all," to strike out "$7,000" and insert "$9,000," so as to make the clause read:

In all, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to page 70, line 3, the last paragraph read being as follows:

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Chief engineer, $3,500; deputy chief engineer, $2,500; 4 battalion chief engineers, at $2,000 each; fire marshal, $2,000; deputy fire marshal, $1,400; 2 inspectors, at $1,080 each; chief clerk, $2,000; clerk, $1,400; 38 captains, at $1,500 each; 40 lieutemants, at $1,320 each; 40 sergeants, at $1,200 each; superintendent of machinery, $2,000; assistant superintendent of machinery, $1,200; 27 engineers, at $1,200 each; 27 assistant engineers, at $1,100 each; 2 pilots, at $1,150 each; 2 marine engineers, at $1,200 each; 2 assistant marine engineers, at $1,100 each; 40 drivers, at $1,150 each; 40 assistant drivers, at $1,100 each; 183 privates of class 2, at $1,140 each; 44 privates of class 1, at $960 each; hostler, $600; laborer, $600; in all $596,460.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to call attention to the necessity of an amendment in this paragraph. The subcommittee made the amendment, which was proper, but afterwards agreed that all increases of salary should be stricken from the bill, and three items here were stricken from the bill upon a misunderstanding. The House made a mistake in drafting the bill, to which attention was called. It will be observed at the bottom of page 69 that privates are receiving $1,140 a year. As the bill now stands the assistant engineers, marine engineers, and drivers are receiving only $1,100 a year, so those holding a higher position are getting less than the privates. The desire is to make them

In line 21, page 69, I move to strike out "$1,100" and insert "$1,140"; in line 23, the same; and, in line 25, the same, so as to make an increase of $40 a year in the salaries of these higher officers and leave the salaries the same as those of the privates

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I have no objection to offer to the amendment. I think it is a proper amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair)

The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 69, line 21, strike out "$1,100" and insert "$1,140"; in line 23 strike out "$1,100" and insert "$1,140"; and in line 25 strike out "$1,100" and insert "$1,140," so as to read "27 assistant engineers, at $1,140 each; 2 assistant marine engineers, at $1,140 each; sistant drivers, at $1,140 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 11, on page 71. Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if it is the purpose to continue in session any longer.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Six o'clock is the hour we agreed

Mr. THOMAS. Very well.

RECESS.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, February 9, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 8, 1917.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer :

Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord; and the people whom He hath chosen for His own inheritance." Take us, O God, and make us Thine. Hold us close to Thee that we may be able to interpret the pulsations of Thy great heart; and thus understanding, give us grace and strength to do Thy will now and evermore, in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the migratory-bird law and to print in the RECORD a letter which I have received from the deputy commissioner of the State Game and Fish Department of the State of Missouri.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 20453. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 201. Joint resolution requesting the President of the United States to designate and appoint a day on which funds may be raised for the relief of the Ruthenians (Ukrainians).

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to bills of the following titles: S. 3699. An act to donate to the city of St. Augustine, Fla., for park purposes, the tract of land known as the powerhouse lot; and S. 1061. An act to allow additional entries under the enlarged-homestead act.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 135) for the restoration of annuities to the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota (Santee) Sioux Indians declared forfeited by the act of February 16, 1863, had requested a conference with the House on the bill and amendment, and had appointed Mr. ASHURST, Mr. MYERS, and Mr. CLAPP as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 18181) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, had requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Johnson of Maine, Mr. Hughes, and Mr. Smoot as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On February 3, 1917:
S. J. Res. 202. Joint resolution to enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the necessary expenses of the inaugural ceremonies of the President of the United States on March 5, 1917.

On February 6, 1917:

S. J. Res. 203. Joint resolution to provide for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the presidential inaugural ceremonies in 1917;

S. 7537. An act authorizing the Western New York & Pennsylvania Railway Co. to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River, in the town of Allegany, county of Cattaraugus, N. Y.; and

S. 8090. An act granting the consent of Congress to Washington-Newport News Short Line, a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Potomac River.

NATIONAL MILITARY PARK, GUILFORD COURTHOUSE,

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous corsent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8229, with Senate amendments, to disagree with the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. CARTER. What is the bill?

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. It is the bill of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Stedman] in reference to Guilford Courthouse.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Guilford Courthouse bill, to disagree to all Senate amendments and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 8229) to establish a national military park at the battle field of Guilford Courthouse.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I intended to move to concur in the Senate amendments if the matter came before the House. What is the objection to concurring in the Senate amendments?

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. As I understand, Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendments take away the commissioners which our bill calls for and puts the whole matter in the hands of the Secretary of War, who shall appoint a caretaker there.

Mr. MANN. To appoint whoever is necessary there.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Well, a caretaker is absolutely necessary.

Mr. MANN. He will operate this park as he does most of the other parks of this character.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. As I understand it— Mr. MANN. And we authorize the appropriation to be expended under the Secretary of War for the care of the park, for the construction of the necessary roads, approaches, etc.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Stedman] is here and is more fully acquainted with the matter, and I will ask him to explain it.

Mr. STEDMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Guilford Courthouse Battle Field Park Co. was inaugurated through the patriotic sentiment of a distinguished North Carolinian, Judge Schenk, who spent a lifetime and a great deal of money in building up the park. This is one of the most beautiful places in this country. His son has now taken charge and it has been kept up under his supervision, and as a matter of deference and gratitude to a family who have done so much for this great work and expended much time and money through patriotic motives, we thought that the bill should be so arranged that his son should be a commissioner. It is purely a matter of patriotic senti-

Mr. MANN. The Secretary of War would have authority to appoint this man in charge of the park.

Mr. STEDMAN. He might not do it, and what harm-Mr. MANN. I know he might not do it, that is true; but if it should be done, he probably would do it. Now, to create a ommission for this purpose—

Mr. STEDMAN. The leading parks of this country have had commissions, as I understand.

Mr. MANN. Part of them have, and we have been trying to abolish them.

Mr. STEDMAN. We care very little about the money in this matter, but it is purely a matter of sentiment, simply and entirely

Mr. MANN. This House on various occasions has had to reduce these commissions by abolishing commissioners whose terms have expired, which is a very difficult thing, of course, to do. Why create a new commission, why not let the Secretary of War have the management?

Mr. STEDMAN. Because we want to express our gratitude to the people who have had patriotism and sentiment enough to preserve this battle field and to recognize in some way this sentiment, not only of my own county and city but of the whole State of North Carolina and the whole people of this country.

Mr. MANN. I know; but after these gentlemen patriotically proposed to present this park to the Government I do not understand they insisted upon being paid for it in the form of a salary.

Mr. STEDMAN. They have not asked for any pay.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be paid in the form of a salary to the commissioner?

Mr. STEDMAN. If it becomes necessary and the conferees think it is better, we will strike it out; but we wish that family, who created that park as a matter of patriotic sentiment and who did the work which makes this one of the most beautiful parks in this country, and which was done at very great expense to themselves, to be represented.

Mr. MANN. For the present I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

SEWER FOR PRESIDIO MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 7713) granting to the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, a right of way for a storm-water relief sewer through a portion of the Presidio of San Francisco Military Reservation. A similar bill has been reported unanimously from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. What is the number of the Senate bill?

Mr. KAHN. It is S. 7713.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. Kahn] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill S. 7713, a House bill of similar tenor being on the calendar. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

An act (S. 7713) granting to the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, a right of way for a storm-water relief sewer through a portion of the Presidio of San Francisco Military Reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of the United States is hereby given to the city and county of San Francisco, Cal., to locate, construct, and maintain a 40-inch concrete storm-water relief sewer over and across Lobos Creek and thence through a portion of the Presidio of San Francisco Military Reservation to a point where it will again reach Lobos Creek and discharge therein, upon such location and plans as the Secretary of War may approve and under such conditions and regulations as he may prescribe.

SEC. 2. That the right to amend, alter, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Kahn, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 19423) of similar tenor was laid on the table.

OFFER OF NATIONAL DEFENSE FROM LOUISIANA.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by having read at the Clerk's desk a telegram received by me from the American Cane Growers' Association.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to have his remarks extended in the RECORD by having read at the Clerk's desk a telegram. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the telegram.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., February 7, 1917.

Hon. WHITMELL P. MARTIN, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

This organization, representing the sugar producers of Louisiana, requests that you respectfully offer to the President of the United States and the Secretary of War the use of Louisiana sugar factories and accompanying equipments to be utilized in such manner as may be found advisable in meeting the demands which may arise in connection with national defense. Of Louisiana's total boller horsepower, capacity approximately one-half, namely, 150,000 boiler horsepower, is installed in Louisiana sugar factories.

AMERICAN CANE GROWERS' ASSOCIATION, By H. N. Pharr, President.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE, Mr. Speaker

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from West Virginia rise?

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I rise to a question of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I desire to have the Clerk read a clipping from the Cleveland Leader and also an article from the Wheeling Intelligencer, of Wheeling, W. Va., that I think reflects upon myself and other Members of the Military Affairs Committee.

The Clerk read as follows.

[From the Cleveland Leader, Feb. 6, 1917.]

GORDON ASSAILED AS "A PINHEAD"—CHICAGO TRIBUNE URGES HIS EX-PULSION FROM CONGRESS AS "WARNING TO TRAITORS."

CHICAGO, February 5.

CHICAGO, February 5.

In an editorial to-morrow the Chicago Tribune will say:

"The first step necessary to place the land defenses of the Nation on a war footing is the increase of the General Staff of the Army.

"That step, asked by the Secretary of War from the Military Affairs Committee of the House, has been refused by the Democratic majority of the committee. Here is the list: Dent, of Alabama, chairman; Mc-Kellar, of Tennessee; Quin, of Mississippi; Gordon, of Ohio; Little-Page, of West Virginia; Shallenerers, of Nebraska; Farler, of Nebraska; Farler, of New York; Wise, of Georgia; Olner, of Massachusetts; Nicholls, of South Carolina; Harrison, of Virginia.

"No one can excuse himself on the ground of ignorance. The need of a General Staff, which is the organizing mechanism of our military defense, has been explained and discussed before them fully. Only a mental defective could fail to understand and the trouble with the men is not that they are subnormal but that they are merely pin-headed, pusillanimous, peanut politicians.

"There should be more than this. The men on this roll of dishonor whose names we give here should be forthwith expelled from the House of Representatives as a sign that the House knows its duty and as a warning to all traitors that its Government is awake to the national crisis."

[From the Wheeling Intelligencer, Feb. 6, 1917.]

LITTLEPAGE IS GRILLED—CHICAGO PAPER IN SEVERE CRITICISM—PEL THESE TRAITORS," THE CAPTION OF TRIBUNE'S EDITORIAL.

CHICAGO, ILL., February 5.

Under the caption, "Expel these traitors," a Tribune editorial calls for the expulsion from Congress of Denr, of Alabama; McKellar, of Tennessee; Quin, of Mississippi; Gordon, of Ohio; Littlepage, of West Virginia; Shallenberger, of Nebraska; Farler, of New York; Wise, of Georgia; Olney, of Massachusetts; Nicholls, of South Carolina; and Harrison, of Virginia because they voted against increased land defense to-day in the House of Representatives at Washington.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this is the first time during my service in this House that I have craved the indulgence of the House in a matter of this character, and I hope it will be the last time. But I can not submit as a Member of this House to the accusations referred to in these papers without my humble protest, especially when they are so unjust, unwarranted, and unfounded. And I sincerely feel that I but bespeak the sentiment of the individual Members of this House without reference to politics in resenting the accusations preferred by those editorials. am here to say to the membership of this House that there is not one scintilla of truth in either of the statements. are wholly unfounded.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker—— The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from South Carolina rise?

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. I want to ask the gentleman from West Virginia a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from West Virginia yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Yes. Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. I wanted to know if the gentleman knew the name of the contemptible scoundrel who wrote that article?

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I do not; but I wish I did.

So far as my district is concerned and so far as the repre-sentative citizens of my district are concerned, without reference to politics, I need not reply to such disgraceful publica-tions, inasmuch as they would not be given any credence there. But these publications, gentlemen of the House, ought not to be permitted to go unnoticed, as in case they are continued no one is safe, character is valueless, and faithful devotion to service will not be appreciated.

I care not so much for myself, but there are other men-Members of this House, men of high standing and high character-who have likewise been reflected upon by the writers of these articles. I care not whether you are a Republican or a Democrat; your character and high standing in this House is as sacred to you as mine is to me. [Applause]. And the longer I stay here and the more I see of this public slander of public officials the greater I see the necessity for a statute in this Government that will brand the publishers and writers of such articles as felons and convict them as such and send them to the penitentiary. That is what ought to be done. And I rise more in defense and in protection of the good men who have been slandered along with me than I do for myself.

These publications have gone into the Wheeling Intelligencer, one of the most important Republican papers in my State, copied from the Chicago Tribune. In justice to me, in justice to every man who is reflected upon, the Republican members of the Military Affairs Committee of this House, men of high character and standing and capacity, and noted for patriotism, will testify it is a ridiculous shame, and one that the House itself ought to resent. If I had my way, the man who wrote that article would be barred from that gallery. He ought to be barred from it. [Applause., I have struggled all my life to keep a clean character. I have struggled all my life to be honest. I have struggled all my life to be kind and obliging to people, and I resent that abominable publication which the man who wrote it knew was a mischievous, disgraceful, contemptible falsehood. [Applause,] And he does not deserve the respectful attention of any Member of this House, it matters not what his politics.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Yes.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman has intimated that the article in question was written by a correspondent having a place in the House press gallery. I understood his opening statement to be that it was an editorial that appeared on the editorial page and was not a news communication written by the Washington correspondent.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I do not know what the facts are. I wish I did.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, Mr. Speaker-

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I tried to find out.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will inform the gentleman that saw it on the editorial page of the Tribune, and I went to the Tribune file a moment ago, in the House lobby, and found the editorial had been cut out.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Yes; I saw the editorial as well. But he seemed to have gotten it in there both ways. And I take it, it went from the gallery of this House to the editorial depart-

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield? Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think a word is to be said for the active correspondent in Washington. It is not his fault that some of these pernicious editorials appear. The work is done back home, in the office. One of the great troubles with Washington is that what the correspondents do send out does not always meet the approval of the editor at home, who is wiser than the Congress of the United States-that man back there.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Certainly.

Mr. QUIN. I desire to state for the information of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] that it is both. Some scoundrel from the city of Washington has sent that out, and the putrid editor of that pusillanimous paper has put in that putrid editorial. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. My rule in life has been, if I could not say something good of my fellow man, to refrain from saying something harmful [applause], and I have used stronger language in this august presence this morning than I have used in many years about a fellow countryman.

Gentlemen, I do not know how you take it, but I felt cut and hurt and resentful. It is a terrible thing to publish throughout the country a lie about a public official. No power on earth can kill it or stop it, when once put in circulation. Newspaper men ought to be careful to know what they are publishing, to know the truth of it before they scatter it to the winds. It is all over my district this morning, and doubtless all over the district of every Member who has been so reflected upon. have to answer. We ought not to have to answer, but we shall.

In my heart I am willing to forgive the transgressor if he will do so no more and not try to hurt some other public official. But, before this House and my God, I came into this House with prayers upon my lips to God to keep me right and to keep me honest, and I have tried to so live here, and I do resent with all my heart the injustice done me and the other distinguished members of a great committee of this House. am for preparedness. I have always been. I love my country and believe in one flag, one country, and one God. [Applause.] I love that flag and would spill my blood to defend it if it were necessary. The idea of saying of me and of other good men that we are "traitors"—gentlemen of this House, it is a hard statement to make. It is a terrific thing to say and to put into circulation throughout the length and breadth of the country that we all love so well, that we are all willing to step into the trenches and die for when it is necessary. I thank you, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It is a fact, is it not, that in the Hay national-defense bill, passed at the last session of Congress and reported and acted upon by the same members of the Committee on Military Affairs and the majority that now composes the committee, with one exception, this provision was carried in that law forbidding more than 50 per cent of the General Staff to be in Washington?

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. That is probably true.

Mr. MANN. Is it not absolutely true?
Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I am not prepared to say that it is, because I do not remember definitely.

Mr. MANN. I supposed the gentleman knew.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will allow me, that is true.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. But let me say to the gentleman from Illinois that this article concerns what occurred in this House and in the committee room within the last few days.

Mr. MANN. Very well.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. And do you sustain it?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I do not think the gentleman that wrote the article was quite informed, nor do I think the criticism of the gentleman from West Virginia is quite well balanced. Here is a committee that in time of danger reported, and the House passed, a bill forbidding more than 50 per cent of the General Staff to be in Washington. The War Department under this present exigency has requested that that be set aside. perhaps it ought to be set aside. I do not say that it ought. was opposed to the provision in the first place; but if it ought to be set aside now, we are subject to criticism for having enacted it at the last session of Congress.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Let me say to the gentleman from Illinois that the very thing that this article said we did not do was done by the committee, and by a unanimous vote, and the Republican member on your own side [Mr. KAHN], who has as much ability and patriotism as any other man in this House, will tell you so. And let me say to the gentleman from Illinois, too, that it is a singular coincidence that every member on the Democratic side of that committee is attacked, with the exception of one, and put on that roll of dishonor. Let me say to you further that your own side of this House, the members of that commit-tee who are honest—and I do not mean to say you are dishonest-will sustain my statement. I thank you, Mr. Speaker and gentlèmen. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN rose

The gentleman from California is recog-The SPEAKER.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House on this matter for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks for five minutes in which to address the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. LITTLEPAGE] is quite right when he says that the matter referred to in the article is false, because such a proposition was never put up to the Committee on Military Affairs by the Secretary of War. [Applause.] The article refers to a proposition for the enlargement of the General Staff. The thing that the War Department asked was a modification of the law, which prohibits more than 50 per cent of the General Staff from being located here in Washington at any time.

The Secretary of War came to me before the meeting and asked whether I would be willing to stand for a modification of that provision. I told him in this emergency I believed it was the duty of every American citizen to stand by the Prest dent and the War Department [applause], and that I would cheerfully support the modification. When the committee was in session that proposition was put before us, and that alone. We were merely asked to give authority to the Secretary of War to permit him to call all of the General Staff or such proportion of it in excess of 50 per cent as he might desire to the city of Washington to work out necessary military problems. There was some little discussion in the committee, but every member of the committee voted for the proposition, Democrats and Republicans alike. There was no division of opinion, and the thing went through unanimously and is now incorporated in the bill. [Applause.]

I think it only fair to our Democratic colleagues on the committee to state the matter just as it occurred, and I am pleased to have had this opportunity to so explain it.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DENT.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. DENT. May I ask my colleague on the committee from California if it is not a fact that the Secretary of War came in person to the committee room on Monday morning and conferred with you, as the ranking minority member of the committee, and with me, as chairman of the committee, and that we agreed on this provision, which I submitted to the committee; and it was unanimously adopted by the committee and is now in the bill?

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman states the facts just as they occurred. [Applause.]

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, is it not a fact that the Secretary of War did not address the committee, other than the two leaders on the committee, upon the subject at all?

Mr. KAHN. He did not appear personally before the com-

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes. Mr. GARNER. Then the pusillanimous part of this matter seems to be at Chicago instead of in the House of Representa-

Mr. KAHN. Oh, the gentleman must draw his own conclusions.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not hear distinctly the editorial as it was read. From the statement of the gentleman from California [Mr. Kahn] I understand there is no foundation whatever for that editorial.

Mr. KAHN. That is quite true. Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object-about what?

Mr. FIELDS. About this proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to the floor as a question of privilege, but as he makes a request for unanimous consent the Chair will put his request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I happen to be one of the majority members not mentioned in the newspaper article referred to. I only take this opportunity to indorse what the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has said, and to express my resentment at the reflection that has been cast upon the other members of the committee. The whole thing was without foundation, and if any man in the press gallery of this House is responsible for it, he ought to be barred from the gallery. [Applause.] Of course, if the correspondent here was not responsible for it, and the man at the head of the paper in Chicago is alone responsible, that presents a condition that we just have to make the best of; but the statement is false, and should be condemned not only by this House, but by the people of this country. [Applause.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker and gentle-men of the House, this article in the Chicago Tribune had not been called to my attention until it was read from the desk this morning, and I must confess that I was very much surprised that any paper in the United States, in this time of trouble and excitement, would take occasion to speak of members of one of the most prominent committees of this House in any such terms. I know that it is not a time for us to be discussing politics, and I also know, as the Member from California [Mr. Kahn] has stated, and as the Member from West Virginia [Mr. Littlepage] has stated, that the Republican members of this committee voted for the proposition which was put in the bill after finding out from Mr. KAHN and Mr. DENT that it was satisfactory to the Secretary of War. Therefore the Secretary of War has got from the committee exactly what he asked for, or exactly what he was willing to put up and have passed as a law. Now, with reference to the Chicago Tribune, I do not know the man who wrote this article. I do not care to know the man who wrote this article. It has always been my experience, and it has always been the custom in my part of the country, that the man who manages a paper, the man who is the editor of a paper, is responsible for what goes into that paper. Gentlemen of the House, if some little reporter writes an article reflecting upon a man's private character or reflecting upon a man's public career and it is printed in the paper, the little numskull who wrote it is not responsible, but the man who runs the paper is responsible. I am reliably informed that Mr. McCormick is one of the editors and has large control over the Tribune. I am further informed that the State of Illinois has sent Mr. McCormick to be a Member of the next Congress.

Mr. MADDEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The Mr. Mc-Cormick who has been elected to the House has no official relation to the Chicago Tribune. It is his brother.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. What is the name of the Member who is to be here?

Mr. MADDEN. Medill McCormick; and the gentleman who has charge of the editorial work of the Tribune is Robert R. McCormick.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Do you know whether Mr. Medill McCormick has anything to do with it?

Mr. MADDEN. He has absolutely nothing to do with the management of the Tribune.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. He has nothing to do with it?

Mr. SIMS. He is one of the owners.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Is he one of the owners?

Mr. MADDEN. No. His mother is, but he is not. Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. When did he sever his connection with it?

Mr. MADDEN. He has never had any connection with it as far as I know. His mother owns it.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. It is owned in the family, and he has stock in it, has he not?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think he has. I think it would be unfair to make the statement that Mr. Medill McCormick, the Member-elect of the House, is in any way connected by owner-ship with the Chicago Tribune. The paper was originally owned by his grandfather, who left the property to Mr. Mc-Cormick's mother and to another daughter, and these two women own the paper.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. In justice to Mr. Mc-Cormick, if he is not the man, I will not read all of an article printed in the RECORD, which refers to a certain party; but a portion of that article fits this case so well that I am going to read it, and I want it to refer to the man who wrote this article or is responsible for it. I quote from the Congressional RECORD of July 11, 1912, the language of a Republican paper, the Chicago Inter-Ocean, which, in my judgment, fits the man who wrote this article, and I can not better express my feeling for him than to use the words of the editor of the Chicago Inter-Ocean, who says:

We apologize to our readers for dignifying the falsehood in ques-

And I apologize to this House for dignifying the falsehood that this man has written-for dignifying the falsehood in question by this editorial reference; but we take it that some recipients—

Of a letter that was written-

of a letter that was written—

might otherwise believe it, not realizing that it came from an alcoholic little cad who haunts sanitariums between debauches and whose pusfed face for months turned men in disgust from the lunch tables and caused them to avoid even the tableware which touched his lips. The name of a degenerate looks as respectable on paper as that of a gentleman, and therefore we are compelled in this case to treat it not as it is but as it appears to be.

Now, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I want to tell this House that no Military Committee that has ever been here, in my judgment, from what I have read, have labored harder or more conscientiously to give to this Government the defense that we thought was ample and that the people of this country wanted. I speak for both sides of the House. There has been no friction. Whenever the department notified us that they had to have a thing we have gone the length to give it to them. You, gentlemen, have helped do it; we have helped do it; and I say You, it is an outrage and a shame for any paper, regardless of poli-tics, to come into the public prints with an article of that kind without foundation—in other words, a bald-faced lie—for the purpose of hurting Democratic Congressmen on that committee. So far as I am concerned, it will not hurt me, because the papers in my district would not think of publishing such an article. If the papers did publish it, the people of my district would not believe a word of it, and the people of the districts of other gentlemen are not going to believe it. They have the confidence and esteem of their constituents or they would not be here to-day. We have dignified this article by giving it notice on the floor of the House. I think, possibly, it should have gone unnoticed; but, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, when a man brazenly assaults the character of Members of the House their only way to come back, their only way of getting redress, is to come on the floor and defend themselves; and I am proud to say that the Republican members of the committee-and I knew they would do it—have come here on the floor and said that it was false. I hope the matter will not be brought any further into notice by the papers, and I hope this editor will stay in Chicago, where he belongs, because I frankly tell you that if I meet him I will hold him personally responsible for this article. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks for two minutes to address the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it is quite evident that the article in the Chicago Tribune was based upon false information. It did the committee, the Democratic members of the committee, a great injustice, but it is just as true as the article read by the gentleman from South Carolina in reference to the editor of the Chicago Tribune.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Will the gentleman submit to an interruption?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. That article was written by the editor of the paper from the gentleman's own State.

Mr. MANN. No; but the gentleman read it here to the House. Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. It is in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. If it were a shame for the Chicago Tribune to write the editorial it did, I think it is equally a shame that the gentleman from South Carolina should read the article he did about the editor of the Chicago Tribune. The editor of the Chicago Tribune, the managing editor at present, is Maj. McCormick, who has just been down on the border of Mexico, enlisted in the Government service, ready at all times to lay down his life for his country, and has proven it, which we have not-taking an active interest in military affairs. He has indulged in considerable criticism of the Hay defense bill. It has not met my approval in every respect, although I think much of it was just. He has made a mistake, but it does not do any good because of that to call him names and impute improper motives to him. He has the highest patriotic motives in behalf of the defense of the country, and is a gentleman of just as high standing as any gentleman in this House. [Applause.]

Mr. QUIN rose. The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Mississippi rise?

Mr. QUIN. To ask for seven minutes to address the House. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks to address the House for not exceeding seven minutes. Is there ob-

There was no objection.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege, and would like to have read what appeared in the Chicago Tribune from a staff correspondent of that paper in the city of Washington, reflecting on the Democratic members of your Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. It can be read in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the Chicago Tribune, Feb. 6, 1917.]

"PORK HUNTERS" CRIPPLE ARMY'S GENERAL STAFF-DEMOCRATS, WITH WAR FACING NATION, REFUSE TO GIVE AID TO BAKER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 5.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 5.

A group of pork and pacifist Democratic Congressmen to-day blocked the first step proposed by the administration to put the Nation in a position to defend itself in case of war with Germany.

These Congressmen, comprising the Democratic majority of the House Military Affairs Committee, rejected an urgent request of Secretary of War Baker to insert in the Army appropriation bill a provision authorizing an increase in the General Staff of the Army from 55 to 92 members.

members.

The Democrats who opposed the Secretary's recommendation included Dent, of Alabama, chairman; McKellar, of Tennessee; Quin, of Mississippi; Gordon, of Ohio; Littlepage, of West Virginia; Shallenberger, of Nebraska; Farley, of New York; Wise, of Georgia; Olney, of Massachusetts; Nicholls, of South Carolina; and Harrison, of Virginia. Fields, of Kentucky, was the only Democratic member of the committee who voted for the increase.

BAKER APPEALS IN PERSON.

Mr. Baker journeyed to the Capitol to make his request in person. He called on Chairman DBNT just prior to a scheduled meeting of the committee and informed him that the present General Staff, handicapped as it is by a provision in the Hay law that not more than one-half of its members shall be in Washington at one time, is too small to handle the work confronting it.

Mr. DBNT, after advising Secretary Baker that his request would be rejected, submitted it to the Military Committee, where the Democratic majority, as he predicted, voted it down.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, you can not lay all of this lie at the door of the editor of the Chicago Tribune. I have the utmost respect for gentlemen who represent the press here in the Press Gallery. They have always been fair to Members of Congress. I do not know whether the creature who sent this miserable and contemptible lie to the Chicago Tribune has the honor to be a member of the respectable brotherhood that compose the fraternity who sit in the Press Gallery. If that miserable creature is in the Press Gallery, if this House has any respect for itself, and if the gentlemen who compose that fraternity have any respect for themselves, they will bar that miserable cur from association with gentlemen. [Laughter and applause.]

The Chicago Tribune, the pusillanimous paper that published this fuzzy lie, went further and published a scathing, slanderous, and libelous editorial reflecting on the manhood, the integrity and ability and patriotism of the Democratic majority on the Military Affairs Committee. So far as that paper is concerned, every man who is familiar with its record knows that it is a blatherskite, South-hating, billingsgate sheet. We know from editorials which appeared in that paper anent the Frank case, in the State of Georgia, the good citizenship of the State of Georgia was reflected upon, as well as the manhood and patriotism of the entire South. That paper is not worthy to go into the home of any patriotic citizen in the Republic.

It is easy enough for a buzzard to fly high in the air and puke the filthy, slimy contents of his nasty bowels on the head of a prince. [Laughter and applause.] It is easy enough for some editorial buzzard to sit back in the private editorial room of the paper and puke out his vomit on worthy and distinguished men who are representing the people as patriotic Members of the American Congress. My friends, it is time for the manhood of this House to resent such an imputation. Has it come to the pass that if any Congressman stands up for the plain people, if any man throws himself across the path of the onward rush of the plunderers and dollar hunters of the country, is he to be called a traitor? If, forsooth, the editor had told the truth, if the members of the committee had manhood enough to place themselves on record against increasing the Staff Corps, he would have had no just ground for criticism.

Is a Congressman to be branded as a traitor because he re-fuses to stand for all of the rot of militarism and all of the dangerous propaganda advocated by plutocracy? We know that the bill that the committee reported out to this House shows that all of the staff in an emergency can be called into Washington or the District of Columbia on the order of the Presi-We as members of the committee voted for it. Is there any man of sense in the United States who doubts that this is the correct thing? Not only the Chicago Tribune, the nasty thing that ought not to be mentioned in the presence of gentlemen, but other plutocratic papers throughout this country have seen fit to vilify members of the Committee on Military Affairs and other Members of this House who have seen proper to stand against the great powers of selfish wealth and the undermining dangers of a great standing army. We all know that so far as any impending danger is concerned with any foreign country at this time this bill could do nothing to confront it. We all know that the American citizenship is ready at all times to go to the front with flying colors to defend their country against aggression. Your committee has worked with patriotic devotion and fidelity to this House and to the Nation to give the proper implements and nucleus around which an Army may be built. We all know that if a real contest comes it would be the men from the ranks of private life who would go to the front as men of great virility to defend this country. [Applause.]

Mr. LONDON rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we have a very important bill before this House and we are wasting time now. I shall not object to the gentleman from New York proceeding for five minutes, but I give notice that I shall object to any other similar request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONDON. Will it be in order to announce that I shall object to every unanimous request that comes from the Republican side?

DIVERSION OF WATER OF THE NIAGARA RIVER.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the bill (H. R. 20047) for the control and regulation of the waters of Niagara River above the Falls, and for other purposes, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk reported the bill by title.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following inotion to recommit, which I send to the desk and ask to have read. The Clerk read as follows:

Motion by Mr. Huddleston: That H. R. 20047 be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Affairs with instructions to forthwith report as a substitute therefor the following:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the short title of this act shall be 'The Niagara power commission act.'

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the proposed substitute is not germane. The same motion was made in the Committee of the Whole when we began the consideration of this bill. The text of the bill which the Clerk has just read in the motion to recommit was offered as a substitute for the first paragraph of the bill under consideration. The point of order was made and quite considerably debated, and, as a result, the Chair ruled that it was not germane. If the Chair is in doubt, I shall be glad to proceed with the authorities. They are all in point, distinct and clear. The purpose of the bill under consideration is to authorize the Secretary of War to issue permits for the development of the water power at Niagara Falls. The purpose of the substitute which the gentleman offers is to create a Niagara Falls commission. The two may be related to the same subject, namely, that of water power at Niagara Falls, but they are certainly not the same subject and bear no other relation to each other. The authorities are distinct and clear.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman need not read the authorities, as the Chair has read them time and again. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to be heard?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I do. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill has been inaccurately stated. The purpose of the bill under consideration—H. R. 20047—as stated in its title, is "for the control and regulation of the waters of Niagara River above the Falls, and for other purposes." As an incident to such control and diversion, it is provided that the Secretary of War may issue permits to various parties, private corporations, public corporations, and other agencies, and it is further provided how these agencies shall manage and conduct themselves after the permits are issued, and the terms for the permits are specified.

It is very important in considering this question of order that we consider exactly what it is that is being attempted to be done by the bill, and it is quite desirable that we should have in view the situation at Niagara. The proposition is to authorize the use of the waters of Niagara for the generation of power. That is the real matter before the House. The detail as to whether it shall be done in one way or another is a secondary consideration. The purpose of the substitute is identical with the purpose of the bill; that is, to provide for the conversion of the waters of Niagara into power. That is the real purpose of both bills and therefore they are absolutely identical. as the method whereby this water is to be converted into power is concerned they are radically different, but that is a secondary matter and it is a mere detail of the main purpose which relates to the conversion of this water into power. The diversion of water, the regulation of the amount of water that is to be diverted, and how it shall be converted into power, is the real subject of both bills. The bill we have before us provides that this water may be used by a public-service agent, a public corporation, if you please, or that it may be used by a private grantee or permittee. The substitute which I offer excludes all other generating agents from using this power except one; that is, it provides for the creation of a public corporation by the Congress of the United States which shall have the duty and the business of converting this water into power. Therefore the purposes of the measures are identical, the differences are merely matters of detail and secondary, and I can not very well see how it can be held that the bill is not germane.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the pending bill is to authorize the Secretary of War to grant permits for the use of the quantity of water that the United States under the treaty with Great Britain can authorize the use of, and for the regulation of the price by the public-service commission of New York State. It also provides that this Government shall make a charge for the use of the water. It is entirely a leasing bill. It has nothing to do with Government ownership of a utility of that kind. The substitute provides that the Government can utilize this water, own the generating plants, and sell the power. It is a Government-ownership propo-One is a leasing proposition and the other is ownership by the Government of these plants that generate power from this water. The one is not germane to the other. The substitute provides for the establishment of a Government bureau to use this water and to dispose of the power generated from The same question was raised in the committee the other day, the very identical proposition, and the Chairman of the committee ruled as follows:

As the Chair understands the rule, two subjects are not necessarily germane because they are related or belong to the same general class, and the question that the Chair is called on to decide is whether or not the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama is a substitute for the pending bill embodies a proposition different from the bill under consideration, and after due consideration the Chair is of the opinion that, under the rule and the precedent cited by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley], the amendment is not in order, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

The precedent cited by the gentleman from Kentucky was a bill authorizing a right of way for a railroad, and a substitute was offered authorizing the Government to build the railroad. The Chair held that it was not in order, as it was not germane to the bill. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Alexander], chairman of the committee, held that that was a similar proposition to this, that this was a leasing proposition and the substitute provided for Government ownership, and that the substitute was not germane. If it was not germane then, it is not germane as an amendment to the bill at this time.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I omitted to call the attention of the Chair to an authority which I have on this subject. I wish to refer the Speaker to section 5909 of Hinds' Precedents.

The SPEAKER. What is it?

The SPEAKER. What is it?
Mr. HUDDLESTON. Section 5909 of Hinds' Precedents. will read the case as stated in the authority:

To a bill providing for an interoceanic canal, specifying a certain route, an amendment providing for another route was held to be germane. On January 9, 1902, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was considering the bill (H. R. 3110) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, when Mr. Richard W. Parken, of New Jersey, proposed an amendment providing for a canal across the Isthmus of Panama.

Mr. OSCAR W. LINDERWOOD of Alabama, made the point of order that Panama.

Mr. Oscar W. Underwood, of Alabama, made the point of order that the amendment was not germane, because, while the bill provided for a canal at Nicaragua only, the amendment provided also for a canal at another place. After debate the chairman said:

The subject matter of this bill—the enterprise upon which the House has entered—is, in the language of the bill—"To construct a canal to connect the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans."

The Chair is of the opinion that that is the purpose of the legislation sought; that the question of location is wholly a subordinate one, and that it is perfectly competent for Congress to reject one location and to adopt another. For instance, suppose it was a question of building a house for the purpose of storing the records of the Government and a bill was introduced to locate it on a certain square in this city. Can anybody doubt that the proposition might be amended so as to locate it upon another square?

I have examined the precedents carefully and in my opinion

I have examined the precedents carefully and in my opinion no precedent can be found which is so nearly like this case as the one I have just read. The precedent cited by the gentleman from Kentucky the other day-section 5887 of Hinds'was not on all fours by any means with the question we have before us here. That was a case in which the proposition was made to grant a railroad a right of way, and an amendment was offered that the Government should on contingency own the railroad. Now, manifestly the real purpose in that bill was to grant or not to grant the railroad right of way. Hence it was wholly foreign to that purpose to propose that the Government should go into the business of owning a railroad. But we have no such antithesis in the instant case. The real purpose of the bill is to authorize the diversion of water from Niagara River for power purposes. That is the real purpose of the bill. The gentleman beclouds the issue by insisting that the real purpose has to do with granting permits; but the real purpose is to fix terms on which Congress is willing to authorize water to be taken from Niagara River for power purposes so that the rights of the Government be protected and the public welfare will be served.

That is the purpose. Now, then, it makes no difference whether that diversion is by some private agency or some public corporation, or whether the Government itself does it. That is wholly immaterial and is secondary to the main purpose of the bill. Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, just one moment. Certainly the precedent cited by the gentleman from Alabama does not apply to this bill. The one I cited does apply.

The SPEAKER. Now, why not?
Mr. FLOOD. Because he recites a case where the change was of location—simply a change of location of the canal. The case of the railroad was a proposition to grant a right of way for the railroad. We have a bill here providing for the granting of permits to use water. The amendment offered in the railroad case was for the Government to build the railroad. It was ruled out of order. The proposition the gentleman from Alabama submits is for the Government to take this water and build a power plant, which the Government will do. The two cases are on all fours. This amendment is no more germane to the main proposition than the amendment to the railroad bill was to the original bill.

The SPEAKER. Is it not a change of agency?
Mr. FLOOD. It is not at all; it is a change of proposition.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Not unless the Chair is in doubt. The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman, although he has his mind made up.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I desire to submit simply that the case cited by the gentleman from Alabama is clearly out of point-ridiculously out of point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair agrees with the gentleman from Minnesota about that.

This original bill that the House has been considering was simply to grant permits for some water above the Falls. The Chair has forgotten the number of cubic feet, but that does not make any difference. That was the sole purpose of that bill.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Huddleston] comes in with a proposition to create a corporation, and so forth and so on. Because both of these bills happen to have to do with the waters of Niagara River, is no reason why one proposition is germane to the other.

Fifty-eight hundred and eighty-seven of Hinds' Precedents

Says:

To a bill granting a right of way to a railroad, an amendment providing for the purchase of the railroad by the Government was held not to be germane. On February 28, 1898, Mr. Richard Bartholdt, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, presented the bill (H. R. 6358) authorizing the Nebraska, Kansas & Gulf Railway Co. to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, To this Mr. Albert M. Todd, of Michigan, proposed as an amendment a provision as follows:

"That the United States of America shall have the right to purchase the franchise rights and other property herein granted, with the road-bed, bridges, telegraph lines, and tracks, together with such other property and rights as the Government may deem necessary for the proper operation of the road, at any time after 10 years from this date, whenever the Government shall elect to exercise such right, by giving the railroad company or its assigns two years' notice of such intention to purchase," etc.

Mr. Bartholdt made the point of order that the amendment was not germane.

germane.

The Speaker, Mr. Thomas B. Reed, of Maine, said:

"The Chair understands that the Government does not grant a franchise to the road, but simply gives a right of way. It does not give a charter to the road.

* * The Chair will have to sustain the point of order."

The case that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Huddleston] cited was on a bill to construct a canal connecting the waters of the Pacific and the Atlantic Oceans. One crowd was squabbling in favor of the Nicaragua route and another in favor of the Panama route, and if there had been anyone around that happened to think it, and had suggested—— Mr. MANN. He might have mentioned the San Blas route.

The SPEAKER. Yes. So it was nothing except a squabble in that case about where they would have it.

This proposition before the Chair is an original bill simply providing for the diversion of some water above the Falls. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Huddleston] comes in with an elaborate scheme creating a bureau, and so forth and so on, which the Chair does not think is germane, and therefore sustains the point of order that the motion is not in order.
Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I make another motion.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Motion of Mr. Huddleston: That H. R. 20047 be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit. The question was taken, and the motion was rejected. The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division, and pending that I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and seventy-eight gentlemen are present, a quorum

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the demand for a division and ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the yeas and nays. All in favor of taking the vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand urtil they are counted. [After counting.] Thirtytwo gentlemen have arisen, not a sufficient number.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. Flood, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

There was no objection.

The bill (S. 7367) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the St. Francis River at or near intersections of sections 13, 14, 23, and 24, township 15 north, range 6 east, in Craighead County, Ark., was read, as follows:

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. Adamson, the DAM AND BRIDGE ACROSS MAHONING RIVER, LOWELLVILLE, OHIO.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Mahoning & Shenango Railway & Light Co., and its successors and assigns, to construct, complete, maintain, and operate a combined dam and bridge, and approaches thereto, across the Mahoning River, near the borough of Lowellville, in the county of Mahoning, in the State of Ohio, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, and amended June 23, 1910, and the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

That in addition to the provisions of the above-mentioned acts respecting alterations or removal of the structure herein authorized the right is hereby reserved to require its alteration or removal, at the expense of the persons owning, controlling, or operating the structure, in the event that the United States improve the Mahoning River for navigation or participate in the improvement thereof, and in the event that interests other than the United States improve the river for navigation the right is reserved to require alteration or removal of that portion of the structure built subsequent to June 14, 1916, the expense thereof to be a matter for adjustment between the persons owning, controlling, or operating the structure and those making the improvement.

Sec. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

expressly reserved.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. This bill is different from the ordinary, in that it provides for the authorization of a dam. I wish to inquire whether this is for the purpose of generating water power, or merely as an incident to the bridge?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. The concrete structure is placed there to back up the water so that they can use it for the plant. The river is very shallow, and they have to have a dam to back up the water in order to get the water to use. It is not for any hydroelectric purpose at all.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time,

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I think there is a Senate bill,
S. 8105, on the Speaker's table. I ask that it be laid before the House in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk does not find it, and it is possible that it has been referred to the gentleman's committee.

Mr. MANN. We can not do that. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, this bill will be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. ADAMSON. I ask that when the bill is found it may be considered.

Mr. MANN. We can not make any agreement of that sort now

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Arkansas desires to pass the House bill for fear that the other may not turn up. The trouble is he does not know whether it has been passed by the Senate at all, and I ask that the House bill be now considered.

Mr. MANN. I object.
On motion of Mr. Adamson, a motion to reconsider the votes whereby the several bridge bills were passed was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 18542, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to 'object, suggest to the gentleman that he make his request to take the bill from the Speaker's table and disagree to all of the Senate amendments except amendments numbered 5, 20, 61, 62, and 71. Then, I think, some one the other day asked also that Senate amendment No. 58 be excepted.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman from Pennsylvania made some inquiries about it, but I do not think he asked for a separate vote upon it.

Mr. MANN. Very well.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 18542, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and disagree to all of the Senate amendments except amendments numbered 5, 20, 61, 62, and 71.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report Senate amendment No. 5.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, of the printed bill, strike out all of lines 1 to 19, inclusive, which reads as follows:

Clerk hire, Members and Delegates: To pay each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, for clerk hire, necessarily employed by him in the discharge of his official and representative duties, $2,000 per annum, in monthly installments, $880,000; or so much thereof as may be necessary; and Representatives and Delegates elect to Congress whose credentials in due form of law have been duly filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of section 31 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall be entitled to payment under this appropriation: Provided, That all clerks to Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners shall be placed on the roll of employees of the House and be subject to be removed at the will of the Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner by whom they are appointed; and any Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner may appoint one or more clerks, who shall be placed on the roll as the clerk of such Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner making such appointments.

And insert in lieu of the matter stricken out the following:

And insert in lieu of the matter stricken out the following: Clerks to Members and Delegates: For clerk or clerks to each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, $2,000 per annum, in monthly installments, $880,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and Representatives and Delegates elect to Congress whose credentials in due form of law have been duly filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of section 31 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, are authorized to appoint a clerk or clerks from the date of the commencement of their terms respectively whose compensation shall be paid from this appropriation: Provided, That all clerks to Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners shall be placed on the roll of employees of the House and be subject to be removed at the will of the Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner by whom they are appointed; and any Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner may appoint one or more clerks, who shall be placed on the roll as the clerk of such Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner making such appointment and be paid in the same manner as other employees of the House are paid. And insert in lieu of the matter stricken out the following:

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House disagree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I have a preferential motion. move to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] moves to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

For a clerk to each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, at $1,500 per annum, in monthly installments, $660,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That such clerks shall be placed on the roll of employees of the House and be paid in the same manner as other employees of the House are paid and be subject to be removed at the will of the Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner by whom they are appointed; and to pay each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner for stenographic or other clerical services during the session at the rate of $75 per month, so much as may be necessary is appropriated. And Representatives and Delegates elect to Congress whose credentials in due form of law have been duly filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of section 31 of the Revised Statutes, are hereafter authorized to appoint the clerk at $1,500 per annum from the date of the commencement of their terms, respectively, and shall be entitled to the payment for stenographic or other clerical services during the session at the rate of $75 per month. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this amendment are hereby repealed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order.

What is the point of order? Mr. SIMS.

Mr. IGOE. That the amendment is not germane; that it seeks to change the matter that has been agreed upon by the two Houses

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] has stated the grounds of the objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims]. The amendment under consideration is one solely related to clerk hire, providing for the annual compensation of $2,000 per annum. The Senate in their judgment placed a limitation upon that, providing that these clerks should be placed upon the roll of the House and making them employees of Congress. amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims], which is now under consideration, to which objection is made that it is not germane, goes to the extent of creating an additional employee, namely, that of a stenographer during the sessions of Congress, who shall receive a special salary during that time. There is only one subject under consideration here, and that is Members' clerks receiving $2,000 per annum. thing in disagreement between the two Houses is not the sal-

Mr. MANN. There is nothing in disagreement between the two Houses in this amendment. The gentleman from Tennessee has moved to disagree, but there is nothing in disagreement yet.

Mr. STAFFORD. The only thing wherein there is any difference between the two Houses is that the Senate has seen fit to place these clerks on the permanent roll of Congress. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] attempts to divide up the subject and create, instead of one clerk, a clerk and an additional stenographer. That is not germane. Suppose there was a bill brought into the House providing merely for one clerk at $2,000 a year. The gentleman could not then come in and provide for an additional clerk, more than one, of a different character entirely, the employment being sessional. This provision relates to a clerk during the entire Congress. He might amend the provision so far as placing them upon the roll is concerned, but he could not create two or three or four additional clerks or stenographers to Members of Congress, to be employed during the session, as he seeks to do in the amendment which he offers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, what is pending before the House now is the Senate amendment, not the House provision alone. The Senate amendment strikes out the House provision and provides for clerical services to Members of the House. The Senate amendment proposes to appropriate a sum of money to be paid in certain ways and provides that the persons designated by the Members shall be placed upon the rolls and that the Member may designate one or more persons to be placed upon the rolls to be paid as clerks out of this fund, so that the provision that is now pending before the House—the Senate amendment—provides for one or more clerks as the Members may indicate. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] simply proposes to amend the pending provision by limiting the amount that may be paid to the persons who may be employed by the Members. It is clearly germane; it is modifying and carrying out the proposal of the Senate. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] makes the mistake of arguing that the House provision is before the House. It is not. It is stricken out.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but the gentleman will admit, on a motion to disagree, which is pending now, on a preferential motion, the question is whether the House insists upon its original provision or takes the Senate provision; and that gives us, under the guise of an amendment to the Senate, an opportunity to consider both questions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is correct; but the Senate provision broadens the provisions of the original House provi-sion to such an extent that amendments that might not be germane to the House provision are germane as amendments to the Senate amendments because of the character of the provision.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Did not the Chair hold when this bill was up for consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union under the item which is now in the bill as a House provision, or practically the same item, it was in order to offer as an amendment to that a germane amendment, to wit, the stenographic item?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I believe the Chair did, but I have not said much about that decision.

Mr. MANN. Well, I know I thought it was a bad decision at the time, but that is a precedent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That ruling was made, but the provision inserted by the Senate is so different and so much more comprehensive—not for one clerk, not a payment of Members' allowance for clerk hire, but a provision for the payment of clerks to be designated by the Member, either one or more as he may see fit. That is the difference from the original House provision which makes in order the provision of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the language placed in the bill by the House in the last four lines:

And any Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner may appoint one or more clerks.

Under that language the language before in the House amendment was under consideration.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Senate amendment is radically different in that it provides for the payment of clerks rather than the payment to the Member of the allowance, and provides that the Member may designate one or more clerks, so that the limitation of the gentleman from Tennessee upon the compensation and the time during which the same may be employed, in my opinion, is clearly germane.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] did not seem to understand the language of my amendment as to the second part of it. I did not provide in my amend-ment for the appointment of additional clerks or any clerk except one. The Senate amendment authorizes the appointment of one or more clerks. My amendment authorizes the appointment of one at $1,500, he to go on the rolls of the House, like the Senate amendment. Then my further amendment is that an allowance for stenographic and other clerical services be allowed to each Member of the House. The existing law is an allowance of $1,500 to Members for clerical services; but I propose in this amendment to change the Senate amendment in the amount paid to one clerk to be appointed by the Member as the clerk whose name goes on the rolls of the House, and an appropriation of $75 a month during the sessions of Congress to each Member for stenographic and other clerical services.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's amendment provides that a Member-elect may appoint clerks whose compensation shall be paid from this appropriation? the amount paid to one clerk to be appointed by the Member as paid from this appropriation?

Mr. SIMS. There is no change in the Senate language except making it only one clerk and making it $1,500, as far as that part of the amendment is concerned.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the gentleman has carefully considered it, and I have a conundrum to propound to him. The Senate language is with relation to Members-elect who have filed their certificates, and they are authorized to appoint immediately a clerk or clerks from the date of the commencement of their terms, respectively, whose compensation shall be paid from this appropriation. The date of the commencement of the term of the Member-elect who has filed his certificate is March 4 next. Now, the Senate amendment—nothing is ever carefully considered in the Senate relating to the House; it is a sloppy amendment at best in form—but the Senate amendment clearly provides that this increase in compensation shall commence on March 4. Does the gentleman's amendment do that, too?

Mr. SIMS. My amendment is simply a copy of the Senate amendment, except to the extent that I have mentioned. I suppose the Senate intended by its amendment that the payment of salaries should begin earlier than the House bill provided.

Mr. MANN. I do not suppose the Senate knew what it in-

Mr. SIMS. I do not care to discuss the point of order further if the Chair is ready to rule.

The SPEAKER. The Senate provision or amendment is:

Clerks to Members and Delegates: For clerk or clerks to each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, $2,000 per annum, in monthly installments, $880,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and Representatives and Delegates elect to Congress whose credentials in due form of law have been duly filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in accordance with the provisions of section 31 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, are authorized to appoint a clerk or clerks from the date of the commencement of their terms, respectively, whose compensation shall be paid from this appropriation: Provided, That all clerks to Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners shall be placed on the roll of employees of the House and be subject to be removed at the will of the Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner by whom they are appointed; and any Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner may appoint one or more clerks, who shall be placed on the roll as the clerk of such Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner making such appointment and be paid in the same manner as other employees of the House are paid.

That does two things. In the first place, it raises the clerk hire to $2,000. Then it provides that this shall be split up, if the Representatives so desire, and paid to a number of clerks.

Now, let us see what this amendment does. It says:

For a clerk to each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, at $1,500 per annum, in monthly installments, $660,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That such clerk shall be placed on the roll of employees of the House and be paid in the same manner as other employees of the House are paid and be subject to be removed at the will of the Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner by whom they are appointed; and to pay each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner for stenographic or other clerical services during the sesion at the rate of $75 per month, so much as may be necessary is appropriated—

And so forth.

This amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Srms] does two things. In the first place, it cuts the $2,000 down to $1,500, which is undoubtedly germane, and then it creates a kind of a new fund for stenographic purposes. It says:

And to pay each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner for stenographic or other clerical services during the session at the rate of $75 per month, so much as may be necessary is appropriated.

It creates a new office. The Chair does not think it is

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur by striking out the figures "$2,000," in line 22, page 20, and striking out the figures "$880,000," in the same line, and inserting the figures "$660,000."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. AUSTIN. Would the motion to concur in the Senate amendment be a preferential motion?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. IGOE. I make the point of order against the amendment that it seeks to change matter which has been agreed upon by both Houses.

Mr. AUSTIN. It has not been agreed upon.

Mr. IGOE. The amount of $2,000 which he wants to change has not been altered by the Senate. That has not been changed by the Senate, nor the total amount. It has been agreed upon by the two Houses, and the gentleman can not now by a motion to amend change what has been agreed upon by both Houses.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make the point of order it is not germane?

Mr. IGOE. I make the point of order that it is not in order, for the reason that the gentleman is trying by his amendment to change a matter which has been agreed upon by both Houses.

The SPEAKER. How did they agree upon it?

Mr. IGOE. Because in both amendments the amount of $2,000 and the amount of $880,000 have been agreed upon and passed by both Houses. The amounts are exactly the same in both bills

The SPEAKER. The House is trying to do exactly what the gentleman from Missouri seems to assert that it has done.

Mr. IGOE. The House has already in its amendment fixed $2,000 in its bill. The Senate has passed the $2,000. Now, the gentleman is trying by his motion to bring the House back again to a consideration of a matter which has been agreed upon by both Houses

Mr. MANN. It has neither agreed nor disagreed yet. Mr. IGOE. But if the two Houses have agreed upon something

Mr. FITZGERALD. But they have not agreed.

Mr. IGOE. Why have they not? Mr. Speaker, we have a bill here which the Senate—
The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The Chair has to hear this argument even if nobody else does. The trouble with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Igoe] is that he is trying to apply the rules to the next stage of the conference

Mr. IGOE. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] moves to concur with an amendment, and I make the point that his amendment is not in order. I submit he can only offer an amendment to a matter in dispute which has not been agreed upon by both Houses.

The SPEAKER. Now, what is it the gentleman contends that both Houses have agreed on?

Mr. IGOE. I contend they have agreed upon the clerk hire to the amount of $2,000 in monthly installments, and $880,000, and the gentleman is trying to change that by amendment.

The SPEAKER. What is the situation? The House passed the bill, and any amendment of the Senate that is germane is in

The Senate did not change it as to the amount. Mr. MANN, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's difficulty is, think, just as though the House had passed a bill fixing $1,000, 000 appropriation, and the Senate had passed a Senate bill for the same purpose, fixing $1,000,000 appropriation, and the gentleman would contend that inasmuch as both Houses had fixed $1,000,000 appropriation, hence neither House could amend the action of the other House. We have not agreed on the language.

The SPEAKER. We have not agreed on the language. Mr. MANN. They have stricken out our language and inserted other language. There has been no agreement or disagreement as vet

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana will report his amendment.

Mr. COX. On page 20, strike out "$2,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500," and in the same line strike out "$880," On page 20, strike out "$2,000" and insert in 000" and insert "$660,000."

Mr. MANN. Now, what is the motion?

To recede and concur.

The SPEAKER. The motion is to recede and concur.

Mr. MANN. Not recede, but concur with an amendment. On that I ask for a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. In the first place, the Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE].

Mr. MANN. All there is to it is a difference between receding and concurring; that is all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentle-

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's motion is to concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I ask for a division of the question so as to have the amendments voted on separately and then the question of concurrence voted on separately.

The SPEAKER. The question would come first on the amendment, then.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee and Mr. CALDWELL rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is in charge of the bill. The Chair will recognize him first.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I do not know that I will consume the five minutes allowed me.

When this bill with this amendment was going through the House I took occasion to express my views very forcibly against I can not bring my mind to the conclusion that we are justified in voting to increase the salary of our I have no words of condemnation against the clerk of any Member of this House. On the other hand, I know that these clerks do splendid work. I know in addition that a great many Members undertake to justify their vote on this increased salary upon the ground that our clerks and stenographers do not get as much pay as the clerks and stenograppers of the And yet I undertake to say that the clerks of the Senators and their stenographers are now being paid more than 99 out of every 100 of them can get in private employment to save their lives. I undertake to say that the vast majority of our clerks and our stenographers are to-day getting more money and better salaries for shorter hours of labor than they can get the private establishments to pay to save their lives.

In my opinion this is nothing in the world but an absolute voluntary contribution, deliberately voted out of the Treasury of the United States into the hands of our private secretaries, and voted at a time of impending danger, when the patriotism of every Member of the House wells to the front and compels him to vote every dollar of money that may be needed in order to support our Army and our Navy. This increase of $260,000 or $270,000 to our secretaries, of course it will be argued, is not much. It is not much as we count appropriations here, teeming into the millions. But in my judgment the time has come—it is here now; it is knocking at the door of every Member of this House; it is appealing to his conscience as well as to his patriotism-to conserve the resources of our Treasury in every way we possibly can, and we can conserve those resources here by adopting my amendment, which will save $260,000 or $270,000. If it would do any good, if it would bring any more effective or any more efficient service to us that would enable us to do more work, that would be a different proposition entirely, but it will not. If given this increase of salary from $1,500 to $2,000 per year, they will be no more efficient than they are now; not one whit more.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I will yield for a question.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does the gentleman mean to say that he gets all of his work done for the present allowance?

Mr. COX. No; I do not mean say that at all. I have not kept an accurate account of it, but I am satisfied that I pay out in every year something like $500 out of my own pocket; but I am willing to do it. There is nothing compulsory upon me to stay here in Congress at all. I can quit at any time I desire, and I am not willing to vote this additional burden upon the people of my district and the country that brings to me no help, no relief, if this $2,000 is voted in here to-day. Suppose the secretary gets it all? Can he do any more work for that $2,000 than he is now doing? I undertake to say he can not.

Now, as to the first proposition offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims], I was opposed to it in committee and I am opposed to it yet. But that would not be so vicious if they were put on the salary roll. I am heartily in favor of the amendment which I have offered, which will reduce this pay from the proposed amount, $2,000, to $1,500 a year, and I am most earnestly in favor of putting our secretaries on the roll and letting them draw their own money. So far as I am concerned, I hold my check just long enough to indorse it and then hand it over to my secretary and never see it any more. It is her money, and she has the right to have it. But I am in favor of putting these secretaries on the roll, and I am in favor of saving this $260,000 or $270,000.

The people should expect of us in these trying times to econemize in every way we can, even though we do it at our own expense of doing more work or paying for the extra work out of our own pockets. If our secretaries are not satisfied with their present salaries they can quickly quit and enter private employment, and when they do this few, and very few of them, will be able to earn $1,500 per year.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to my colleague [Mr. Sims].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I offered my amendment because I thought it was in the public interest and that it would promote the public interests by serving the Members when they have the greatest amount of public work to do.

Of course, I bow to the ruling of the Speaker, because I have to, but the remark of the Speaker was that my amendment created a new office. Undoubtedly the Speaker could not have read the language carefully. My amendment provides that $75 a month be paid to each Member of the House for stenographic or other clerical services. That does not create a new office.

The amendment proposed by the Senate puts the clerks on the rolls of the House directly, and my amendment allows $75 a month to each Member during the sessions of the House. I think the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] is exactly right When you appoint a $2,000 clerk you are going to about it. pay him $2,000, because it is the will of Congress that you should do it; and when a clerk is put on the roll at $2,000 and you are obliged to pay out any money for clerical services out of that sum you have to do it with the consent of the clerk, and the result will be that a Member will probably appoint a member of his family when he can, so that he can use that fund for the public interest by paying it out for expenses incurred in the discharge of his official duties.

Mr. COX. I will say to the gentleman that I have had opposition every two years in my district since I have been in Congress, but that opposition has not been successful.

Mr. SIMS. Everyone knows the old rule providing that you certify that you have paid or agreed to pay $125 each month is not a clean-cut fact, as we all know that our work is heavier some months than it is during other months. At the close of the session, for example, you must get through with your correspondence rapidly and you must have a lot of extra stenographic work and typewriting done, and you must have a lot of things attended to at the departments, and if we have only our clerk to depend upon for all that work we are compelled to for the extra work out of our own pockets.

Now, it is in the interest of the public that each Member shall serve his people expeditiously and well, and the idea is not simply to give some man in your district a job. When a Member has a $2,000 clerk, he will have an application from every county in his district for the place. I do not see that the public are interested in having a man worried to death about appointing some one who thinks by reason of this action of Congress that when he gets the appointment he can only be removed by the Member, and the Member would not dare remove him except for such a cause as would be so patent as to appeal to everybody in his district as being a just cause for such removal. It is wholly impracticable. The Senate amendment ought to be disagreed to. [Applause.] I voted against both amendments when they were offered in the House. But the other body, through a thinly disguised purpose to force us to be honest, have undertaken to legislate for this body along the lines involving an implication of dishonor and discredit to [Applause.] There are 33 ex-Members of the House in the other body, and I am surprised that they should send over such an amendment as they have. The Senator who had charge of the amendment pointed out about a dozen committees in that body that were absolutely useless, as he said, that carried a clerical allowance of about $5,000 to each Senator, upon such a useless, unnecessary, archaic committee; and then, to save us from discredit and dishonor they provided that we might appoint and remove our clerks, but that it would not do to trust us with the actual handling of the money with which to pay our clerical expenses. I repudiate and resent any such implication as that. And while the provision as it passed the House did not suit me, and does not now, and I voted against both, we certainly ought to be trusted to look to the integrity of our own Members, and we do not propose to concur in an amendment which if concurred in will be regarded all over the country by implication as in the nature of a confession, and that we are afraid to face the music. If there are any dishonest Members in this House who pocket this money, let us get rid of them. Let us have an investigation, for that seems to be the order of the day, by a special committee or otherwise, and bring out the facts before we legislate in a way that tacitly admits by such legislation that this charge or implication is true. I hope the Senate amendment will be disagreed to with energy and emphasis, and let us look after our own affairs in our own way, as they do. I think it is necessary to the proper cooperation of these coordinate legislative bodies that they should not act in such a way as by implication or otherwise to bring discredit on a single Member of either body. Let there be absolute proof of misuse of these funds before any such legislation is enacted. But in the interest of the public service, we need the most money for clerical assistance when we are doing the most work. Under the Senate amendment our clerks during the summer vacations would be getting $2,000 a year to stay at home and do absolutely nothing, while during the sessions of the House they would be getting all of the $2,000 allowed by the Senate amendments, while Members are paying out of their own pockets for every dollar's worth of extra clerical work they have done, and which they must have done or else neglect their official business.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HAMLIN. If I get the gentleman's idea, from what he says he objects to the Senate amendment because it places the clerks on the roll. Am I right?

Mr. SIMS. I object to the amount as well.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman objects to putting them on the roll.

Mr. SIMS. I do not object to putting them on the roll if it is done on our own initiative.

Mr. HAMLIN. I was going to say that the gentleman's amendment, as I understood it, did provide for placing them on

Mr. SIMS. One clerk at $1,500.

Mr. HAMLIN. What is the difference between putting a clerk on the roll at $1,500 and putting him on at $2,000, so far as putting him on the roll is concerned?

Mr. SIMS. There is no difference in so far as the implication is concerned. I admit that. But I wanted to have an opportunity to offer an amendment providing for extra money during the sessions of the House, and I did not think I could do it in any other way except by concurring in the amendment with an amendment without it being subject to a point of order. That is the only reason on earth I did it. Had it been held germane, in discussing it I would have said just what I have said now, not that I was concurring in the action of the Senate in saying that our clerks should be put upon the roll on the implication that it was not safe to trust us with the money.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL].

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, this matter has been very thoroughly discussed in this House. I think practically every Member has made up his mind what he is going to do about it. There is only one thing that presents itself to my mind now, and that is that when this question was being discussed in the Senate a certain Senator stated that the reason why this amendment was proposed was because a certain Representative over here, the chairman of one of our most important committees, had said this House would agree to it, or words to that effect. I understand from the Member of this House that that statement was not true, and I want to call attention to it now to give him an opportunity, without naming him, to come on the floor of this House and denounce the statement as not having been made by him. That is all I have to say about it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield back the balance of his time?

Mr. CALDWELL. I yield back the remainder of my time. The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields back three minutes. Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, when this matter was discussed in another place, which can not properly be referred to under the rules of this House, even in temperate and moderate language, this statement was made:

I desire to say that nothing was done until after I conferred with the chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the other House [Mr. FITZGERALD]. I knew it was a very delicate matter, and so I conferred with him. He said he did not think the House would have any objection to the provision, and we would go into conference and thresh it

That is all that is pertinent to what I wish to say. Mr. Speaker, I myself do not make a habit of repeating what is said in private conference with another person when I appeal to him, or when an appeal is made to me for information about any matter. Whenever I do believe it to be necessary to state what occurred in such conference I take particular care to see that what I say accurately represents what was said.

The statement which I have just read is inaccurate. It is not only inaccurate as to what I said, but it is inaccurate as to what actually happened. After the Senate committee had determined to amend this provision a Member of that body called at the room of the Committee on Appropriations and stated that the Senate was proposing to make this modification; that some Members of that body were fearful that the House would resent any attempt on the part of the other body to interfere or to regulate its affairs; that before doing anything definite he desired to ask my opinion as to what the attitude of the House would be. I stated to him that there was very emphatic opposition among Members of the House to a provision placing the clerks of Members on the rolls. I named two Members of the House, prominent Members, one upon each side, who, I informed him, had repeatedly in the past vigorously opposed any such provision, and that I was confident if the matter were brought up in this way they would follow their course on former occasions. I said that my own personal opinion, as far as I was personally concerned, was that I was indifferent and would as lief have clerks on the rolls as not, but I made no attempt whatever either to commit the House or to indicate in any way that Members of the House desired the Senate to interfere in the matter or would acquiesce in any action taken by the Senate.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, I know that Members of the House resented the suggestion that I had attempted in any way to have the affairs of this House regulated by the other body, and if I had done so, their resentment would have been justified. I have some cause for resentment myself, that anyone should quote me as favoring action upon the part of another body to do something that I knew would be resented, and that I made it as clear as I could, would be resented if attempted. [Applause.]

I suppose one moral that recent events in the Capitol seem to emphasize is that whenever the chairman of any committee of this House holds a private conversation with another person he should make certain to have witnesses present. [Applause.] But, Mr. Speaker, so that there may be no misunderstandingand I regret that it is necessary to repeat the statement-the reported conversation with myself upon which the remarks of my colleague from New York were based was wholly inaccurate, and an unjustifiable report of the conversation that took place. [Applause.] I wish to make it as clear as I can that I attempted so far as I could, so far as I know the English language, so far as I understand the meaning of words, to make it clear that if the Senate attempted to do what it has always resented emphatically when done by the House—that is, to attempt to interfere with the affairs of the House, that the Members of the House would be equally sensitive and perhaps somewhat more emphatic in resenting the action of their body than the Senate has been on similar occasions. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley].
Mr. Sherley. Mr. Speaker, there is involved in this matter a good deal more than the question of clerk hire. The rules of the two Houses that provide that Members of one House shall not in debate speak of what occurs in the other, and the practice that has always existed of one House not interfering with matters peculiarly relating to the other, has a basis of sound reason, as was well set forth in that unfortunate debate that was held in the Senate. The very moment each House undertakes to be the guardian of the morals of the other House there will be engendered bitterness between the two Houses that will result in the energy and time of Congress being expended in personal quarrels rather than in the consideration of the public

And this House, without regard to the amendment of the Senate, ought to say that it is able to take care of its own affairs [applause], and emphatically disagree to the amendment of the Senate; and that position should be maintained until the Senate proceeds to acquiesce in the House position touching matters that relate solely to the House. [Applause.]

Just another word further. It seems to me that Members of Congress ought to have reached the point where they are not willing by their action to express the view that they believe they are men of such doubtful character and such doubtful honesty that all manner of safeguards must be thrown around them to prevent their misappropriation of money. Men here are required to deal with matters involving millions of dollars. If they are fit to be Members of this body, they at least ought to be men of such character that they can be trusted to honestly expend $1,500 or $2,000 in connection with clerical hire in the performance of their public duties. [Applause.] I for one resent the imputation, no matter where it comes from, that unless provision is made for putting clerks upon the rolls they will not receive the money that is due them. If there be any Member who has not paid to his clerk the money that was due him, I do not know it, and I am quite sure that if the fact became known his constituency can be depended upon to deal with him as the facts may warrant. This I do know, that there have been a number of gentlemen, myself among them, who have not believed in the wisdom of placing clerks upon the rolls. A clerk to a Member bears a confidential relation; he must be a man with whom he may think aloud, and if for any cause there arises a situation whereby that man is no longer desirable or suitable as a clerk, the Member ought to be in a position to instantly terminate that very confidential relationship. To require him to have to send word and to go through the inconvenience and delay of having the name taken from the roll and another one substituted is to require something there is no reason for, unless you believe that you and your colleagues are unfit to be trusted with the expenditure of $1,500 or $2,000. I have not yet reached that point where I am willing to think that either of myself or of my colleagues in this body. [Applause.]
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman

vield?

Mr. SHERLEY, Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have just come in, and have listened with interest to the gentleman from Kentucky. I notice there is this proviso on page 21, line 5:

Provided, That all clerks to Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners shall be placed on the roll of employees of the House and be subject to be removed at the will of the Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner by whom they are appointed.

I understood the point that the gentleman was making was that they could not be removed. What does the gentleman say respecting the impossibility of removing them?

Mr. SHERLEY. I did not say it was impossible to remove them, but I said a Member ought not to be put to the inconvenience of going through that prescribed process. Congress has adjourned, for instance, we will say, and a Member has reason to change his clerk—be the reason a good one or a bad one. He is required under the form that has been prescribed to send word to the Clerk of the House to have the name of the clerk changed on the roll, and, presumably, if this does not come at the end of the month there must be an apportionment of salary and a good deal of inconvenience and nuisance. The only basis that I can find for doing such—and it was, unfortunately, made the whole basis of the speeches in the Senate—is that there are some men here in Congress-and the newspapers and magazines have so stated—who are not honestly spending this money, and in order to make these men honest they propose to have this regulation. Men who are charged with matters of the highest responsibility, matters involving the honor and the safety of the Nation, have come to such poor estate that, forsooth, they must be tied with restrictions to keep them from misappropriating $1,500!

Personally, I voted against the increase of salary of clerks, and am still opposed to it. The House decided otherwise, and I accept its action, and I insist we do not need the Senate's advice.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Goon].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana. This provision is somewhat complicated. I think it ought to go to conference. The motion made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byens] ought to prevail, in my opinion. But I am not in sympathy with what is stated by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley], that we always ought to follow this rule of courtesy and that the House should never object to an item which the Senate puts in for its own employees, and that the Senate should never question an appropriation for House employees, no matter how vicious it might be. We have followed that courtesy, and I am glad, for one, that the Senate has violated it and has established a new basis for operation as between the two Houses of Congress.

Let us see how it is operated as a matter of fact. Ten years ago we appropriated for clerk hire and messenger service for the committees of the Senate $132,240. Last year we appropriated $426,380 for the same purpose. For assistants to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, 10 years ago we appropriated $57,000, and recently because of this courtesy we have increased this appropriation to $105,000. What is the net result? Ten years ago we appropriated for clerk hire for Senators and for committees in the Senate a total of $225,840, or an average per Senator of $2,508. Last year we appropriated for the same purpose $533,980, or an average per Senator of $5,562. That is what courtesy has done so far as these two branches are concerned. We have been stingy with ourselves; we have gone down into our own pockets and paid for work that the Government received the benefit of, and we have allowed the Senators to take all they wanted, and they have wanted a good deal.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I have not the time.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It will take only a moment,

Mr. GOOD. There is another item in this bill to which I desire to refer. Take the great committees of the two Houses on the Post Office and Post Roads. Everyone knows that the House committee conducts the hearings, considers the legislation, and reports to this House, and that it does the work. What are the relations as between the two bodies so far as clerks and assistants are concerned? The Senate Committee on the Post Office has a clerk at $2,500, an assistant clerk at $2,000, two assistant clerks at $1,440 each, and a messenger at $1,440, or a total of $8,820. The House committee, which does the work, is provided with a clerk at $2,500 a year, an assistant clerk at $1,500, and a janitor at $1,000 a year, or a total of $4,900. The Senate this year by an amendment to the bill added another assistant clerk to this committee at $1,440, which will give them in all a total of $10,260, as against $4,900 for the House. So far as I am concerned, Senatorial or House courtesy will not permit the Senate to get away any longer with that kind of outrage upon the Treasury. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not that I question the need of reform in the Senate. We could spend days pointing out similar instances, but because in undertaking to correct in this way one abuse you will run into much greater ones that will involve very seriously the proper conduct of the public business.

Mr. GOOD. I agree with the gentleman. I wish it could be done in some other way, but now that the Senate has initiated the reform the House can well afford to carry it on. They have cleaned house for us, and I agree to their proposition. Now we should clean house for them. [Applause.] Ten years ago, for each Member of the House, counting committee employees and the clerk hire in committees, there was an average allowance per Representative of $1,887. Last year we appropriated an average per Representative of $1,910. Ten years ago there was a like average allowance per Senator of $2,508. For the same purpose this year the Senate gets $5,562 per year per Senator. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield me one minute more?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. GOOD. Now, Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection at all to these clerks and employees being placed upon the rolls-I think they should be-but I do insist that this provision ought to be gone over carefully. It ought to be ironed out by the conference committee. I think we ought to vote down this amendment and motion and support the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns]. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield me five

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, friendly relations officially between the two houses of a legislative body consisting of two houses are quite essential for orderly legislation and to the enactment of good legislation. It is an easy matter to get up some controversy between the two Houses, and it would be a constant matter of controversy if either of the two Houses should undertake to run or manage the other House. The Senate is the most extravagant legislative body on earth. [Applause.] And I think that this amendment shows it is the most impudent legislative body on earth. [Applause.] And yet after this effort of the Senate to regulate our affairs I do not think we can afford to make up our minds to regulate their affairs. We necessarily have to pass in the first instance, because bills originate here, upon the number and pay of the employees of the Senate. But we ought never to think that it is our duty to regulate the extravagance in the Senate because, while we might save a few dollars out of the Treasury, the resultant effect would be controversy and ill feeling between the two Houses which might cost the Govern-ment not only millions of dollars but defeat proper and needed legislation. You can not do well with two partners who are constantly quarreling personally, and no legislative body can do good work with the two partners engaged in personal quarrels. If I had my way about it, I would not only disagree to the Senate amendment but I would adhere to the disagreement [applause], and tell them to attend to their own knitting and we will protect our own honor. There is not as much danger of our honor being injured as theirs. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Howard]. [Applause.]

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, far be it from me [laughter] to reflect in the least on that august body at the other end of the Capitol. I would not say anything on this earth about their extravagance. I do not say they are extravagant; other gentlemen say that. I would not mention anything about the little luxuries they have that we poor Congressmen can not have, because we would be ashamed to spend the people's money for them. I would not mention that mineral water nor free shaves and violet-water baths and things of that sort in the same breath with them. I would not say anything about that, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] is right about this thing, nevertheless. [Applause.] It is a ticklish piece of business you are fooling with here. Be ye careful. Temper even your thoughts. Above all, humble yourselves. I know, as every other Congressman in this body knows, that the people of this country are not fooled about their public servants. They know that the House of Representatives is a sort of clearing house for all legislation initiated in this Government. All good legislation originates here, and they know it. [Applause.] They know that we do most of the work, and they are not fooled about it. They know that 90 per cent of the legislative brains of this country are in this end of the Capitol. [Applause.] They not only know it now, but they have known it for 20 long years, that the real wheel horses that do the drudgery of legislation are in this end of the Capitol.

I want to address myself to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox]. He wants to reduce our clerk hire to $1,500. I say the people of this country realize that the Members of the House are the dynamic forces of legislation; that all this legislation that has been mentioned by the gentleman from Illinois originates here, and we have got to pass on it, and that the Senate has practically nothing to do but what the distinguished gentleman from Texas does on a great many occasions on this floor, and that is say "Amen." [Laughter and applause.] on this floor, and that is say "Amen." [Laughter and applause.] Now, I realize that the people of this country want efficiency. I am speaking for myself and my people when I say that the people of the fifth congressional district of Georgia will not begrudge me an adequate amount to get efficient clerk hire to transact their business, and I am not afraid to vote for the $2,000, and I am going to do it. [Applause.] Another thing. I never had any guardian appointed for my honesty before I came to Congress, and I am not going to have the Senate appoint one for me now. [Applause.] If I can not spend $2,000 honestly that is intrusted to me, I think you ought to remove me from the Committee on Appropriations, where I participate in spending millions for the benefit of the Nation. Now, there is no use being afraid of this thing. I know that two-thirds of the House here are not 30 seconds ahead of the sheriff with a common-law judgment. They are poor men. [Laughter and applause.] There is no use to deny that. There used to be a time in the Congress of the United States when it did not make any difference whether a Congressman got $500 or $5,000 for clerk hire. This used to be the millionaires' club. It is to-day the poor man's retreat. [Laughter and applause.] I am not able to spend $500 or $600 out of my salary for clerk hire, and my folks do not want me to do it, and I do not propose to vote for any amendment put on this bill in the Senate. Repudiate it! Their arrogance and pretended dignity needs a severe shock.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, just a moment on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] reducing the clerk hire from $2,000 to $1,500. I thought that matter was settled in the discussion had in the House some time ago. It should have been settled. There may be Members who have been able to employ a sufficient number of clerks or clerks of sufficient caliber or ability to do the work incumbent upon Members' clerks for $1,500 a year, but most of us who have been here for any considerable length of time have found it very difficult to employ a really first-class clerk for $1,500, and many of us have been compelled, year after year, to pay a very considerable sum out of our private funds for the purpose of carrying on the public business intrusted to our charge.

There has been some comparison made here between the allowance of Members of the House and of the Senate for clerical help. There are some Members of the House who represent the same territory and the same population as is represented by two Senators. Such Members have been struggling along with an allowance of $1,500 a year for clerical assistance, while Senators have been assisted by a clerical force drawing a total of from $5,000 to $8,000 a year for much the same services that Members are required to perform for their constituents. I do not complain because the Senators have been thus provided for, but I think the House has been exceedingly parsimonious. It has been very difficult for those of us who represent large areas and scattered populations to take care of the interests of our constituents as they should be cared for. In fact, most Members thus situated have been compelled to pay from their private funds for additional clerical help. I regret that we did not provide, in addition to the $2,000 for a clerk, $75 a month for a stenographer, at least during the session. If that provision were made, we would then make such provision with regard to clerk hire as many Members have been compelled to make by paying out of their private funds enough to make up the necessary expenditure for clerk hire above the allowance of $1,500.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, how much time is there remaining?

The SPEAKER. Twenty minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to have a minute to call attention to some expenditures made in the Senate. The report of the Secretary of the Senate shows as follows:

	May 4, 1916 (p. 337), dinners for 16 pages	88 00
	June 23 (p. 336), heirs Head Waiter Shaw (S. Res.)	450 00

	If the House can beat that, it is traveling some. That	comes out of the United States Treasury.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes

conferees are concerned the Members at the other end of the Capitol will never get that proposition in this bill. I think it is an unwarranted piece of interference, and I am delighted to see the House so unanimous on this one proposition.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry? Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Can the gentleman inform the House whether the Senate conferees refuse to recede from their amendment to this?

Mr. SISSON. This has never been to conference, and I will say without hesitation I am absolutely sure the Senate will not insist for one single moment on that amendment. imagine it would do any good, because the position which they occupy in this matter was clearly stated by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], that although the Senate end of the Capitol is extravagant, at the same time we have respected in the committee and we have respected in conference every item they have put in the bill and have never questioned it hereto-fore. And I am glad that the criticism is now made of that end of the Capitol.

It is not our province under the law, under the organization of the two Houses, under the Constitution itself. We are the judges of our own organization, of our own expenses, and the judges of our own relations. It is up to those gentlemen at that end of the Capitol to deal with their constituencies as to the expenses of their own body, but it is equally true that that right is our own. What I most resent is that there were statements made on the floor of the Senate which insinuated that there were Members of the House who were acting dishonorably and dishonest with their clerk hire. I do not know how other people feel about it, but so far as I am concerned I will never agree to put these clerks on the pay roll of the House, and especially under the circumstances that now confront us. I do not care so far as my own clerk is concerned, because I have always indorsed the check to him, and he collects every cent of it and I do not see a cent of it. But I am unwilling that the Senate shall be the custodian of the conscience of the House or any Member of the House. And I agree pretty generally with what the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Howard] said, that when you take the honesty of the Members of the House and their reputation throughout the country, and measure it with that of the Senate, it stands comparison, and I do not think we will be called upon to make as many explanations as

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Miller].

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, a man who will not respect himself will hardly command respect in other quarters. The amendment which the Senate has seen fit to write into this bill is unwarranted, inexcusable, and almost inexplicable; but if the gentlemen here will undertake and take occasion to read the record of the discussion in the Senate at the time this amendment was made, they will find some Senators who favored it did so because they were earnestly importuned to do so by certain Members of the House. Now, I do not know who those Members were. I do not know how many of them there were, whether there was one, or a dozen, or one hundred. But apparently some of the suggestions, at least, for this unparalleled amendment came from some of the membership of the House. It is for that reason I wish to voice my protest against it, and particularly against some of the remarks that were made on the floor of the Senate when this was up for discussion. If some of those remarks had been made by a private citizen, he would either have to make good on them or stand as a defendant under a warrant for criminal slander. The remarks made by certain Senators transcended all the proprieties of decency or legislative courtesy. I trust the membership of this House will, without a dissenting vote, with disapproval say that this kind of unwarranted interference will not again occur. [Applause.]
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Wheeler].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, after I had introduced this amendment, increasing the salaries of the secretaries to Memamendment, increasing the salaries of the secretaries to Members, quite a number of Members on both sides of the House expressed themselves that they would be glad to support that amendment if we would certify the names of the secretaries and place them on the roll. Had such an amendment been introduced at any time while that bill was under consideration I would have supported it, and had it occurred to me when I introduced that amendment, in all probability I would have embodied it in ry amendment. But under no circumstances would I support that proposition now as coming from the Senate.

It is not a question of expenditure at this time, but it is a reflection upon every Member of this House for the Senate to attempt to dictate as to how we should manage our affairs; and it does seem to me that if the Senate should devote one-half of its time to its own affairs and the other half of its time in keeping out of affairs which pertain only to the House, it would be busy all the time. [Applause.] The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I made a motion to disagree to Senate amendment No. 5 for the purpose of putting the bill and all the Senate amendments into conference, and as one of the conferees of the House it will, of course, be my duty to represent the views of the House without regard to any personal views I may have with reference to this or any other amendment.

So far as I am personally concerned, I take it that most of the Members know where I stand. I was opposed to the increase in the clerical allowance for Members of Congress, and I voted against the increase for clerical allowance. I did so for reasons that are not necessary to enumerate here now. One was that I did not think the condition of the Treasury at this particular time would justify an increase of that kind. I voted that way contrary to my own personal interests, because I say to you gentlemen that ever since I have been a Member of Congress I have paid a second clerk out of my own pocket. I have found it necessary to do that in order to properly and promptly carry on and perform the business of my constituents who have the right to command my time and attention and also to look after my many legislative duties here.

In addition to that I have always believed that Members' clerks ought to be on the roll. [Applause.] Not because I think it is necessary to protect the honesty of any Member of this House. I do not believe there is any foundation for the insinuations that are made in the newspapers throughout this country or the statements which found expression in another place in this Capitol with reference to some Members not using all the clerical hire for the purposes for which it was appropriated. I believe that the Senate did the House a service when priated. I believe that the Senate did the House a service when it put the amendment on this bill. [Applause.]

I dissent from the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] when he said that it was possibly inspired by Members of this House. I take it that there was not a single Member of this House who approached any Senator upon the subject. The clerks to Senators are upon the roll. They are paid directly out of the Treasury. Why should not the clerks of Members be paid directly out of the Treasury. the clerks of Members be paid directly out of the Treasury? [Applause.] I say that this should be done not in order to see to it that these clerks get the money actually appropriated, because I repeat that I do not believe there is foundation for the statements made in the newspapers—and we have all seen them—to the effect that there are Members who do not use all the money for the purpose for which it is appropriated. But in view of these statements in the newspapers and in view of the insinuations that are made here and there, I believe the Members of Congress owe it to themselves to put these clerks on the roll and put a quietus forever on such statements.

I have in my hand a clipping from a daily newspaper printed a few days ago, to the effect that Members of the House would get $2,000 more salary, while the Senators would be compelled to eke out on a salary of $7,500. Therefore I say, in justice to ourselves and in order to put a quietus on statements of that kind, that these clerks should be put on the roll. If we do not, then those who have professed to entertain suspicions of some Members, will have their suspicions strengthened by our failure to do so. And those who fail to vote to have their clerks paid directly out of the Treasury, rather than through the Members themselves, may have to answer in the future as to why they insist on this allowance being paid directly to them, rather than to the clerks for whom it is appropriated and to whom it belongs. I call for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question right there?

Mr. MANN. I withdraw my demand for a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee demands a vote. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] withdraws his request for a severance of the proposition. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] to concur in the Senate amendment No. 5 with an amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that that amendment be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will again read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Cox: To concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, striking out "$2,000," on page 20, line 22, and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,500," and in the same line striking out "$880,000," and inserting in lieu thereof "$660,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. COX. A division, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. A division is demanded. The House divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 196.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the other amendment, numbered 20.
Mr. MANN. Oh, no. We have not disposed of your motion

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] to nonconcur in Senate amendment numbered 5.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adhere to its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 5.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House adhere to its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 5. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. COX. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 221, noes 13. Mr. COX. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were refused, seven Members, not a sufficient number, rising to second the demand.

Accordingly the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report Senate amendment No. 20.

The Clerk read Senate amendment No. 20, as follows:

Page 37, in line 25, after the figures "$12,000," insert "Assistant to the Secretary, at the rate of $5,000 per annum, from March 1, 1917, to June 30, 1918, both dates inclusive, $6,666,67."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendment No. 20.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. Mann) there were—ayes 197, noes 4.

Accordingly the motion to nonconcur was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report Senate amendment No. 61.

The Clerk read Senate amendment No. 61, as follows:

On page 120, line 4, insert the following:

"The office of postmaster in each class shall hereafter be a nonpolitical office and shall be within the classified civil service, and appointments thereto shall be made in accordance with the civil-service rules and, so far as practicable, by promotion or transfer upon merit, without regard to politics, from the employees of the Post Office Department, subject to the permanent civil-service regulations and requirements."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. I offer a preferential motion. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. MOON. I move to concur in Senate amendment No. 61 with an amendment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's motion is preferential. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] moves to nonconcur. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] moves to concur. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon moves to concur with an amendment, which is a preferential motion. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon].

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Moon moves to concur in Senate amendment 61 with an amend-

Mr. Moon moves to concur in Senate amendment 61 with an amendment, as follows:

Insert, following the word "retirements," line 10, page 120, the words: "Provided, That postmasters now in office or who may be appointed before the 30th day of December, 1917, shall not be subject to removal except under the laws, rules, and regulations now existing, or subjected to examination under civil-service rules and regulations: Provided, however, That in special cases, at any time where the Postmaster General deems the same necessary, he may direct a civil-service examination of any postmaster in the service, and if such postmaster on examination be found incompetent the Postmaster General shall then order a competitive civil-service examination for postmaster at such office, and shall designate an acting postmaster to serve until such examination is had and permanent appointment made: Provided further, That from and after the taking effect of this act no postmaster shall serve as such for more than eight years of continuous service, and no person shall be designated as postmaster who has not been a patron for 12 months of the local office to which he is appointed immediately prior to appointment."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman permit me to suggest that the amendment should be modified to read "after the Senate amendment "?

Senate amendment "?
Mr. MANN. "By adding."
Mr. FITZGERALD. The amendment should read "by adding to the Senate amendment."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a motion to concur with an amendment, which should come in the first line of the Senate amendment. Can I offer that now?

Mr. MANN. There is only one way in which that amendment can be offered, and that is by demanding a division of the motion to concur with an amendment. Then, when the division is ordered, the Senate amendment is open to amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] moves to nonconcur in the Senate amendment, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] makes a preferential motion to concur in the amendment with an amendment. Now, the gentleman from Florida demands a division of the question. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon].

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the Loes seemed to have it.

Mr. COX demanded a division.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, is not this amendment subject to debate? I understood the gentleman from Tennessee that he would yield some time for debate.

The SPEAKER. No one seemed to want to debate it. How much time does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to his colleague?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will yield 10 minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, when the House is dividing how can there be debate?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet to yield to the gentleman from Tennessee and had turned to him, asking him how much time was wanted, when the Chair put the question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the House is entitled to debate the amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. I make the point that debate is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order of the gentleman from Alabama does not apply until after the division. The Chair likes to be fair with everybody. No one seemed to want to debate it, the Chair thought, and the Chair wanted to expedite business

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, would a motion be in order to offer a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon]?

The SPEAKER. If it is germane to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I move the following substitute for the Moon amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The office of postmaster in each class shall hereafter be a non-political office, and shall be filled by appointment for a term of four years, said appointment to be based upon a certificate of election issued by the proper election authorities showing that the applicant for the office of postmaster had been chosen by a plurality of the legal voters who were patrons of the post office and the rural routes served thereby at a regular election when other local or county officers were chosen, and that the names of the candidates for postmaster were printed upon ballots without party designation.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that that is not a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon].

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, there is one question on which I disagree with the Democratic Party and with the Republican Party. Both of those parties declare for civil service. I do not believe that the civil-service law is to the interest of the American people where that law carries with it, as does the present law, a life tenure in office. [Applause.] If the time shall ever come when this Government must fall, it will be by the work of its own employees. We now have over half a million men, nearly all under the civil service, except the marshals, collectors, and district attorneys. And when that period in the history of this country shall come, as it may come, with fanaticism running wild among thousands of voters in all the parties, as it does to-day, when this Government takes con-trol of the administration of affairs of all the railroads, telegraph, and telephones, you will have created a power in this Government that, under the control of an ambitious presidential administration, will hand this Government down to the party in power year after year, regardless of the will of the people, unless there is a counterbalancing influence exercised at the ballot box by the enlargement of the popular power over Federal officials.

But while that is all true, the sentiment of a few men who believe, as I do, that this civil-service doctrine, with life tenure, is violative of the fundamental principles of the American Government, can not and will not prevail. If it is proper that officers who are ministerial in their character shall under the law go under the civil service and be given a life tenure; if it is proper that that part of the postal officials of the Government that are not merely ministerial but executive, so far as a part of their duties are concerned, shall go under the civil service; if it is proper that 43,000 men now under the civil service as fourth-class postmasters should go under the civil service under Executive order, placing them in power without examination; if it is proper that hundreds of assistant postmasters, put into the civil service without examination, nearly all of them of the opposite faith from the party now in power, shall be retained under civil service, it is not unfair nor is it illogical, but perfectly logical, that the men now occupying the positions as postmasters who may occupy that position within the 12 months following, which is necessary for readjustment, should remain in office under civil service, not for life, but for a fixed term of years.

What would be the effect of it? Take this amendment No. 61 by the Senate, and what is the logical effect of that amendment? That amendment will cover into the service by operation of the civil-service law every postmaster in the United States to-day. If you adopt this amendment, it will also give an opportunity to the Postmaster General to cover first, second, and third class post offices under the civil service. Now, I do not propose for a moment to say to my friends over here that I believe in a kind of civil service that will appear exactly fair to Republicans. They have had their time. The offices ought to go to Democrats

now

I believe the law ought to treat all men of all parties fairly, but I believe that the party that is dominant, I care not which it is, that is clothed with the right and power to administer this Government, can not do it except through its friends, and therefore this amendment would enable an administration that desires to do so to put Democrats into every one of these offices, and when the Republicans come back into power there is a provision in the civil-service law by which they can all be put out and Republicans put in, by the clause authorizing the President to suspend the operation of the law. That is the exact situation. The amendment provides for nothing more, so far as that part of the amendment is concerned, than the proposed Senate amendment apparently provides.

But there is something more to this amendment, and as to that part I feel most deeply interested. I do not believe that any proposition ought to go unchallenged that puts any man in office for life, whether he be a Democrat or a Republican. [Applause.] I have, therefore, provided that these men shall not serve longer than eight years. There is another provision here. If this amendment passes, the men now in the department-and this act does not seem to discriminate between departmental employees and postal employees—may be transferred from the department down here on Pennsylvania Avenue and be made postmasters anywhere in the country. There is a diversity of opinion in regard to that. The Civil Service Commission thinks the word "department" would cover the field The Attorney General, I understand, thinks otherwise. But whatever their judgment may be upon this subject, it is true that we ought not to inaugurate under the law a migratory class of carpetbaggers in the post offices everywhere throughout this country. [Applause.] Therefore, I provided in this amendment that the man appointed must have been for at least 12 months a patron of the office to which he is appointed. The power of appointment is vested in the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and you can not make a law that will take from the President, under the Constitution, the right of appointment or nomination, nor can you make a law that will encroach upon his executive discretion in determining who that appointee shall be. You have no power in the premises nor the right to dictate. ever influence you may exercise comes as a courtesy from the President. He stated in the campaign, as did Mr. Hughes, that he favored the civil service. You ought to help the President keep his promise under the law.

I." Mr. Hughes had been elected, you would need to have helped him to keep it. I believe on this question of civil service they are both wrong; but that makes no difference. The policy of this Government has been established otherwise. Let your administration keep faith with the people upon this question. The President said he is going to keep faith, and I know he will do so. I hold here in my hand a letter that I shall put into the Record, that shows his views upon that question. If you do not permit him to keep faith with the people in accordance with the pledges he made, he has the power to protect himself and his word. He says, I am advised, that if you do not pass a civilservice law as to first, second, and third class offices he will not nominate another postmaster to the Senate until that applicant has been examined under the rules of the civil service. It is true he could not force the Civil Service Commission to examine applicants, but he could have it done otherwise if they did not do so voluntarily. He will name not one of three highest making the best grade in an examination but he will name the first man on the list or the first woman on the list, whether Democrat or Republican, to be postmaster. That is the feeling and the attitude of the administration upon this question, as I understand it. My own judgment is that the Executive ought not to be forced to this attitude, that you ought to pass an amendment that will enable at least the selection from the first three upon the list, and that the representatives of the people should have some voice in this question, even if only by courtesy, to the end that all patronage in this Government shall not finally be placed in the hands of the Senate of the United States, without any consideration on the part of the representative American public.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, personally, I do not care anything about this. As political good faith we ought to help carry out this policy as indicated in my amendment. It is the wisest policy under a law which itself is unwise. We ought to do the best we can to sustain the pledges of the Executive.

Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the letter of the President and of the Civil Service Commission upon this subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letters referred to are as follows:

SHADOW LAWN, N. J., November 4, 1916.

GEORGE T. KEYES,
Secretary Civil Service Reform League,
79 Wall Street, New York City.
Contember 26 I wish to

To Wall Street, New York City.

Siz: In reply to your letter of September 26 I wish to state that the Postmaster General in his annual report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1914, recommended to Congress the enactment of legislation which would permit of the extension of the classified civil service so as to include the position of postmaster at offices of the third class. The following year he not only renewed this recommendation but asked that the position of postmaster at offices of the second class be included as well, but no action has ever been taken by Congress on those recommendations. In his annual report for the fiscal year just ended he will not only renew his recommendation for the legislation mentioned but will ask that it be extended to offices of the first class as well.

I am thoroughly in accord with the recommendations of the Postmaster General, and they have my hearty approval. You understand, however, that the classification of the position does not classify the incumbent, and the person holding the position at the time it is classified will be subject to the same competitive test as others who may apply. When these positions are classified the Postmaster General will be able to fill many of them by promotion from the clerical grades; also by the promotion of postmasters who have demonstrated their ability from a smaller office to one of greater importance.

Sincerely, yours,

Woodbow Wilson,

WOODROW WILSON.

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION, Washington, D. C., February 6, 1917.

United States Civil Service Commission,

Washington, D. C., February 6, 1911.

Hon. John A. Moon,

House of Representatives.

Dear Judge Moon: In response to your verbal inquiry of this date as to whether or not the language of Senate amendment 61, page 120, classifying postmasters, would bring the incumbents within the classified service, I have the honor to invite your attention to section 6 of Civil Service Rule II, as follows:

"6. * * a person holding a position when it becomes classified and subject to competitive examination shall have all the rights which he would acquire if appointed thereto upon examination under these rules, but he shall not be transferred without first passing the examination provided by the commission."

In the absence of any action by Congress or the President to the contrary, the incumbents would have a classified status in accordance with the provisions of the rule just quoted.

As to your second inquiry whether or not the language "employees of the Post-Office Department" refers to promotions or transfers only of those persons employed in the department at Washington, D. C., it is my opinion that the language includes all employees of the Postal Service generally. However, the construction of this act would not rest finally with the Civil Service Commission, but with the Attorney General. The act of June 22, 1906 (34 Stat., 449), prohibits a transfer from one executive department to another until after three years' service, and the Attorney General (26 Op., 254) held that the words

"executive department" referred to an executive establishment within the immediate jurisdiction of a Cabinet officer in Washington, D. C., and not to local post offices, pension agencies, etc. There are other opinions of the Attorney General with this same holding in other matters. If the language were changed to read "employees in or under the Post Office Department," there could be no question raised as to its meaning.

Very truly, yours,

Chas. M. Gallowar,

CHAS. M. GALLOWAY, Acting President.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Steenerson]

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, the proposition involved in amendment No. 61 of the Senate is evidently drawn by some-body who knows very little about the subject. This is a bill to provide for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government. In that bill is always carried the salaries of the department officials and clerks, including the Post Office Department. It is done for this purpose. The Post Office Department is not a part of the ordinary Postal Service. The ordiment is not a part of the ordinary Postal Service. The ordinary Postal Service is always provided for in the Post Office appropriation bill reported by the Post Office Committee. This amendment No. 61 provides that the postmasters of the first, second, and third class shall be appointed without regard to politics from the employees of the Post Office Department, subject to civil-service regulations and requirements. The fair and reasonable interpretation of that language, in view of the separation of the two bills, would be that you would have to select every postmaster in the United States from the employees of the Post Office Department down here on Pennsylvania Avenue, because it does not provide, as stated by the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office, that the appointments shall be made from the Postal Service. I hope that was in the mind of the proponent of this amendment, but it does not say so. It seems strange that it should be offered as an amendment on the legislative bill. It has no place there. If it is proper anywhere it is on the Post Office appropriation bill, which is not yet back from the Senate. I am opposed to this proposition in this form or in the form in which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] offers it. Although I profess to be a friend of civil service, yet I do not believe that the people of the United States would be satisfied with being served by postmasters imported from a strange community. I do not believe we should make a law that would make it possible or necessary to appoint them from outside the community which they serve. This makes a permanent class of officeholders. They would hold for life. There are 9,191 presidential offices in the United States, and they would be added to the advocates of retirement legislation. These postmasters would be here represented by some legislative agent at the very next session, probably wanting to be retired on half pay, and instead of being a proposition for economy it is one that will impose extra expenditures upon the people. I hope that all on this side will vote to nonconcur in this proposition. It is a half-baked proposition; it is one that has no right here; and it is one that should be voted down.

Mr. BYRNS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Page].

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] offers, as well as the amendment inserted in the bill by the Senate. I doubt very seriously whether there is a Member on this side of the House who under this Democratic administration has had any greater personal embarrassment in dispensing the patronage and appointment of first, second, and third class postmasters than have I, and yet I do not be-lieve that it is either practical or that such service can be improved in the slightest degree by placing these officers of the Government under the civil-service rules. The trouble will not come to me again, since I retire very shortly; but I do not believe that you can select for these positions men as competent or as satisfactory as those who are the patrons of the office—as satisfactory to the department of the Government or to anyone else through any civil-service examination that can be devised in the brain of man as may be obtained by personal selection. [Applause.] This is not a clerical position. Men who serve in the first, second, and third class post offices of this country hold administrative positions, and I do not believe that the civil service should extend or apply to any administrative position or office in the Government. [Applause.] I do not hesitate to say that while I would not abolish the entire civil service, I believe that when the people of this country commission one political party, whether it be this or that, to administer the affairs of this Government, that they mean that that particular political party shall administer them; and I believe that now they ought to have the privilege, if it is a privilege, of naming the men who shall administer them and that they should have the responsibility also of the Government. I do not know but what utes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN].

something has been said or intimated here that the President of the United States, unless the Congress places these men under the civil service, will cover them under it by some order of some kind. As one member of the Democratic Party and of this Congress, I want to know since when has one man been commissioned, whether he be the President of the United States or whoever he may be, to lay down the policies of a political party? [Applause.] It seems to me that we are going far when we acknowledge that the party is going to follow a line of principles laid down by any one man, whoever he may be or however great or high may be his office. [Applause.] That is the function of the party in convention assembled, to write the policies of the political party, and no party, so far as I know, has in this way committed itself to this extension of the civil service. I shall oppose by my vote the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee as well as the amendment which has been placed in this bill by the Senate, and I say to the membership of this House that no method can be devised by which these men can be selected by a civil-service examination that will put men as well qualified to administer the office of postmaster in the various first, second, and third class offices as are now being placed under the present arrangement. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gillett].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I favor this amendment of the Senate. The distrust which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Page] has expressed of the President of the United States has been expressed by the action of that side of the House in the last four years whenever a matter came up which affected the civil service. They would not leave the administration of the civil-service law to their own President. They insisted on taking out from the civil service deputy collectors, marshals, and various other offices, although the President already had the power to exempt them, if he wanted to exercise it. They would not trust him to give them what spoils they wanted, although apparently they might have trusted him, for he always approved the spoils legislation which they passed. And now, Mr. Speaker, when he has all the power which this amendment of the Senate gives him, the majority in the Senate, apparently distrusting him, again try to take it out of his hands and enact it into law. They do not trust him either way, either to exempt from the civil service or to cover into the civil service.

Now, I agree with the gentleman from North Carolina that the best way to select administrative officers is not by competitive examination. You can select better men by personal selection, if you will. But we all know we, as politicians, will not. Congressmen will not as a rule select the best men, but those who have the most influential support. And the question has long come to this: Do you get better men by examination or do you get better men by patronage? I believe you get vastly better men by examination in the long run. And you all know you will, in your hearts. You know that when you come to appoint a man you can not appoint him according to his merits, but under political pressure.

I felt skeptical originally when they began to extend the civil service outside of the mere clerical appointments. I questioned the wisdom of the first classification of fourth-class postmasters by President Roosevelt. I did not believe it would work. experience has shown its worth. We now select scientists and specialists in various lines and fourth-class postmasters by competitive examination, and I think experience has again and again proved that while examination is not an ideal way, it is a better way than to trust it simply to politics. And I will be glad to see all of the post offices taken out of politics.

The Postmaster General will, if he is consistent, have all the present postmasters subjected to an examination, because that is what he did with the fourth-class postmasters, and I do not see how he can possibly refuse to do the same when it comes to the higher post offices. But whether he does or not, I am willing, despite my reluctance to see many present incompetent occupants of post offices continue-I am willing, for the sake of having a system established which I believe is infinitely better than the present one, to sacrifice my present feeling and allow the Democrats to stay in office. It does not make much difference in the long run; it does not make any difference in any particular place whether he is a Republican or Democrat.

Take my own city, where they appointed the chairman of the Democratic city committee as postmaster.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield three min-

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to Senate amendment No. 61, and I am not very much enamored of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon]. I do not believe that either is practicable. I do not believe that it is wise to place the post offices of the first, second, and third classes under the civil service. It seems to me that if you will only think for a moment, we must all agree that it would be a very great mistake from a business standpoint.

I have no desire to dispense patronage. No man in the House has suffered more than I on account of it. It has given me much trouble, but I am certain that placing these offices under the civil service will not afford us any relief. The fourth-class offices have been under the civil service for some years, and every time an examination has been held in my district and a postmaster appointed on his examination I have been blamed and criticized by those who were not pleased with the appointment, they pretending to believe that I could have secured the appointment of some one else if I had wanted to do so. In other words, they would not believe that the man was appointed upon merit.

There were a few disreputable newspapers in my district—papers that care nothing for the truth, but whose sole object was and has been for some time to arouse criticism of metold the people that the fourth-class postmasters were not appointed under the civil service but that the Congressman, in fact, made the appointment. This same thing would be true if the first, second, and third class offices were placed under the civil service; but I do not care so much about that as I do about the good of the service. The management of the post offices with receipts running from several thousand to millions of dollars a year is a "man's job." Would it conduce to the efficiency of the service to throw the position of postmaster open to a competitive examination? I think not. Let me cite you one case as typical of thousands of similar cases throughout the country, and I would be glad to have Members hear what I say.

Under the civil-service rules, as I understand it, the maximum age at which an applicant could take the examination is 45 years. There is in my district an office where the receipts approximately $60,000 a year. The postmaster in charge of that office is too old under the regulations to take the civilservice examination, but he is a successful business man of 40 years' experience. I have never heard a word of criticism of his administration of that office, notwithstanding he has been in charge of it for nearly four years. If this Senate amendment should become a law, he would have to step down and out; and even if the age limit could be waived, some young fellow just out of school, perhaps, only 21 years of age, without business experience, could run rings around this postmaster in the civil-service examination, but would that test show that he would be as competent to manage a $60,000 a year business as the man now in charge of it? The question answers itself. There is not a man in this House, if he had his money invested in a business the receipts of which amounted to $60,000 a year, would place in charge of that business a young man without business experience when in doing so he would displace a man of 40 years' successful business experience. That is just exactly what would happen if the Senate amendment should be adopted. The truth is, Mr. Speaker, that if the civil service applied to the position of Postmaster General and applicants for that place should be required to pass a competitive examination, some young fellow, perhaps without any business experience whatever, would succeed the present Postmaster General. The proposition put to us by the Senate is ridiculous in the

I trust that in the interest of the service the amendment of the Senate will be overwhelmingly rejected.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, every successful business in the world is successful because the men who conduct it are trained in the business. And the Post Office Department of America is the only great business enterprise that I know where men are appointed to conduct it who know nothing whatever about the business. And the time has come when the American people are going to insist that this great department of the Government shall be conducted by men trained in the work. You men on the Democratic side of the House owe it to the President of the United States to sustain him in his recommendation to put this department of the Government under business man-agement. The Postmaster General, in whom you all have such great confidence, has recommended year after year that this department be taken out of politics and placed under business management. Are you going to sustain your President, or are I more to the gentleman.

you going to repudiate his recommendations? Are you going to continue to live under the spoils system, or are you willing to begin to conduct the affairs of the Government on a business Every man in this great department ought to be promoted from place to place because of his knowledge and not because of his politics; and from the lowest to the highest place. including the First Assistant Postmaster General, the men who occupy these places should be men who have earned the right to occupy them by their knowledge and experience and not because of their political pull.

Mr. DALLINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I can not yield. And so, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the Senate amendment places before you for consideration a business proposition, and your vote will determine whether you are in favor of conducting the business of the Government along scientific lines or whether you still favor the continuation of a policy that brings the departments of the Government into disrepute and carries on the business in the slime of politics. I do not care what the man's politics may be who occupies a Government place. If he is qualified to perform the work, that is the only condition that I impose upon him. If he is clean, if he is able, if he is honest, if he has the interest of the people of America at heart, if he knows the business for which he is employed and can conduct that business along scientific, systematic business lines, I submit to the House that that policy ought to be adopted which will place and continue such a man in office. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, five minutes afford scant time in the remaining hours of this session to discuss such a question as is now put up to the House by this amendment-half baked, somebody called it.

Think of it! The office of postmaster of the various classes shall be a nonpolitical office. Now, then, what next? If you will read it through, you will find that from the Post Office Department in Washington-not in the Postal Service, but in the Post Office Department—they shall be competent for promotion as postmasters without civil-service examination.

It is bad enough as things are now. We have got the civil service for clerical positions, letter carriers, rural carriers, great armies of people. Now, let me tell you: I believe that the Congress of the United States, legislating for the Government, should be careful about the further extension of the classified civil service. [Applause.] Why, you could select all these postmasters, according to this provision, from people in the Post Office Department.

Well, you may say it does not mean that. Perhaps not. Perhaps the wise body that placed it by way of amendment on this bill did not understand what it did mean. But I want to call your attention to the civil-service employees. We have labor unions. Take the postal employees; take the clerks in the departments; take the clerks in the post offices; take the the departments; take the cierks in the post office, that letter carriers, the rural carriers, the railway post-office clerks, under the civil service, serving 100,000,000 people. They join Mr. Campars's Federation of Labor. What has it led to? Without much of consideration to whatever is demanded in the increase of salaries. And you may say, "What do we care for that?" Well, I am about as courageous as any of you gentlemen [applausel, but perhaps I am not courageous enough to stand against the fire of people so organized. My notion is that perhaps the first allegiance of all Government employees is to the Government. But that is another question.

Now, it does not mean in an administrative office that a man should be able to calculate the distance of the earth from the moon, and this and that and the other problem. [Applause.] A man by the name of Johnson, a farmer out in my district 50 years ago, who could not read or write, raised a family that were industrious, and he died in the fullness of time, leaving his property. There was a neighbor near by by the name of Jones. Johnson came in one day and I said to him, "Brother Johnson, how is Jones?" "Oh," he says, "Jones has got lots of land, and a good lot of steers and hogs, and he is a good farmer." I said, "I am glad to hear it." I said, "How are the children getting along?" He said, "Do you know, Cannon, he has sent those gals and boys of his over to Asbury College, at Green-castle, and," he said, "they will come out damned eddicated idiots," [Applause and laughter.] And they did. [Renewed laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Make it five! The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee yields three minutes more to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Three minutes more; somebody says "five."
Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, I consent that my two minutes shall be given to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. CANNON. Now, a Republic like ours must succeed from time to time by the organization of people who differ about the proper policies and the majority controls. [Applause.] I want to say that in all administrative offices I believe that the party in power, being responsible, should have its friends in office. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. That is the correct doctrine.
Mr. CANNON. I know I may not meet the views of the doctrinaire. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon], speaking of our President, as I understood him to say—although that is the first I heard of it—said that unless this legislation is en-acted in the closing hours of this session—and it is impossible to enact it and do it intelligently-in the future he will not appoint any postmasters. Is that right?

Mr. MOON. The Clerk has the letter of the President. If the gentleman from Illinois has no objection, it can be read.

Mr. CANNON. I have no time for that, but let me say one thing: Woodrow Wilson, your President and mine, is a great A wonderfully great man. [Applause.] But I want to say, with all respect and without abuse to him personally, that the House of Representatives, with 435 Members, and the Senate of the United States, with 98 Members, constitute the legislative body chosen by the people, and God knows-and it is not with malice, but with sorrow I say it-more and more under our Presidents-President Roosevelt and under our President Taft and under our present President, who can give them both cards and spades in bossing Congress [laughter]—the President has sent the flat out and is controlling legislation. Great Heavens! want to see the House of Representatives, whether it remains permanently Democratic or not, do its own work. You are as patriotic as we are, and you think you are wiser [applause], and it may be; but whether you remain in power or we come into power I want to see the Congress of the United States do its legitimate work of legislation. [Applause.] Therefore I trust that when this legislative bill passes the Senate amendment will disappear from it. [Applause, and cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, there are three propositions before the House. The first is a motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] to disagree to the Senate amendment. I am in favor of that. [Applause.] The second proposition is the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to concur in the Senate amendment, which, if enacted into law, and if the law and the rules of the Civil Service Commission are lived up to, will keep in office every postmaster now in office for the balance of his life. I am opposed to that. [Ap-

The third proposition is the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] to concur, with an amendment. If that becomes law and the Post Office Department and the Civil Service Commission comply with that, and the rules of the commission, then every man now in office and every man who will be appointed to a postmastership between now and the 31st day of December, 1917, will remain in office for eight years. I am opposed to that. [Applause.] What reason have they given for changing the system of appointing postmasters which has been in vogue for 50, 75, or 100 years? Do they claim that under the Republican administration we did not have competent postmasters? Nobody makes that claim. Do they claim that under Mr. Wilson's administration we have not obtained efficient postmasters? Nobody makes that claim. Why, then, should the system be changed? It has given the country competent, efficient officers, who have given efficient and satisfactory service. I am opposed to the changing of this system in appointing postmasters more than I would be to changing the system of appointing any other officers under the Federal Government, because the postmaster comes nearer in touch with, is more the servant of, the people of his community than any other officer under the Federal Government, and the people in that community ought to have some voice in saying who shall be their postmaster. [Applause.] If I were going to change the system of appointment I would rather go toward a system that would give the patrons of the post office more power and more voice in the appointment than to go toward the other system, as is proposed here, that would deny to the patrons of the office any voice at all in the appointment.

Will the gentleman from North Carolina undertake to say that it takes away any privilege from the patrons of Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; for eight years under the gentleman's amendment-

Mr. MOON. Oh, no

Mr. KITCHIN. Wait a minute. The gentleman's amendment requires that the present postmasters be put in the classified service, and that every incumbent now in office and every man whom the Postmaster General or the President shall appoint before December 31, 1917, shall remain in office for eight

Mr. MOON. It says this, too, which the gentleman has overlooked, that postmasters shall not be appointed except from the patrons of the office.

Mr. KITCHIN. It says that the appointee must have been a patron of the office for at least 12 months. He may be a man who could stand a better examination, if they had an examination, and yet he may be a man that no other person in the community would indorse if the people had a voice in the appointment, either directly or through their Representatives. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] appealed to us on this side, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] on that side appealed to us to vote for one or the other of these propositions to concur, on the ground that it is our duty to help the President keep the promises he made to the people before the election. I say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] and to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mappen] that neither the Senate proposition nor the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee enables the President to keep the alleged promise that he made, but forces him, if he acts in accordance either with the Senate amendment or the gentleman's amendment, to violate the act and rules of the Civil Service Commission or else to violate the promise which gentlemen say he made. The Senate amendment, under the rules and regulations of the civil service and under the act itself, keeps in office every man now in office during the balance of his life, without examination, without being put to the test, in violation of both the spirit and letter of every civil-service act we have ever put upon the statute books; and the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] if enforced according to its terms and the rules of the commission, keeps in office, without competitive examination, for eight years every man who is now in office and every man whom the President shall appoint, without competitive examination, from now until December 31.

The President never made any promise of that kind to the people, because the President would know that it would be a wrong upon all parties in the United States. Here is what the President said he was in favor of. Let me read it. This is from the letter which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] has put into the Record, a letter addressed by the President to Mr. Keyes, secretary of the Civil Service Reform League, 79 Wall Street, New York City. What is any real good civil-service reformer doing living in Wall Street? [Laughter.]

This letter was written just before the election, November 4, 1916. Speaking of the Postmaster General's report the President said:

In his annual report for the fiscal year just ended he will not only renew his recommendation for the legislation mentioned (putting in the classified service second and third-class post offices), but will ask that it be extended to offices of the first class as well.

I am thoroughly in accord with the recommendations of the Postmaster General and they have my hearty approval. You understand, however, that the classification of the position does not classify the incumbent, and the person holding the position at the time it is classified will be subject to the same competitive test as others who may apply. may apply.

Not one of the amendments before the House will enable the President to carry out that proposition he makes in the letter, Mr. MOON. If we pass this law and make it the duty of the President to enforce it, then is it not his paramount duty to carry out the law of Congress, which will relieve him of any

Mr. KITCHIN. That is what I am telling you. You will either make him violate his pledge to the Civil Service Reform League, or else force him to violate the act of Congress

Mr. MOON. Would you object to Democrats holding on for the next eight years?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; but I want them to get the office in the future like they have in the past. The gentleman from Tennessee was appealing to this House for a law to help the President keep faith with the people, or rather with the Civil Service Reform League, and yet he is not helping him by his amendment, but in my opinion his amendment will prevent him from

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] has charge of the time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. KITCHIN. The President further says in the letter that the law he wanted of classifying the post offices would enable the Postmaster General "to fill many of them by promotion from the clerical grades" without further examinations.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.
Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman a question. The President has the appointing power. Suppose the President should require that postmasters undergo an exemination, how, under this law, would that prevent him from appointing those whom he says ought to be appointed after ex-

Mr. KITCHIN. You can not prevent him from doing it; but you can pass this act with Senate amendment or with the Moon amendment and put him in a position of violating the act and will of Congress and the rules of the commission, the act which he himself has signed, if he should require examination thereafter. You do not want to put him in that position, do you?

Mr. BURNETT. No. Mr. KITCHIN. Of course, we do not. I do not want any Democrat, and I do not want any Republican devotee of the administration, to be fooled into voting for the Moon amendment or the Senate amendment, on the ground that it is helping the President to keep faith with the Civil Service Reform League. It will make him violate either that faith or this act.

Mr. MOON. Then the gentleman from North Carolina puts himself in this position, and no other—that he wants no Democrat or Republican here to sustain the President in anything, Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman has not prepared a proposition that will sustain the President's position taken in that I am opposed to the Senate amendment, I am opposed to the Moon amendment, but I am in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byens], who has charge of the bill. I am in favor of the system of appointing postmasters as it is right now and has been for a century. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States made his pledge before the election and has made the same statement since the election. The amendment of the Senate carries out exactly the pledge made by the President. seen this House under the control of our Democratic friends change its principles on great public questions and grovel in the dust at the behest of the President of the United States. I have seen it change its position on foreign relations at the demand of the President of the United States. But after all, there is a limit to the power of the President. He may require the Democrats to bow the knee on questions of principle, but when he tries to take a job away from one of them his power is evanescent and gone. [Laughter and applause.] You are willing to yield to him your judgment, your legislative authority, your place as a representative of the people in disposing of great public questions, but you are not willing to let him keep you from appointing a man to a $900 job. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, there must have been some unexpected recent arrangement by which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] has been commissioned as spokesman on this floor for the President of the United States. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MANN. I always defend him when he is right, which

Mr. FITZGERALD. I always fear the Greeks bearing gifts. Possibly Members on this side of the House have not been congratulating themselves as heartily as the gentleman from Illinois indicates at the freedom accorded to them in the selection of postmasters during the last three years. [Laughter.]

I have had a great number of appeals made to me to support this amendment, appeals made by eminent citizens in all parts | of the country. They have been made to me because I am what is known as a civil-service reformer [laughter], and naturally the appeals which have emanated from the leading reform organizations of the country, and the leading reforms have been directed to me, to exert my influence on behalf of the Senate amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Senate amendment is fraught with great evil to our system of government. I believe in the system of party government—a system in which political parties promulgate specific principles and policies, and, if selected, carry those principles and policies into effect. My experience has been that many distinguished civil-service reformers are engaged in a profound and comprehensive attempt to break down all political organizations and to set up the individual and the individual idea of policy in preference to the policies and principles of political organizations, and to that system of government I am unalterably opposed. [Applause.]

I have had some experience with civil-service men. years I have served on the Committee on Appropriations and listened to men in responsible positions under Republican administration outlining the policy of the administrations and advocating the appropriations to be made to carry on the poli-cies outlined. Because of the ill-devised system of civil service under which men in responsible positions, men who are compelled to determine and to dictate to a very considerable extent the policies of the administration, have been continued in office, many Republicans have been appearing before the same committee outlining the policies and dictating the manner in which the public business shall be conducted under a Democratic administration. We would have had much more satisfactory results if Democrats in harmony with the Democratic President and Democratic administration had been occupying these offices.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden] stated that this is one of the great businesses in the country where men are not trained to administer it, and where men are appointed without regard to the training which they have received. Mr. Speaker, there is not an intelligent business man in the United States conducting either a great business or a small business who would contemplate for a single instant supporting legislation that would give a life tenure to the most important men in his business who had not been selected with regard to their training to conduct it, and which would deprive him of the right to change his personnel at will.

My experience has been that those selected because of politicalservice or for partisan reasons for important public offices make better, more efficient, more competent officials than those selected through the medium of civil-service examinations. There is something else necessary than mere ability to pass an examination for efficient administration. Some of the most essential qualifications can not be ascertained as a result of examinations, and many who obtain the highest marks in examinations lack most completely the essential qualifications for successful administrators.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to add that I hope the good, sound sense of the House will save us from the disastrous effects of such legislation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, there has been a good deal of criticism upon this side of the House of the majority side for following the President of the United States in his recommendations to Congress. Now, when the Democratic Members have gotten religion, want to depart from the error of their ways, and act in accord with our own views, they are condemned by certain Republican leaders in this House. I am not so unkind, so ungenerous. I congratulate the Democratic Members for exercising their independence upon this proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentlemen upon that side never did exercise that independence, did they?

Mr. AUSTIN. I am going to do it, especially where there is an appropriation or an office involved. [Laughter.] It has been mentioned here that President Wilson and Gov. Hughes both committed themselves upon legislation of this kind. I want to state that neither one of them was commissioned to make that declaration in the platforms of the political parties which nominated them. Our beloved colleague, Mr. Madden, of Illinois, one of the ablest and most successful business men of the Middle West [applause], we find now insisting upon civil-service examinations in selecting postmasters; but in his long and successful business career he has never inaugurated a civilservice system in his own plant. [Laughter.] We are told that the great political leader of the administration, our former colleague, whom we all love so fondly, Postmaster General Burleson, is at the head of this great movement in the interest of the uplift and civil-service reform. I would have some faith in him as a civil-service reformer if he had inaugurated it four years when these 10,217 offices were filled with Republicans. [Laughter.] I want to say in absolute good faith and frankness that four years from now we are going to make every one of those 10,217 excellent Democratic postmasters walk the plank-15 of them in the district I represent. [Applause and

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dickinson].

IMr. DICKINSON addressed the House. See Appendix.1

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute and a half to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Langley].

[Mr. LANGLEY addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon the pending motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] to concur.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, upon that I ask for the yeas and

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of taking this vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Forty-three gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number.

Mr. MANN. What makes the Chair say not a sufficient number?

The SPEAKER. On the basis of the last vote.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, that was an hour ago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can demand the other side.

Mr. MANN. But I do not ask for the other side.

The SPEAKER. Those opposed to taking the vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Two hundred and thirty-four Members have risen. Forty-three is not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] to concur.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] to nonconcur.
Mr. MANN. The vote upon the motion to concur is in effect a disagreement, is it not, where the House refuses to concur?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. The amendment is not concurred in. The Clerk will report the next amendment. No. 62.

The Clerk read as follows:

In order to promote economy in the distribution of supplies and in auditing and accounting, the Postmaster General may designate districts and central offices in such districts through which supplies shall be distributed and accounts audited, but in no case shall the postmaster at the central station be given authority to abolish offices, to change officers or employees in offices included in such district.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House nonconcur in amendment No. 62.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report Senate amendment No. 71.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House nonconcur in Senate amendment No. 72.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The Chair announced the following conferees: Mr. Byens of Tennessee, Mr. Sisson, and Mr. Good.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION RILL

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20632, the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. Page of North Carolina in the chair,

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20632, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20632) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY.

Medical department: For surgeons' necessaries for vessels in commission, navy yards, naval stations, Marine Corps, and for the civil establishment at the several naval hospitals, navy yards, naval medical supply depots, Naval Medical School, Washington, and Naval Academy, and toward the accumulation of a reserve supply of medical stores, $1,121,740.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I think in the strenuous times we are now experiencing that there is no more important measures than the Army or Navy bills that could be brought before Congress. I am in receipt of a letter to-day from one of the companies in my district engaged in steel manufacturing, which I would like to have the Clerk read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the letter in the time of the gentleman from Michigan, The Clerk read as follows:

ALBION, MICH., February 6, 1917.

The Hon. J. M. C. Smith, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Smith: In these strenuous times the writer rather wishes to offer his services and the services of our plant, which now has a pay roll of something over 200 men and is able to turn out wire and ironwork, such as steel equipment for the Army in the nature of racks, troughs, and other sheet-iron equipment.

Our machine shop is fairly well equipped with lathes, millers, and shapers and can handle small machine work very nicely.

If we can be of help in any way, kindly feel at liberty to call on us, and if you will, kindly notify the proper person.

Please feel at liberty to call on the writer for anything that we can do.

can do.
With very kindest regards, I remain,
Yours, very truly,
UNION S

UNION STEEL PRODUCTS CO. (LTD.), GEO. E. DEAN, President and General Manager.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the finest institutions in Michigan. In these trying hours for the Nation I commend the gentleman, Mr. Dean, for his lofty Americanism, his high citizenship, and unexcelled patriotism. It is such spirit that makes our Republic invincible. that the greatest peace advocate in the United States, Mr. Ford, of Detroit, has offered his plant with 35,000 employees to the Government in case of war to manufacture munitions. I do not know, but I hope and pray that we will not be obliged to go to war; but if we do go into war the fiber and manhood of Michigan's best blood will fully respond, as it did in the days past, and in like manner, as during the Civil War, when it had a population of 750,000 people and sent 90,000 troops to the front from that State alone. At that same ratio and pro-portion it could now raise an army of 400,000 men. Now, I can not say, after listening to the argument somewhat closely of gentlemen who have spoken upon this bill, that I am in complete accord with expending so many hundred millions of dollars for warships alone, and not giving more attention to the aeroplane service, to the submarine service, to fighting with fire, to fighting with liquid air. It seems to me that these modern devices should have more attention, and I base that upon the fact that there is nearly one-half of our present fighting force of ships that are tied up to the docks for want of men in order to operate them. Instead of building more warships and dreadnaughts, if I had my way, I think more attention should be given to recruiting the Army and recruiting the Navy, so that we could use the warships we now have but no men to operate them. Mr. Chairman, if we must strike, everything should be done that human ingenuity could do to make that war effective and our Navy and our Army successful. We are not going into any boy's play. To me it was a serious thing to break off relations with a great country, and it will not be any easy matter to establish those relations again. coming to a time, whether it be for the purpose of war or whether it be for the purpose of adjustment after the war, when we will need an Army and a Navy that can back up our position. It does not make any difference whether we remain neutral or whether we are called upon to fight, we will be called upon at the end of this war, whether we are in or out, to regulate our affairs to the adjustments and readjustments of the settlement made. Under any and all circumstances it behooves us to be ready. Mr. Chairman, it is an honor and a privilege to present this patriotic letter. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS.

Pay of the Navy: Pay and allowances prescribed by law of officers on sea duty and other duty, and officers on waiting orders, $15,333,156,42; officers on the retired list, $2,940,368,72; commutation of quarters for officers on shore not occupying public quarters, including boatswains, gunners, carpenters, sailmakers, machinists, pharmacists, pay clerks, and mates, naval constructors, and assistant naval constructors, $675,679; and also members of Nurse Corps (female), $1,000; for hire of quarters for officers serving with troops where there are no public quarters belonging to the Government, and where there are no tufficient quarters possessed by the United States to accommodate them, or commutation of quarters not to exceed the amount which an officer would receive were he not serving with troops, and hire of quarters for officers and enlisted men on sea duty at such times as they may be deprived of their quarters on board ship due to repairs or other conditions which may render them uninhabitable, $4,000; pay of enlisted men on the retired list, $492,657,34; extra pay to men reenlisting under honorable discharge, $1,400,000; interest on deposits by men, $12,000; pay of petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and apprentice seamen, including men in the engineers' force and men detailed for duty with the Fish Commission, 68,700 men; and pay of enlisted men of the Hospital Corps, and for the pay of enlisted men detailed for duty with the Naval Militia, $26,835,914,67; pay of enlisted men undergoing sentence of court-martial, $225,000, and as many machinists as the President may from time to time deem necessary to appoint; and hereafter the pay of warrant officers while on shore duty during the fourth three years service shall be $1,750 per annum; and 6,000 apprentice seamen under training at training stations, and on board training ships, at the pay prescribed by law, $550,400; and as many machinists as the President may from time to time deem necessary to

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. GARDNER rose.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not desire to take the gentleman from Massachusetts off the floor, but I assume he wants to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment. Does the gentleman care to argue the point of order or reserve the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the point of order. There are several new items of legislation in the paragraph just read which I would like to have the gentleman explain the necessity for. For instance, the last paragraph in the bill provides for an advance of pay, not exceeding three months' pay in any one case, may be made to officers ordered to and from sea duty and to and from shore duty beyond the seas. What is the occasion for that phraseology?

Mr. PADGETT. That has been going on ever since the Navy was organized. This is known as "dead horse." An officer is ordered into a foreign country, and the department advances him three months' pay, and we simply express in this language here what has been going on ever since the Navy was organized.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I will ask the chairman if the desire was not expressed to have it put in this language?

Mr. STAFFORD. This is nothing more than confirming a regulation of the department that has been in existence for

Mr. PADGETT. Many, many years.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. A hundred years at least. Mr. STAFFORD. It does not provide for any increase in salary. It only provides for an advance allowance of a part of Mr. PADGETT. That is all.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inquire as to the new phraseology at the bottom of page 33, providing for pay of warrant officers

Mr. PADGETT. I can not answer that better than to read to you from the hearings:

Mr. McGowan. That is to correct a manifest clerical error which has existed for quite a long time in the pay of warrant officers. The pay of warrant officers is based on the first 3 years, the second 3 years, the third 3 years, and fourth 3 years. Now, after the first, second, and third 3 years it jumps up regularly every three years, because presumably a man is worth more; but there is no jump for the fourth 3 years. It remains at $1,625 until the fifth 3 years, but in the next 3-year period it takes two jumps, or goes $250 at one jump. That is evidently a clerical error, and I should very much like to correct it.

Mr. BUTLER. That does not increase the salary. Mr. PADGETT. It increases it $125.

It increases it $125.

Mr. STAFFORD. It divides up the $250 increase over the two periods?

Mr. PADGETT. Into $125 for each one.
Mr. STAFFORD. Just one further inquiry, and that is as to the new language as found in lines 22 and 23 authorizing the President to employ as many machinists as he may from time to time deem necessary. Or is that old language?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. According to the bill I have it is new language, and I was wondering whether under that language the President would be authorized to employ large numbers of machinists.

Mr. PADGETT. That has been always the law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order with those explanations.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws a reservation of the point of order. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, line 20, strike out "$26,835,914.67" and insert "$30.-435,914.67."

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is adopted it will enable each enlisted man of the Navy to receive $5 more pay a month. If it is adopted, it will be necessary to adopt two more amendments in order to complete it. of them is subject to a point of order. If it is rejected, I shall not attempt the other amendments. The reason I believe the enlisted men of the Navy ought to receive $5 more a month apiece is this: We have authorized 77,956 enlisted men in the Navy of the United States. We were short on February 1, according to Admiral Palmer, 24,500 men. In other words, out of every three men necessary to man our ships we had only two. That is why we had to put six battleships "in reserve on May 12 last and three more in October, in order to man our dreadnaughts and a destroyer division. We reduced the crews of those nine battleships 60 per cent each. We put three battleships "in reserve" the other day, when the Arizona was commissioned. Not one of the three had been in commission as long as 10 years.

Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of the Navy appeared before the Naval Committee. He told the committee that the enlisted men ought to be paid more money. He said that they were worth more money than they are getting now. pay of the enlisted men of the Navy is only $17.60 a month.

Now, I see by the morning paper that the Secretary said yesterday that the January enlistments were far above the average. Very likely; January enlistments generally are far above the average. I notice that the Secretary testified before the Committee on Naval Affairs that in November, December, and January, during the winter, is the best period for recruiting. The fact remains we can not get men in the Navy because we do not pay them enough, and for the same reason we can not get men in the Army. If this amendment is adopted, it will cost the Government $3,600,000 more every year. That is the sum which the Secretary of the Navy estimates will be necessary in order to pay each enlisted man $5 more a month.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Can the gentleman state what the pay is in the English Navy?

Mr. GARDNER. I can not. But I know it is a great deal lower than ours. But, then, of course, the British Army is very much underpaid as compared with ours. A private in the Canadian Army, the over-seas army, is paid $33 a month, while a private in our Army is paid only $15 a month in time of peace. In the Spanish War privates received $16.50 per month.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman think that $5 more month would result in increasing the number up to the

Mr. GARDNER. I think that is what the Secretary says. I am not quite sure that that was what he said, but I shall put his exact evidence in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I want to say it is very important that we recruit up the Army and recruit up the Navy, and I think one of the ways for doing it is to give them a reasonable compensation; and I think that those of us who stay at home and get a good salary while they go to the front and enlist in the Army to perform that service can afford to pay them more, even to share a part of our salary with them, and I am very much in favor of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] has expired.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I should like one minute

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Longworth] I find that I incorrectly stated the Secretary's testimony. Here are his exact words in a colloquy with Congressman Kelley, of Michigan, a member of the Naval Committee. Mr. Kelley asked:

If that would get the men, it would be worth while to do it?

To that Secretary Daniels responded:

Undoubtedly. I think it would tend to still further increase the first enlistments and retain experienced men in the service.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Was the amount, $5, mentioned?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes; the amount, $5, was mentioned. But I was mistaken in saying that the Secretary expressed the opinion that that increase would attract enough recruits to bring the Navy up to its full authorized strength.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I believe in the amendment of fered by my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner]. Representing a district where it is necessary for me to come in contact a great deal with men in the naval service, I agree with what the gentleman from Massachusetts has said.

But I would go a step further, Mr. Chairman. I can readily understand why at this time it is impossible to get men to go into the Navy at the wage that is offered to them. It is because it is easier to get work with higher wages elsewhere. But this is not all. Mr. Chairman, there have been more men driven out of the Navy through the arrogance and unfair methods of officers whom this Government has educated than from any other cause connected with the naval service.

I can cite, Mr. Chairman, many, many cases of young men who have gone into the Navy intending to serve their country, but as soon as their enlistment is over no inducement could bring them back into the service because of the ill treatment they had received at the hands of some of the officers in control

Now, I do not say that is so with respect to all the officers. Some of them are reasonable and considerate. But there are too many officers to-day in the Navy who believe they are just a little bit better than other people, simply because they wear the uniform of Uncle Sam. They do not want to believe that the young man who enlists and who comes from just as good families as they do, though with perhaps not the same opportunities, but wanting to serve his country in the Navy, to learn something, has a right to expect considerate treatment. The moment some of these officers get these young men under them they drive them in such a way that they overtax their patience and stifle their ambition, so that the moment an opportunity is presented those young men leave and never go back to the

How can they help deserting from the Navy under those conditions? And this does not apply altogether or alone to the enlisted men in the Navy. It applies also to the workmen in navy yards. I venture to say there are to-day filed in the office of the Secretary of the Navy, from me alone, at least 200 complaints concerning the manner in which men have been treated by officers placed in charge of work in the navy yards. Competent mechanics, men who know their business, are ridden over by young officers just beginning their service who do not know how to handle men and can not properly perform the service that is expected of them. I know of cases, Mr. Chairman, where mechanics, men who wanted to work in the navy yard, but who could not stand the arrogance of these young officers, have left and gone to private shipyards where they work under competent superiors.

The only consolation to-day in the Boston yard is that we have a good man, Capt. Rush, who is in command of the yard, and a first-class constructor, Capt. Baxter, who is in charge of the construction department. We are fortunate in having such men, for they at all times try to be fair to the workmen, unlike some of their assistants, who run roughshod over men who can teach them their business.

Mr. Chairman, I know of a young man who while serving in the Navy on board the U. S. S. Memphis was scalded and wounded so badly, and then further injured by an iron cover falling on his head, that he lay in the hospital at Charleston for 12 or 14 weeks. After leaving the hospital he was then sent aboard a ship to do light duty. As soon as he got on board the ship and found himself unable to perform the service required of him he notified his superiors of his inability to work. He was immediately put at hard labor; and being unable to perform that hard labor, he was charged with neglect of duty and discharged from the Navy with a dishonorable discharge. This young boy is now crippled for life as the result of his injuries. When I brought the matter to the attention of the Secretary of the Navy he withdrew that discharge, notwith-standing the fact that the officer on the ship had signed the order to the effect that the young man was unfit for service and had a dishonorable discharge handed to him. Thanks to the Secretary of the Navy, the dishonorable discharge has been withdrawn, and that boy to-day has an honorable discharge from the Navy.

I have to-day a case pending before the Navy Department where some mechanics in the navy yard at Boston, because they would not bow the knee to these arrogant, overbearing officers, have been blacklisted and excluded from the service for one year.

There are too many of these cases, Mr. Chairman, in the naval service. It is time some of these officers were made to realize that while this Government is willing to give them everything to work with and will do everything in its power to make them competent and able to perform the service they are expected to perform for the country the citizens and laymen of this country also have some rights. It is time this abuse of workmen should stop. This is one reason why you can not get the men necessary to build your ships. This is the reason why you can not get a sufficient number of men to serve in the Navy. The men will not serve under officers of this kind. Any Member who has a navy yard in his district knows that I am telling the truth.

Let me cite another instance. A workman in the navy yard in my district in charge of a gang of men was commended in general orders by the Navy Department. He received letters of commendation from the Secretary of the Navy, from the commandant in charge of the yard, and from the constructor in the yard for efficiency in workmanship and efficiency in conduct. Two days after he received that letter from the Navy Department a young junior officer in the Navy, to show his authority and perhaps offended because the workman had received the commendation over his head, went after the young man, found fault with his work, and had him suspended from duty for inefficiency and poor conduct.

When this was brought to the attention of the commandant of the yard he immediately reinstated the man and put him back on a Friday afternoon. On Monday morning, before he had a chance to get his crew together, this same junior officer in the Boston Navy Yard filed charges of incompetency against him, and after his discharge sent his name and that of his assistants to the Civil Service Commission with a poor conduct and poor workmanship discharge. Fifteen minutes after they left the navy yard these men went over to another shipbuilding company and were employed at wages a dollar a day higher than they were receiving in the navy yard. Nevertheless for one year these three workmen under the civil-service rules will be deprived of an opportunity of working in the navy yards of this country, or in any other branch of the Government service, unless the Secretary of the Navy shall correct this injustice.

Mr. Chairman, this is the trouble with our navy yards. This is the trouble with our Navy Department. The difficulty is not so much that you can not get the men. It is well known that men have been driven away from the Navy and good workmen from the navy yard. They have been driven away by the contemptible acts of men whom this Government has trained and supported at the expense of the people; men whom this Government has educated to know better and who do know better. [Applause.] The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again

expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I know nothing, and this House can know nothing, about the individual cases that the gentleman refers to. I do know this, though, that the officers with whom I have come in contact, a great many of them, show evidence of great interest in the enlisted men in the Navy and in the workmen. I have talked with workmen and with enlisted men numbers of times, and they have always expressed the same

Now, with reference to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] increasing the amount of the appropriation for the pay of the enlisted men from $26,000,000 to something over $30,000,000, I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that that amendment would accomplish absolutely nothing except to make an excessive appropriation. The department has estimated that by June 30, 1918, the end of the fiscal year for which this appropriation is made, we shall have increased the enlistments to 70,000, and this is to take care of the pay of that number of men up to that Now, the gentleman has overlooked the fact that the law fixes the pay of the men in the different ratings, and if you should appropriate more money you would not give any individual any more than the law allows.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

The gentleman can not have listened to the Mr. GARDNER. first part of my statement. I said if this was adopted it would be necessary to change the total later, and also to insert a provision increasing the pay of the enlisted men. That will all be done unless the gentleman raises a point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. I shall do that. Mr. GARDNER. Ah!

Mr. PADGETT. For the simple reason that last August we passed a law giving the enlisted men many substantial and distinct advantages and increases, and under the operation of this law enlistments are moving along with good satisfaction. Until we have given that a trial, there is no good judgment in rushing forward and adding more at this session of Congress.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. COX. How much do we pay our enlisted men now? Mr. PADGETT. The base pay at starting is $17.60 a month, and then they increase, with longevity pay and with advance-

Mr. COX. What do they get at the end of their first three years?

Mr. PADGETT. I believe the period is a three-year period. Then on the second enlistment they get more, and then they are soon promoted up into higher grades, and the pay runs up to $75, $90, and $100 a month.

Mr. COX. In the first three years they get $17.60 a month?

Mr. PADGETT. And their board.

Mr. COX. Anything else?

Mr. PADGETT. They get their medical treatment.

Mr. COX. Do they get any clothing? Mr. PADGETT. Yes. They get as a first outfit $60 worth of clothing.

Mr. COX. The first three years do they get their clothing? Mr. PADGETT. Yes; when they first enlist.

And their board, and things of that kind? Mr. COX.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. TAGUE. Is that taken out of their pay?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; it is not.
Mr. COX. How does their pay compare with the pay of the men in the English Navy before the war broke out?

Mr. PADGETT. It is much larger.

Mr. COX. What was the English pay before the war broke out?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not remember definitely, but I should say not exceeding two-thirds of ours. I make that statement offhand.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not think it was half as much.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman know what was paid in the German Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. Still less than that. It is almost conscription in the German Navy.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the gentleman think that under the present high wages that are paid by other institutions employing workmen we could ever get any perceptible increase in the Army or Navy for $17.60 a month?

Mr. PADGETT. We are getting very good increases. During the month of January the increase was 1,344, during that one month.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How long, at that rate, will it take to get the full complement?

Mr. PADGETT. On the 1st of July, 1918, they expect to have the enlisted strength up to 70,000 men.

What do they pay for enlisting Mr. SMITH of Michigan.

Mr. PADGETT. They offer $5 to the postmaster for each enlistment, and then they have recruiting stations out gathering them up through the country,

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman said that they expect the Navy Department to have 70,000 men by the 1st of July, 1918. Is that true?

Mr. PADGETT. That is the information I get from Admiral

Mr. GARDNER. Is it not true that 78,000 are required according to the bill last year?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; we authorized 77,000.

Mr. GARDNER. Yes; 77,056. Now, the chairman said to Secretary Daniels, when he recommended the increase, that Admiral Palmer had told him that the prospects were that they would get 10,000 in the next year, and Secretary Daniels said that he hoped to do so.

Mr. PADGETT. We passed a law that became effective on the 29th of August, 1916. Under that regulations were promulgated and sent out through the country, but the people had to have time to learn about it; and the prospects since that time are very much better. Under the reserve law that we passed last year giving retirement after six years for life to go into the reserve, and with the increase of the retainer, giving grades in the reserve corps and the increase of pay, we are offering them so many more advantages under the act of August 29, 1916, that I am informed there is great satisfaction going out as it becomes known; and I hope the amendment of the gentleman will be voted down, because it would not yield one dollar to the enlisted men.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee is correct in saying that the mere adoption of this amendment would not raise the enlisted men's pay. I have here an amendment which will be offered on the next page which will raise their pay, if the gentleman does not raise the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. I have been very frank to say to the gentleman that I would raise the point of order.

Mr. GARDNER. Precisely; I was going to call attention to. The gentleman has stated that he will raise the point of order, but I make this prediction-if the House raises the total amount of money carried in this paragraph with the avowed purpose of giving enough funds to enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay $5 a month more to each enlisted man, when the bill arrives at the other end of the Capitol, the Senate will amend it with a provision increasing the statutory pay of enlisted men by $5 per month.

The gentleman calls attention to the great improvement in the lot of the enlisted man under the act of last August. All that improvement had taken place at the time when the Secretary gave his evidence. It was on the 11th day of December last that the Secretary appeared before the Committee on Naval Affairs and preferred that request for increasing the pay $5 per month for the enlisted men.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania, Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GARDNER. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. From what condition of life do you depend for recruits?

Mr. GARDNER. Many come from the country districts.

The Secretary speaks exceedingly well of the character of the class of enlisted men he has got. He says that 90 per cent of them have somebody dependent upon them. He also says that the men in civil life who are doing every kind of duty are getting higher pay. Here is the amendment which I shall offer on the next page of the bill, if this amendment carries, to wit: Add at the end of the paragraph the words "and hereafter the pay of the enlisted men of the Navy shall be increased $5 each per month."

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I do that in order to have a telegram, which I have just received, read at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

ROODHOUSE, ILL., February 8, 1917.

Congress Hall Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

The entire plant of Eli Bridge Co. is at the service of the United States Government in case of war. Please communicate this to proper authorities.

W. E. SULLIVAN, President Eli Bridge Co.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, at this time, when our Nation seems to be involved in a great crisis, it is well to know how some of the German-Americans of this country feel concerning this Republic, and I desire to have the Clerk read in my time a letter from A. J. Gaehr, one of the leading German-American citizens of Cleveland, Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLEVELAND, February 6, 1917.

Hon. H. I. EMERSON, Washington, D. C.

Hon. H. I. EMERSON,

Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Emerson: May I say a personal word with reference to the delicate international relations that now exist between this country and Germany? Whatever I write is done in the spirit of sincere loyalty to this country.

I am the son of a naturalized citizen of German birth and I have no other desire than that this country shall be at honorable peace with all nations, and I believe those who violate international law must suffer the penalty. It is because I have such high regard for America and sincere attachment for it, and it is because I have not altogether forgotten the old home that I am anxious that both parties remain in friendly relations.

We must not forget that the present tension has been brought about because we permitted one nation to violate international law with impunity and held another to strict observance of it; and while I do not in any sense criticize the strict enforcement of it—quite the contrary—I sincerely indorse it. We must not be too severe when we have been in part responsible for it.

Moreover, I wish to say I shall loyally support this Government in case of a break, or if worse conditions should obtain, because I believe not in "America first," but in "America only."

I should deplore the conditions if we should permit ourselves to be drawn into the vortex of the horrible conditions that now prevail in Europe and do what the allies desire to have us do, namely, fight their battles. We pull no one's chestnuts out of the fire; we fight for his country alone.

I would urgently request that you use your utmost endeavors to pre-other nation. Let them settle their own grievances. We fight for this country alone.

I would urgently request that you use your utmost endeavors to prevent a hostile outbreak between this country and Germany or any other country, so long as the conditions are not incompatible with our self-respect or rights or duties. The thought that we should go abroad and kill individuals and have our citizens killed by others, who have never seen one another and have no personal grievance, is almost too horrible to bear. For that reason I urge, if at all possible or proper that peaceful relations be maintained or if war must come, that we fight for America and for no other country.

Those who would have us fight for them now are the ones who opposed the establishment of the Republic and hampered this country in every possible way during the Civil War, and those whom they would like to have us oppose and attack are the ones that sent over delegations that helped to fight, like Baron Steuben, who rendered such invaluable service to the Continental troops. And remember that those of German birth furnished a larger contingent of the Army that upheld the Nation in 1861 to 1865 than all of the foreign nations combined. At any rate, this is not the time for passing snap judgment, but for caim deliberation.

Yours, very truly,

A. J. Gaehr.

Mr. BUTLER and Mr. DYER rose,

Mr. BUTLER and Mr. DYER rose,

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment and upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I shall divide my five minutes with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dyer]. I thought when we began the consideration of this bill that it might be necessary to increase the pay of the enlisted men of the Navy. With that in mind, I asked the Secretary of the Navy a good many questions. Since that time I have concluded that it might be well to postpone the increase of pay until some time in the near future, when we can ascertain positively whether these recruits can be had-not to keep the pay from the men, but to see how the legislation which we passed last August may affect the enlistment. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett] was wrong in the number of years of the enlistment period. It is four years, and during that time the enlisted man who behaves himself well has ample opportunity for pro-

Mr. PADGETT. Many of them get promotion within the first

Mr. BUTLER. Many of them are promoted the first year and their wages increased. Mr. COX. How mu How much?

Mr. BUTLER. From $2 to $4 a month, depending upon the promotion. My recollection is that the first promotion is $2 per month; and I think the second is four. I will say to the gen-tleman that the promotions are graded, they are fixed by law and by regulations of the Navy

Mr. COX. Then it is possible to have promotion and increase of salary during the first period of enlistment?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes,

Mr. PADGETT. And they get prizes and trophies besides.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. What pr promoted in their first year? What proportion of the enlisted men are

Mr. BUTLER. I am sorry that I can not answer that ques tion. The opportunity to be promoted and the opportunity for more of them to advance was given by the bill that we passed last August. It was then the purpose of Congress not to tempt the men to enlist in the Navy, but to help the men who did en-Their opportunities were doubled. They now have the chance after five or six years' service of going into the reserve, where they will draw pay as long as they stay in the reserve.

Mr. COX. How much when they get to the first reserve? Mr. BUTLER. I will ask the chairman of the committee what is the retainer pay?

Mr. PADGETT. It is $12 a year the first year, but then they get two months' pay during the year at the rating at which they went out of the regular service, and then at the different ratings their pay increases, and it runs along through life.

Mr. TALBOTT. And besides that we provide that 100 men shall be appointed from the enlisted force to the Naval Academy.

Mr. TAGUE rose.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, before I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, this service of the Government as a Naval Reserve service gives a promise of being extremely popular because of the great number of enlistments in it.

Mr. TAGUE. What percentage of the men reenlist after their first service?

Mr. PADGETT. I have not got the last year, but the year before that 85 per cent of them reenlisted. I understand that during this year it has been reduced down to about 65 per cent or 75 per cent, but a good many went into the reserves.

Mr. BUTLER. I have always had it in mind that about threefourths of the men reenlisted. The number may have decreased this year because of the advantages from the outside. I fear that I have taken up all of the time instead of yielding a part of it to the gentleman from Missouri, and I will ask the Chairman of the committee to open the door so that he may have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired, and, by unanimous consent, all time has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent—
Mr. PADGETT. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to speak on the amendment or something else?

Mr. DYER, Just a couple of minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman can get it after we have had

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected. Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I am going to move that the committee rise and if the gentleman from Missouri wants his five minutes now, will the gentleman move to strike out the last word? Let him get in now if he desires, as I am going to move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to address the committee for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word in behalf of this amendment because I believe that one of the troubles we have now with reference to securing eligible men for enlistment in the Army and Navy is the small pay as well as because of the fact that the Government of the United States does not show to the men after they have been discharged from the service the consideration which they ought to show them as compared with employment in civil life. Other countries of the world, practically all, are far ahead of the United States in that respect. But one thing I want especially to speak of while I have the floor is in reference to the suggestion that comes from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON] in the letter that he had read here from the desk from a citizen of German ancestry. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that it is an insult to the men of our Nation, born in Germany or of German parentage, to have it even intimated on the floor of this House that they are not as loyal Americans as those of any other nationality or breed. [Applause.] I recently returned from a two-day stay in my city of St. Louis and there we had the papers every hour practically containing the alarming headlines of the imminent danger of this country entering into war with Germany, and I am proud to say that in that city we have a very large population of men of German birth or of German ancestry and I had the privilege of talking with many of them while I was there and to see their views expressed in newspapers of that city, and I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that not one word did I hear or read in the newspapers, coming from any men of German birth or German ancestry, but what said in effect, "We will stand loyally behind the President of the United States in what he has done so far." [Applause.] "We believe that the President took the position that he in honor had to take in the name of the honor and glory of our great country." There is no division re-specting the people of German birth or of German ancestry, and even to have it intimated here in any way that they are not as loyal is in my judgment not only unnecessary but an insult to that great patriotic people of our land. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I shall not detain the committee but a moment. I have some observations which I desire to make on this bill, and in place of speaking them I will ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request. The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the requests will be granted. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Page of North Carolina, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20632, the naval appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend. DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19119) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. On page 79, lines 24 and 25, move to strike out the words "Government Hospital for the Insane" and insert "St. Elizabeth's Hospital." That is the name of the hospital by law. It was a mistake to put in the other name.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Interest and sinking fund," on page 80, line 9, after "$975,408," to insert: "Provided, That any balances of revenue of the District of Columbia remaining to its credit after its share of the appropriations contained herein has been paid, and after its share of any other appropriations to which it is required to contribute on account of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1916, and June 30, 1917, has been paid, shall be credited to interest and sinking fund for application to the funded debt of the District of Columbia," so as to make the clause read:

For interest and sinking fund on the funded debt, payable one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $975,408: Provided, That any balances of revenue of the District of Columbia remaining to its credit after its share of the appropriations contained herein has been paid, and after its share of any other appropriations to which it is required to contribute on account of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1916, and June 30, 1917, has been paid, shall be credited to interest and sinking fund for application to the funded debt of the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Just one word, Mr. President. This amendment provides "and after its share of any other appropriations to which it is required to contribute on account of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1916, and June 30, 1917." Does the Senator believe that we can now adopt an amendment to an appropriation bill affecting an appropriation which has already been expended and ended on June 30 of last year?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator that the money herein referred to has not been expended, but that it lies in the Treasury. We, therefore, felt that, inasmuch as the money has been collected from the revenues of the District of Columbia, it ought to belong to the District and should be credited to the District and used to pay off the District's debt.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, if we may go back to the fiscal year of 1916, why can we not as well go back for 10 or 12 years and apply the same principle to appropriations which have been made for that length of time?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. In reply to that, I wish to sug-

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to state to the Senator from Maryland that I am in full accord with the object of the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Permit me to suggest to the Senator that until a few years ago there was no such balance, but, on the contrary, the District was then indebted to the Government, and the Government loaned the District money at a certain rate of interest. It has only been within a few years that there has been any balance at all due the District.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that for quite a number of years past there has been such a balance.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. No; I think the Senator from Utah is mistaken about that. It has been only during a few years that there has been a balance at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, was the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, the first year in which the District has had a balance?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. No; that was not the first year, but there has been such a balance only for a few years,

Mr. SMOOT. Then, I think, the amendment ought to apply in all cases where there has been a balance to the credit of the District.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. If I understand the Senator from Utah, he is willing that whatever balance the District has should accrue to it. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SMOOT. I really think that should be done, because when the people in the District pay taxes which amount to more than the half which is required by the Government, they ought to be credited with whatever excess there is.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. If there is any improper language in the amendment or if the amendment requires any further amendment, we shall take the matter up in the conference committee and arrange it there. I entirely agree with the Senator from Utah that if there is any balance it ought to go to the credit of the District; and we shall endeavor to so provide.

Mr. SMOOT. With that understanding, I have no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the committee was, under the head of "Courts and prisons," on page 83, after line 2, to insert:

For such additional miscellaneous expenses as may be authorized by the Attorney General for the supreme court and its officers, made necessary by the occupancy of temporary quarters pending the reconstruction of the courthouse, Washington, D. C., including an electrician at the rate of $900 per annum and a laborer at the rate of $600 per annum, $3,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

Said hospital shall be constructed with a view to making such future additions as the exigencies may require, and the work herein authorized shall be so executed as not to interfere in any way with the future extension of Massachusetts Avenue: Provided, That the provision contained in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1915 requiring that said hospital be located and erected at Fourteenth and Upshur Streets is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Militia," on page 99, line 12, after the word "militia," to strike out "$16,900" and insert "$21,200: Provided, That the commanding general of the Militia of the District of Columbia is authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for the lease of an armory, stable, drill shed, and warehouse for Cavalry, Field Artillery, Signal Corps, and Hospital Corps troops in one building, or separately, for a period not to exceed five years, renewable at the option of the said commanding general for an additional period of not exceeding five years, at an annual rental not to exceed $10,000: Provided further, That the said commanding general may renew for the fiscal year 1918, or any portion thereof, the building known as 230 First Street NW., now occupied as an armory for mounted and other troops, at an annual rental of $3.900, and the buildings known as 1912 E Street NW., used as stables and warehouses, at an annual rental of $1,800, paying therefor a rental not in excess of the current rentals," so as to make the clause read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read to line 11, on page 101; the last paragraph read being as follows: ANACOSTIA RIVER AND FLATS.

For continuing the reclamation and development of the Anacostia River and Flats from the Anacostia Bridge northeast to the District line, to be expended for the purposes and under the conditions specified in the item for this improvement contained in the "District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1915," $300,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it will be remembered by some Senators that this is an improvement in which I have taken a very great interest in past years and done what I could to secure an appropriation for this much-needed improvement. The work is going on satisfactorily, but my attention has been called by Col. Flagler, in charge of the work, to the fact that the War Department estimated $400,000 for the present year and the bill contains an appropriation of $300,000. I shall not take the time of the Senate, unless I am asked to do so, to read a letter from Col. Flagler touching this matter, in which he says that unless they get more than $300,000 a year it will take over seven years to complete this improvement, in addition to the time which has already expired; and he makes an appeal, giving the items of expenditure that will be necessary during the current year, to have $400,000 inserted in place of $300,000.

I will ask the chairman of the committee if he sees any rea-on why the matter should not at least go to conference?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. As I understand, this is not an increase of an appropriation. It is to take $400,000 instead of $300,000 out of the lump appropriation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Out of the lump appropriation of something over $2,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I have no objection.
Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask, then, that the amendment be agreed to, as follows: On line 11, page 101, strike out "$300,-000" and insert "$400,000."

Of "and insert "$400,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in this connection I ask permission to insert in the Record a table prepared by Col. Flagler, showing the items of expenditure and also his reasons for asking for this added appropriation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that may be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

FEBRUARY 7, 1917.

The estimate submitted by this office, which has charge of this improvement, for work during the fiscal year 1918 was as follows:

400,000

Total 400,000

This estimate was communicated by the War Department to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia unchanged, but was, I am informed, reduced by the commissioners to $300,000 when their estimates were presented to the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives.

The reason for the increased size of the annual estimate for this work may be briefly explained, as follows:

The total estimated cost of the project (exclusive of the purchase of land) is $2,706,000. The work consists mainly in the construction of masonry sea walls along the lines of the land areas of the proposed park development and the dredging of the water areas and pumping the material behind these sea walls as a fill. It has been found necessary to allow the sea-wall foundations to settle for about 12 months before placing the masonry superstructure thereon, and for another 6 months before putting material immediately back of the sea wall. The valley of the upper Anacostia at the beginning of the project was simply a broad stretch of marshland, with many meandering channels. This condition made it difficult to reach all points of the work simultaneously, and the work was therefore progressive in addition to being delayed to allow for the settlement referred to above. These difficulties have been largely overcome, and the scheme of the work is now such that sea-wall construction, dredging, and filling can proceed at a rapid pace, which will permit the expenditure of practically all funds now available by June 30, 1918. If it is desired that this project should be pushed to completion, sums should be provided as large as can be profitably expended in each fiscal year. If only $300,000 were to be appropriated each year, over seven years would be required for the completion of the project. In the above-tiemized estimate the only items other than the dredging and sea-wall construction are one of $33,000 for modification of the Bennings Bridge and one of $50,000 for the construction of gate houses. Both of these teams

The next amendment was, under the head of "Anacostia River and Flats," on page 101, after line 11, to insert:

River and Flats," on page 101, after line 11, to insert:

In connection with the said reclamation and development of the river and flats, the Secretary of War is authorized to acquire, for and on behalf of the United States, by purchase or by condemnation, for highway and park purposes, the fee simple and absolute title to all lands required for said objects and not now owned by the United States, in and along the Anacostia River from the Anacostia Bridge to the center line of East Capitol Street, embraced within the area lying between the lines, one on each side of the river, following approximately the contour of 10 feet elevation above the plane of mean low water at the United States navy yard; and the Secretary of War is further authorized to acquire for the United States, by purchase or by condemnation, for highway and park purposes, in connection with the said reclamation and development of the Anacostia River and Flats, the fee simple and absolute title to all lands required for said objects and not now owned by the United States, in and along the Anacostia River in the section thereof running from the center line of East Capitol Street to the northeast boundary line of the District of Columbia, embraced within the limits designated "taking line," one on each bank of the river in said section, as indicated on the map entitled "Reclamation Anacostia River Flats, District of Columbia, land map," approved by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and the Secretary of War, as attested and authenticated by their respective signatures and the seal of the War Department, bearing date the 24th day of May, 1916, recorded and filed in the Office of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, under Engineer Department file numbered 12968—

525; and the appropriation herein made for the reclamation and development of the Anacostia River and Flats from the Anacostia Bridge northeast to the District line, and all appropriations heretofore made for said purpose are hereby made available for the purchase or condemnation of all of the said lands hereinbefore authorized to be acquired and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages for said lands and the costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings in the event that it is necessary to institute such condemnation proceedings: Provided, That if said lands or any part thereof can not be acquired by purchase from the owners thereof at a price satisfactory to the Secretary of War, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, upon request of the Secretary of War, shall institute condemnation proceedings to acquire such lands under the provisions of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia.

The next amendment was, on page 103, after line 7, to insert:

The Secretary of War is authorized to effect an adjustment of boundaries and an exchange of lands in the District of Columbia with the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Raliroad, in accordance with the plat or drawing on file in the office of the Chief of Engineers and designated E. D. 12968-531, whereby on the left bank of the Anacostia River said railroad company shall release, quitclaim, and convey to the United States the certain lands along the Anacostia River riverward of the line shown on said plat and needed for the reclamation and development of the Anacostia River and Flats, and the United States shall release and quitclaim to said railroad company any right, title, interest, or claim in or to certain lands shoreward of said line, as shown on said plat, and will permit the extension of said company's right of way to include the triangle of land 262.10 feet on the hypotenuse lying at the function of the railroad bridge and the original shore line of the said river, as shown on said plat, and whereby, on the right bank of the Anacostia River, the United States shall permit the rights of way of the said railroad company for its entrance into the city of Washington to be consolidated, between the bulkhead of the railroad bridge at the Anacostia River and the south line of L Street south, into one right of way of equal top width, according to the lines of said plat, and the United States and the said railroad company shall reciprocally release, quitclaim, and convey to each other the portions of square south of 1080, so called, and the accretions to the same lying respectively northward and southward of the division line shown on said plat, and the said railroad company shall release, quitclaim, and confirm to the United States the title to all land along and adjacent to the Anacostia River from the bulkhead of the present railroad bridge to Fifteenth Street cast, exterior to the portion of square south of 1080 to be released to said railroa

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland whether there is any good reason for our failure to appropriate to the purpose originally planned by Congress the land in the vicinity of the Senate Office Building, now covered with old buildings? As my recollection goes, it is many years since authority was granted to acquire those lands, and I should like to know why it is that the work drags along here between the Capitol and the Union Station.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator that that is a matter which will come up on the sundry civil bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I know it will; but I wanted to avail myself of this opportunity to make the inquiry, because it has occurred to me several times that there was very unnecessary delay there, and I wondered if the Senator from Maryland could give the reason for it.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. It is not a matter that pertains to this bill, and I can not tell why it has happened.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Maryland will permit me, the property that the Government was to land will permit me, the property that the Government was to acquire was valued by a commission. The figures were considered excessive by a department of the Government, and the award was held up; the property was revalued, and the amounts were reduced to some extent. Private citizens, feeling that a great wrong had been done them—and they have asked, I think, in a bill to be reimbursed—had of necessity to yield to the Government and accept the lower amount. I always thought that a wrong had been done the citizens in that regard. I understand, and I think I am correctly informed, that the buildings to which the Senator from Michigan refers, except the stable, which is owned by the Government, and the old fire house, which has been deserted, belong to a railroad corporation—I think the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And all those houses down there. Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; and they have contested it. They say that they are entitled to the amount found in the first instance, and, as I understand, the matter is in the courts at the present time; and for that reason the work is halted.

I have greatly sympathized with the view that the Senator from Michigan expresses, and have much regretted that that work is not being completed in a more expeditious manner, but, of course, we can not interfere with the court proceedings

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. In connection with what the Senator from Michigan is talking about, I recall the fact that I brought up in the Senate some year or more ago a bill directing that the two parcels of land, that belonging to the corporation and that belonging to the individuals, should be separated, and the individuals be paid for their part, and they were paid. But this matter is in litigation, as the Senator from New Hampshire says, between the railroad company and the Government, as I understand.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. And, as I understand, the private parties have been paid. I remember that I urged the bill before the Senate, and it was passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; they were paid a reduced amount. Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator from Maryland and the Senator from New Hampshire take the same view that I do, that it is a very unsightly thing, and that it ought not to run on for a generation. I was a young man in the House of Representatives when this program was adopted by the Government, and it seems as though it is taking a long time to carry it out.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I think there is no difference of opinion between the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Maryland upon that point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Parks," on page 105, after line 18, to insert:

For the acquisition for a public park of the tract of land known as the Dean tract, assessed on the records of the assessor of the District of Columbia as lots A, 818 and 819, in square 2535, containing 404,425 square feet, more or less, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $625,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Water service," subhead "Washington Aqueduct," on page 107, line 10, after the word "Aqueduct," to insert "to be immediately available and to remain available until expended," so as to make the clause read

For completing purchase, installation, and maintenance of water meters, to be placed on the water services of the Treasury Building and the State, War, and Navy Department Building, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, said meters to be purchased, installed, and maintained by and remain under the observation of the officer in charge of the Washington Aqueduct, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, $3,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Water department," on page 108, line 5, after the word "mechanic," to strike out "(who shall also act as a member of the board of examiners of steam engineers, without additional compensation)," so as to make the clause read:

To make the clause read:

For distribution branch: Superintendent, $3,300; engineer, $2,400; assistant engineers—1 $1,800, 1 $1,700; master mechanic, $2,000; forenean, $1,800; assistant foremen—1 $1,275, 1 $1,200, 1 $1,125, 1 $900; steam engineers—chief $1,750, 2 at $1,100 each, 3 assistants at $1,000 each; chief inspector of valves, $1,600; leveler, $1,200; inspector, $1,200; draftsman, $1,050; clerks—1 $1,800, 1 $1,500, 4 at $1,200 each, stores clerk $1,500, 1 $1,000, 1 $900; timekeeper, $900; two rodmen at $675 each; 2 chainmen at $675 each; 4 ollers at $610 each; 3 firemen at $750, 1 $630; 2 messengers, at $600 each; in all, $91,030.

Mr. SMOOTT. I wish to sek the Senator having the bill in

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator having the bill in charge if striking out those words will have a tendency to increase the salary of the master mechanic?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say that there is no change in that paragraph.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; there is a change if the committee amendment is adopted.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. We put back a member of the board previously at a salary of $300 and left the law to remain

Mr. SMOOT. In other words, the House provided that this master mechanic should be one of the board of examiners of steam engineers, and they provided salaries for only two instead of three members at $300 each, and by striking out, on page 108, "who shall also act as a member of the board of examiners of steam engineers, without additional compensation," as provided in the bill as passed by the Hoise it rightfully size. as provided in the bill as passed by the House, it virtually gives the master mechanic $2,300.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. No, sir.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the result of it, and I suppose, under

Mr. SMOOT. That is the result of it, and I suppose, under existing law, he gets that to-day.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. That is not our understanding.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the only object of the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. In the House it was stricken out on a point of order, and "$2,300" went back to "$2,000."

Mr. SMOOT. And we are putting it back to $2,300?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. We are just striking out the language

Mr. SMOOT. That makes the salary of the master mechanic 2,300.

Mr. ROBINSON. But the master mechanic does not act as a member of the board of examiners of steam engineers.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. We put back the number to three instead of two. So he does not get $300.

Mr. ROBINSON. Under the provision as reported by the Senate committee the master mechanic contemplated in the bill will not act as a member of the board of examiners of steam engineers

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President— Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will permit me, the House struck out the appropriation for the master mechanic and left the language authorizing him to act as a member of this board. The Senate committee simply struck out the language authorizing him to act as a member of the board and, on page 13, lines 17 and 18, restored the language of the existing law. action was taken largely at the instance of representatives of the engineers, who appeared before the committee and urged its

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator if it is not true that in the past the master mechanic has been a member of the board of examiners of steam engineers?

Mr. ROBINSON. In the past; but the double-salary law, I think, prevented that, and now under this provision—

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know who are going to constitute the board of examiners of steam engineers?

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I do not.

Mr. SMOOT. Striking out the words in lines 5, 6, and 7, on page 108, will result in no increase to the master mechanic's salary if he only acts as a master mechanic, but if he acts as a member of the board of examiners of steam engineers, then, of course, he would draw $2,300.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; the provision is that he shall act without additional compensation.

Mr. SMOOT. That we are striking out.
Mr. SMITH of Maryland. There will have to be appointed a man to act as a member instead of allowing him to act.

it. The law is left just as it is.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to say a word, the point is that they have always had a board of three steam engineers and they have received the munificent sum of $300 each. The House in its wisdom struck out one of those, making a board of two, and made the master mechanic a member of that board. The steam engineers say they do not a member of that board. The steam engineers say they do not like to have it in that shape; that they have had a board; that they have performed their duties satisfactorily and everything has been harmonious; and they think that the old law had better be continued. That is exactly what the committee has done. It is true it perhaps results in the expenditure of $300 more than if the master mechanic worked without compensation, but a proposition to increase his compensation to $2,300 was debated in the House. So it may possibly result in the expendidebated in the House. So it may possibly result in the expenditure of $300 more, but it leaves a harmonious board instead of taking a man from another department of the Government and putting him into the board of steam engineers, when very likely he has not any qualifications for the place. That is the situation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 110, to insert:

For laying 16-inch trunk mains in Reservoir Street and New Cut Road to Conduit Road NW., $26,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 110, after line 2, to insert: The next amendment was, on page 110, after line 2, to insert:
For the protection of the health of the residents of the District of Columbia and the employees of the United States Government residing in Maryland near the District of Columbia boundary the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, upon the request of the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission, a body corporate, established by chapter 313 of the acts of 1916 of the State of Maryland, or upon the request of its legally appointed successor, are hereby authorized to deliver water from the water-supply system of the District of Columbia to said Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission or its successor for distribution to territory in Maryland within the Washington suburban sanitary district as designated in the aforesaid act, and to connect District of Columbia water mains with water mains in the State of Maryland at the following points, namely, in the vicinity of Chevy Chase Circle, in the vicinity of the intersection of Georgia and Eastern Avenues, in the the vicinity of the intersection of the Anacostia Road and Eastern Avenue, under the conditions hereinafter named, namely:

That before such connections shall be made the said Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission or its legally appointed successor shall secure authority from the Legislature of the State of Maryland to enter into an agreement with the said Commissioners of the District of Columbia outlining the conditions under which the service is to be remotered.

of Columbia outilning the conditions under which the service is to be rendered.

The agreement between the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the said Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission or its legally appointed successor shall provide, among other things:

First. That the meters on each of said connections shall be located within the District of Columbia and shall remain under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Second. The rates at which water will be furnished, said rates to be based on the actual cost to the United States and the District of Columbia of delivering water to the points designated above, including an interest charge at 4 per cent per annum and a suitable allowance for depreciation.

Third. That payments for water so furnished shall be made through the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia at such times as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may direct, said payments to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as other water rents now collected in the District of Columbia are deposited.

Fourth. That at no time shall the amount of water furnished the said Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission or its successors exceed the amount that can be spared without jeopardizing the interests of the United States or of the District of Columbia, and in no event shall it exceed in amount 3,000,000 gallons per day, measurement thereof to be made under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, Fifth. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have at all times the right to investigate the distribution system in Maryland, and if in their opinion there is a wastage of water they shall have the right to curtail the supply to said sanitary district to the amount of such wastage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, one page 113, after line 6. to insert:

All per diem employees and day laborers of the District of Columbia who have been continuously employed for five working days next preceding such days as are legal holidays in the District of Columbia, and whose employment continues through and beyond said legal holidays, shall be granted leave of absence with pay for said legal holidays.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask if it is not contrary to the practice of all the departments to grant this leave of absence? For instance, under this amendment if a per diem employee is employed five days before a legal holiday and works one day after the legal holiday he would be entitled to pay for the legal holiday.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator from Utah that it applies to men who are paid a per diem and are employed continuously, as much so as those who are paid salaries. There is no holiday given them, and they feel that they ought to have the same privileges, as they are employed in the same way and doing continuous work. Although paid a per diem they are continuously employed and have been for the last three or five years, I think, as much as the salaried people. We felt that they ought to have the same privilege as those who receive salaries.

Mr. SMOOT. This provision would pay a per diem employee for a legal holiday if such a condition existed as this: On the 16th day of this month if a snowstorm occurred and there were a lot of men employed for the five days before Washington's Birthday and they worked one day after, then under this provision they would be allowed pay for the holiday.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator that this was put in by the committee of the House and went out on a point of order. Col. Kutz said:

Col. Kutz. That is to cover five days in the year. Every per diem employee of the Federal Government receives these holidays, whereas the employees of the District of Columbia receive only one holiday in the whole year, and that is Labor Day. I think they at least ought to have the five holidays, Thanksgiving, Christmas, and New Year's etc.

Mr. SMOOT. I think so, too, where they are employed by the Government regularly.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The fact is that these people are employed as continuously as those who are on a regular salary.

Mr. SMOOT. Then do not limit it to five working days next preceding such days as are legal holidays. Why not provide that they shall continue in employment for at least 30 days?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. We put in what was asked for by

Col. Kutz

Mr. SMOOT. I move, in line 8, to strike out "five" and insert "thirty" before the words "working days." I think if an employee is to be paid for a legal holiday he ought to be in the service of the Government at least 30 days preceding the legal holiday for which he is to be paid.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The Senator's amendment would compel every employee to work 30 days prior to a legal holiday?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; so that it would read-

All per diem employees and day laborers of the District of Columbia who have been continuously employed for 30 working days next preceding such days as are legal holidays in the District of Columbia, on the part of the commissioners to revoke such licenses without and whose employment continues through and beyond said legal holidays, shall be granted leave of absence with pay for said legal holidays.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. It is the Senator's idea that they shall prove that they were employed continuously by the Government 30 days preceding the holidays?
Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I have no objection to the amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. In line 8, strike out "five" and insert thirty" before the words "working days."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 116, after line 22, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 7. That to provide, during the fiscal year 1918, for increased compensation at the rate of 15 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate per annum of $480 or less, and for increased compensation at the rate of 10 per cent per annum to employees who receive salaries at a rate of more than $480 per annum and not exceeding $1,000 per annum, so much as may be necessary is appropriated: Provided, That this section shall only apply to employees who are appropriated for in this act specifically and under lump sums, or whose employment is authorized herein, and that the increased compensation of teachers of the public schools shall be computed on their basic salaries: Provided further, That detailed reports shall be submitted to Congress on the first day of the next session showing the number of persons, the grades or character of positions, the original rates of compensation, and the increased rates of compensation provided for herein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 117, after line 14, to insert as a new section the following:

Sec. 8. That the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant permission to the Women's Titanic Memorial Association for the erection on public grounds of the United States in the city of Washington, D. C., other than those of the Capitol, the Library of Congress, and the White House, of a memorial appropriate as a lasting tribute to the heroes who sacrificed their lives, that women and children might be saved, in the tragic catastrophe of the sinking of the steamship Titanic: Provided, That the site chosen and the design of the memorial shall be approved by the Joint Library Committee of Congress and the Commission of Fine Arts, and that the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the erection of said memorial.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 118, after line 2, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 9. Hereafter when any piping or other household fixtures or secondhand goods of any description whatever have been stolen and sold to a dealer in junk, or secondhand dealer, in the District of Columbia, under such circumstances that the commissioners, after hearing granted, are satisfied that said dealer should have had reasonable ground to believe, or could have ascertained by reasonable inquiry or investigation, that the goods were stolen, and that the dealer did not make reasonable inquiry or investigation as to the title of the seller before making the purchase, the commissioners are authorized and directed to revoke the license of said dealer; and this action shall not be a bar to criminal prosecution for receiving stolen goods.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the amendment is agreed to I desire to ask a question in regard to it. While I am in entire sympathy with the amendment, and while I would not under any circumstances do anything which would prevent the enactment of the proper kind of law on that subject-and I think the amendment shows on its face that something of that kind ought to be done-it does seem to me that the amendment ought to contain a provision which would permit anyone who felt aggrieved on account of any order of the commissioners to have the right of appeal to the court. I can see how the commissioners might take action which would be more or less summary, that would perhaps interfere with a man's rights or with what he might claim as a right, to have the matter tried by a jury in a court, the same as every other similar proceeding affecting a man's liberty or his property is tried.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, the committee assumed that these people would receive proper treatment, and that the decisions would be fair. The fact is that there has been a great deal of stealing and pilfering in the District of Columbia which has been encouraged by people who receive stolen goods. There is an old saying that the man who receives stolen goods is worse than the thief. I am of that opinion myself, although I have no feeling in the matter. It was brought to our attention that there was a good deal of pilfering of this character going on. It does seem to me that any man who buys property of this kind should first acquaint himself, if there is any suspicion on his part, as to whether or not the property has been stolen. I do not think the power further legal proceedings will work any hardship on parties who are engaged in this business.

Mr. NORRIS. I fully agree with the Senator from Maryland in his statement as to this practice. I have no doubt that there is a good deal of it going on.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will suggest that if the Senator from Nebraska desires to offer an amendment to the amendment I will accept it and let the matter go to conference, when we will further investigate it.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not prepared any amendment designed to cover the subject.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I want the law to be framed as perfectly as it can be. I do not want to work any hardship to anybody; but we felt that something ought to be done in regard to think something ought to be done.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I suggest that the matter be passed over for the present in order that the Senator from Nebraska may prepare his amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. We will accept an amendment, and let the matter go to conference, and see what is best to be

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, there is a matter to which I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee. suggest to him that section 7, which provides for increased compensation to Government employees, be transferred to the end of the bill. The other legislative provisions would then precede it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to change "section 7" to read "section 9," to transfer it to the end of the bill, and to renumber the other sections to correspond.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to. There are amendments which have been passed over

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are a number of Senators absent who are interested in amendments which have been passed over, and I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators an-

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I have been requested to announce that the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. James] is detained on important committee work.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Secretary will state the first amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. The first amendment passed over, having been passed over at the instance of Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey, is on page 28, after line 15, to insert:

That part of the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1917 providing to "Repave with asphalt the roadway of Fourteenth Street Nw., from Pennsylvania Avenue to F Street, 70 feet wide, $7,500," is hereby suspended until further action of Congress.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I make the point of order against that amendment on the ground that it is

Let me state that I have no desire to be ungenerous, and God knows I have no desire to be unjust to anybody, but there is a very peculiar condition existing on that street right in the heart of the city which, to my mind, seems an abomination and a wrong, and I think it should be corrected.

My attention was directed to this matter last year by petition, letter, and personal solicitation on the part of very many citizens of the District of Columbia. Congress enacted legislation providing for the repaving and widening of that street between Pennsylvania Avenue and F Street, but through some process, I can not understand what or how it was done, the whole matter has been held up, and we now find an amendment in the pending bill providing that the action taken by Congress last year shall be suspended.

Briefly the effect of the previous legislation is this: The whole length of Fourteenth Street north of F Street and south of Pennsylvania Avenue has a width between curbs of 75 feet. I paced it this morning and ascertained that to be the width, but the portion of Fourteenth Street between F Street and Pennsylvania Avenue is but 48 feet wide. That portion of the street is on quite a severe incline, and within the last two years trolley tracks have been placed on it, with the result that the street car traffic and the ordinary vehicle traffic have made a condition that is absolutely dangerous; but, aside from that, it is unfair and unjust to the rest of Fourteenth Street that that one block should not be widened.

On February 7 I went there to view the situation again. thinking I might be wrong, having been advised by members of the committee that I was wrong, and that I was pressing an arbitrary provision. On that portion of Fourteenth Street between Pennsylvania Avenue and F Street, which abuts the Willard Hotel property on one side and the Willard estate on the other, the Ebbitt Hotel property, I found a condition of congestion thus: Opposite the doorway and opposite the Willard Hotel I found five taxicabs installed. Then coming up on that same sidewalk a little farther I found a great vault about 5 feet square, with an iron rack and framework, occupying that portion of the sidewalk. Up a little farther—this was on the 7th day of February—I found one great empty gondola coal cart standing there; right next to it another gondola coal cart, loaded. A little way above that, about 50 feet from F Street, there was another auto standing out at an angle in the street.

Two car tracks, as I say, were there. There was a trolley car on each track. On the opposite side, down toward Pennsylvania Avenue, is another standing place for sight-seeing automobiles. At that time I saw a buggy, the driver of which was trying to wend his way through, but finally everything came to a stagnation and a standstill.

This condition exists right in the heart of the city, and this proposition as proposed by the committee will perpetuate and maintain this 48 feet of distance between the curb lines, while on the other side it is 75 feet, and on this side it is 75 feet.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Certainly, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. In regard to the delivery of coal, is it not necessary? It does not matter what the conditions may be, coal has to be delivered to hotels and the carts have to stand somewhere for delivery. I submit that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair get in. This is a point of order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I realize that, Mr. President.
The VICE PRESIDENT. But the argument is with reference to the advisability or nonadvisability of the Senate adopting the amendment.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes, sir; I realize that.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Now, the Chair wants to rule on the point of order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I shall be pleased to have the ruling.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the discussion may go forard. The Chair thinks this is not general legislation at all.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I made the point of order that it was new legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not any rule of the Senate prohibiting new legislation. It is not general; it applies only to me block. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if there was not a provision in the bill we passed last year to end and stop this matter?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. We thought so. The Senate passed it, and we thought so. But, as I said at the outset, through some strange proceeding-I can not understand just what-this thing seems to have bobbed up like a cork at sea. No work was done to satisfy the legislation that was passed by the Senate, and the result is that the conditions of that street remain the same to-day as when we agitated the matter last year.

In answer to the Senator from Maryland, I want to say that, of course, I am practical enough to know that we, in a frigid climate, have to have coal for domestic purposes, heating and otherwise, but this is a peculiar situation. Mayhap in front of the Senator's own door, or yours, Mr. President, a simple coal hole and a chute stand, but in this particular case there are two vaults, two openings 5 feet square, and an iron framework 5 or 7 feet high, existing on the sidewalk perpetually. Sometimes a canopy is thrown over it. The fact is that this one with the framework is not for coal, but it is an air duct to let air down to the machinery of the hotel. The coal vault is above. Now, this bars and makes impossible the passage of pedestrians on that space of about 10 feet of sidewalk. All the pedestrian travel is between that point and up toward the hotel. Protests have come to me from property holders on Fourteenth Street farther up asking why this condition should prevail.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask who owns the Willard

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It is owned by the Willard estate or the Willard family, I think.

Mr. KENYON. Are any such concessions granted to any other property owners in the city?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I hav neighborhood, and I find none whatever. I have made inquiry in that

Mr. KENYON. How was this condition ever established?

How was it brought about?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have made diligent inquiry about that. I will say that a gentleman representing the hotel company rang me up, and since that time has called upon me. His statement was that they were there by right. He is the manager of the hotel. He said that they were there by right; that they were granted the right by the Secretary of War, I believe. I told him that I did not believe that the Secretary of War had any more right to grant such a privilege than I had, and that I thought the Commissioners of the District had charge of that; but he said they were granted that right by the Secretary of War.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I asked this gentleman if that privilege or pretended right was granted for any particular specified length of time. He said he did not know about that, but they were there; and then they further extended it so that it really occupies

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes. Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator how much, if any, of the public street has been taken by these people? Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Taking the line, as the com-missioners insist, on both sides, 30 feet has been taken out of Mr. NORRIS. Thirty feet?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Twenty-five feet, at least-12 feet on each side of the roadway. The Ebbitt property has the same encroachment, though with no vaults under it.
Willard property has the encroachment with vaults.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the Senator whether that means that they have extended the sidewalk out 12 feet into the street? Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes, sir. I men they are out from 12 to 15 feet in the street beyond the average line of the sidewalk upon either side.

Mr. NORRIS. The building, of course, is not?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The building line? No; that is all in harmony.

Mr. NORRIS. Have they excavated, and are they using this space under the sidewalk? Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes, sir; they have excavated and are using the vaulted space beneath. It is a veritable machine shop, as I have been assured by the distinguished Senator from Maryland, and from my own looking down the shaft I know that to be the case.

Mr. NORRIS. This extends one block, does it?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes, sir; one block, comprising the distance between Pennsylvania Avenue and F Street.

Mr. NORRIS. Between F Street and Pennsylvania Avenue on Fourteenth Street?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. On Fourteenth Street. Now, it does seem to me that it is a manifest bit of injustice and unfairness. I have no feeling against the Willard people. Great God! I do not know them, or would not know them if I fell over them; but I do say that there is no reason why we should make fish of one and fowl of the other. Now, they say it will cost $5,000 or more to make this alteration. I am very sorry for that; but all I want is

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator means $50,000.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Fifty thousand dollars? Well, I can not imagine that. I think I am prepared to say no, that can not be true. I have been a builder all my life, as well as a farmer, and I know better than that. It will not cost $50,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. Has the Senator been in the vaults? Has he visited them and inspected them?

Mr, MARTINE of New Jersey. I have looked down in them. saw them taking machinery down there about a year ago; but have talked with Commissioner Newman-

Mr. ROBINSON. I will ask the Senator if he knows that all

Mr. ROBINSON. I will ask the Senator if he knows that all the machinery that operates the hotel, including the laundry, the boilers, engines, ice plant, and dynamo, are in these vaults? Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I know that there is a very considerable amount of machinery there. It is a good deal of a machine shop. But, great Heavens, if that argument is sound, suppose they located it out in the middle of the highway! They come to the corner of Pennsylvania Avenue. Why did they not locate it out in the middle of Pennsylvania Avenue or the middle of Fourteenth Street? I say it is an abomination; it is a utilization of the public highway for private purposes, and it is a manifest wrong.

I do not want to do these people any harm. I talked to-day with Commissioner Newman, and he said that the public felt that it was wrong, and he said the commissioners felt that there should be a correction. As I said to Mr. Haight, the gentleman who represented the hotel company, who came to me to-day very solicitous about it, "I do not want to unreasonably disturb you, but you pay nothing for this." They have never paid a sou marqué.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I want to say to the Senator that they have to pay a license fee.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. There has never been a license fee. No license ordinance ever had been enacted until the last year.
Mr. SMITH of Maryland. That is true.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. And I do not think they have paid that paid that.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I do not know about that, either.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I told Mr. Haight that.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. But I will say to the Senator that they are subject to a license.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President—

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I want to say, further, that while in the west they want not have read a license for property is in the past they may not have paid a license fee, property is assessed according to its value, and the value of property is made up by the improvements, and by—

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. By what they steal from the public?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. No; but the value of the property is made up by the accommodations on that property. no question but that the fact that this vault is under there, affording them conveniences and means of using their machinery, adds to the value of that hotel.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. But it is not their property. Mr. SMITH of Maryland. And undoubtedly that hotel is assessed for more money than it would be assessed for if that were not there. Now, however, there is a law assessing vaults.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That has only come about within a year.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. True; but it is a law, nevertheless, and ought to be enforced, I think.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will say, in answer to that, that they have never paid a sou marqué of vaultage rental to the city; and that law has only been passed within a year. mentioned that fact to Mr. Haight, and he did not know, but he rather tacitly admitted that they had not paid anything. of course they would. Of course they could not get out of it if we have passed it. All I say is that they have no right, pay or otherwise, to have this supreme advantage over their neighbors. I said to Mr. Haight that five or six thousand dollars was all it would cost—and I think it would be within that limit—but that I would let them stay if I could do so without interfering with the public, taxing them vaultage rent.

The thought has occurred to me—I suggested this to Mr. Newman and Mr. Newman acquiesced in the matter—that they might keep their machinery there, but let them with a system of iron girders and trusses, maintain a roadway, cutting back the sidewalk so that the traveling public and the vehicles should have the privilege of using the whole portion of the street. It vaulted back; it could be carried back on girders. It would not displace their machinery, but would give the appearance of the same width of street the whole line through, and would give the public the right to travel, and then assess them vaultage rent. I do not believe in the assessment of the square feet of property. It should be assessed, I believe, both ways; first on the value of the land—

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for question?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the existing provision of law, which this amendment is designed to suspend temporarily, authorize the arrangement which he himself has just suggested?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. No; that is my suggestion. Mr. ROBINSON. Then it would be necessary to suspend this provision or to enact an amendment authorizing the arrangement which the Senator has suggested.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. To carry that out, it would; but I say this: Defeat this proposition, put it back as it stands to-day on the statute books, that this sidewalk shall be widened, and then provide that the Commissioners shall arrange as they may beneath

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator sees the difficulty about that. If the improvement which has been authorized proceeds, then the opportunity to afford to the hotel company the relief which he has suggested will not exist.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. No.

Mr. ROBINSON. So that it is necessary to effectuate the arrangement which the Senator from New Jersey has suggested, and which it seems to me from a casual consideration is not an unfair one, to insert this provision in the bill, or some other provision which will for the present suspend the improvement that has been authorized.

Mr. President, I lived for five years at the Ebbitt Hotel in the early part of my service in Congress, and I am familiar with the conditions as they exist in that locality. Fourteenth Street between F Street and Pennsylvania Avenue is a very steep one. It is paved, as every one now knows, with rough stone, called Belgian block; and the principal traffic on that street is heavy wagons. There is no great amount of other traffic there, for the reason, in part, that the street is very steep. If that street were paved with asphalt it would be impossible, in my judgment, for wagons heavily loaded to ascend it. It would be quite difficult for the public to carry on traffic there; and I sincerely doubt whether it is advisable, discussing the merits of the

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Let me say, Mr. President-Mr. ROBINSON. Just a moment. I sincerely doubt whether it is advisable to pave that street with asphalt.

As to the proposition of compelling the hotel company to remove its machinery and abandon the vaults that have been constructed there under some sort of public authority, I want to point out this fact: It has been proceeding for a great many years. Any person who visits and observes the excavation that has been made there and the works that are now operated there will realize that it will entail a very large expense upon the hotel company. In passing upon this proposition, I think it is fair that the equities of the hotel company, if I may so express it, should be considered. The public interest is, of course, the paramount interest; and I, for my part, would be willing to have a provision similar to that which has been suggested by the Senator from New Jersey. If it appears right that the hotel company should pay a tax-and the suggestion seems fair to me—upon the private property that they are using in these vaults, let them pay a tax; but I do think that before requiring them to abandon those vaults and to incur the expense that is incident to that, after having at first permitted them to establish and operate these vaults, we should afford some such relief as the Senator from New Jersey has suggested; and in order to do that he himself admits that this provision which the committee has written into the bill, or some similar provision, must be enacted. Otherwise, the improvement that has been authoroized will proceed and it would be impossible to effectuate the relief.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEA of Tennessee in the chair). Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I yield. Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas who is the owner of the Willard Hotel?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have not the slightest idea. know personally anybody connected with the Willard Hotel; and it does not make any difference to me that I know of. It is simply a question of what is right and fair, considering the public interest and the equities, if I may term them such, that have been vested in the hotel company by the public consent.

Mr. KENYON. Whoever is owner of the Willard Hotel is certainly receiving a concession here which other hotels do not

Mr. ROBINSON. That is true; and I think, as suggested by the Senator from New Jersey, that they should be required to pay for it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. They never have before, Mr. ROBINSON. I have not anything further to state concerning the subject, Mr. President. It seems to me that the argument which the Senator from New Jersey had made is the soundest argument that can be made for retaining in the bill the provision which the committee has reported.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, the Senator refers to the matter of asphalt. If the Senator will recall, last year when this matter was up I raised the point that it would be a disaster to pave that street with asphalt; and I thought there was incorporated in the bill a provision that it should be paved with cobblestone instead of asphalt. Asphalt on that declivity or that incline would not be very easy and practicable for horses and machines, and it would be better that it should be cobblestone. I thought that cobblestone had been put in. But I want to know how it comes that a year has elapsed and no effort has been made in this direction; and if, in accordance with the suggestion of the committee, this thing is stricken out and left out entirely, what assurance have you that any effort whatever will be made?

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will excuse an interruption, the committee does not repeal the existing law. It simply suspends it until further action by Congress.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I know; but it amounts to an indefinite extension and laying aside. Let us maintain the present law, and suggest, if you choose, by amendment that the commissioners shall confer with the owner of this property in carrying out the improvement.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me? The Senator, I presume, is aware of the fact that paving the street with asphalt was upon the recommendation and somewhat persistence of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That might be.
Mr. GALLINGER. That is true. It was in the estimate. Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I think it very unfortu-

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me one other suggestion, I am not going to argue the desirability of continuing the existing system beyond this point. It has been stated here that this corporation is not paying anything for that ac-commodation. I chance to know it is the rule in this District to assess the value of that and add it to the assessed valuation of the property. Last evening I was talking with the editor of the Evening Star and large owner of the Evening Star Building, and this very matter came up. I said to him, "You have accommodations under the sidewalk, have you not?" He said, "Yes." "Do you pay anything for them?" He said, "It is assessed and added to the value of the property." I do not think that this is an exceptional case in that respect. I have no means of knowing what they have paid in the past; but if the commissioners are doing their duty, and the assessors appointed by the commissioners are doing their duty, this concession would be valued and its value added to the building and grounds and the taxes paid. So if there is any laches in the matter it easily goes back to the commissioners themselves.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I trust there may be some way of assessing for these privileges properly; but I doubt very much whether adequate recompense is received for that valuable privilege. But I say it would be really dangerous, it would be unfortunate, it would be ungenerous and unfair to me and every other property owner in the District of Columbia to acquiesce in the suggestions made by the committee. If you strike this out, it is admitted, as it seems to me, the most manifest wrong, impartiality, and unfairness of maintaining in force a situation of this kind. Pass a resolution, if you choose, advising the commissioners to confer with the owners of this affected property in a way that shall grant the public their rights and at the same time not operate unjustly on them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from New Jersey permit one other remark, which I intended to make while on my feet?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Certainly. Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator says that a year has elapsed and nothing has been done to carry out the law enacted a year ago. Of course, the proprietor of that hotel can not be charged with neglect.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Oh-

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will allow me, if there has been any neglect, it is the neglect of the District Commissioners; but, of course, they can not do every and do not think anybody ought to be blamed for that.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am not charging anything Mr. Martine owners. They are human. They are like ers; but, of course, they can not do everything in a year. I on the Willard Hotel owners. They are human. They are like the rest of us. I know they want to retain this privilege; but it does seem that the many property holders on the same street above F Street and the property holders on the other side below Pennsylvania Avenue have some rights that should be considered,

We should obey their behest and listen to their plea.

I hope the Senate will not adopt this amendment as proposed by the committee. I will willingly join with you in any effort after that to have the District Commissioners confer with the owners of this affected property that the matter may be settled upon some plan that shall be equitable and just to all interests.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Certainly.
Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the Senator if he knows who owns

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. One gentleman by the name of Stellwagen. I have heard a number of names. It is known as the Willard Hotel Co., I understand.

Mr. NORRIS. I asked the question because I am trying to get at the facts. I want to get information. I have heard it said—and I want to know whether it is true or not—that it is owned or a great part of it, at least, by some one connected with the Government; that he was an ambassador or some other

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am unable to answer as to that. I do not know whether it is true or not. I feel seriously that we can not as impartial legislators vote to grant this privi-You grant it away temporarily, you say; but it may be for all time. Some of us who are here will not be here another year. I will not; and I feel I will not be doing justice to myself, justice to my constituency, or justice to the taxpayers of the District of Columbia, unless some action should be taken upon it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, notwithstanding the special pleading of the Senator from New Jersey, I do not think that this committee amendment should be stricken out. I think it should remain in the bill.

I agree in the main with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson]. There is every reason why this should be suspended, when after a year the commissioners have not thought it proper to commence it. This item is not the only appropriation in this bill, or, rather, in its predecessors, for work that the commissioners have omitted to commence during last year. There is every reason why this should be further examined before one particular building should be picked out in this city to submit to a loss amounting to very many thousands of dol-lars; in fact, to submit to a loss in amount that would build complete an ordinary hotel in an ordinary size town.

Every modern building of consequence in Washington, so far as I know, has utilized the vault room under sidewalks.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Evidently the Senator has given some study to this matter, and I am trying to get the real facts.

Mr. WARREN. I shall be glad to give the information.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree that from the observation of at least a great many people they have excavated under the sidewalk. I am not finding fault with that. I think that is a general custom. But is it true that under the sidewalk, which extends about 12 feet into the street, they have excavated?

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator it is not true, so far as I know, and I have known more or less of that street for the last 30 or more years.

Mr. NORRIS. It is a very wide sidewalk. Mr. WARREN. I have never observed the taking of any distance out of the street in the vicinity under discussion. Both sides of the street have had wide parking space ever since the street was laid out, as I remember it.

Mr. NORRIS. If under the sidewalk they have not excavated beyond the usual width of a sidewalk, then the cutting off of some of the sidewalk and leaving it in the street proper would not injure the hotel very much.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that my information, so far as the space under the sidewalk is concerned, is that it is excavated very nearly out to the gutter.

Mr. OVERMAN. And on the opposite side of the street, where the Ebbitt is. It is done on both sides not by the New Willard but the Ebbitt.

Mr. NORRIS. And the New Willard, I understand Mr. OVERMAN. It makes a very narrow street.

Mr. NORRIS. The Ebbitt is on one side and the New Willard is on the other. I know the sidewalk is very wide.

Mr. WARREN. On both sides it is wide.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator about the law we passed that this amendment seeks to suspend. Did that pro- that if it is restricted it simply means that they will have to pose to cut that sidewalk down and make the street through that block just as wide as it is farther up?

Mr. WARREN. I assume that is the presumption. Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to read what the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia said. He came before our committee last year and recommended that this street be widened. They wanted to extend the car line down Fourteenth Street so that employees could go with convenience to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and to the Department of Agriculture. Two tracks there would make the street too narrow. So they sent in a report which I have here. The engineers of the city themselves recommended that this should be done.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me now before answering further. The street grade, as the Senator probably knows, is quite steep from Pennsylvania Avenue to F Street. You see there very few automobiles or carriages—in fact, I might say almost none at all going up and down that street. It is only a very short detour to go out around by the Treasury Building. So the travel, except the trucking or something that is to be delivered on either side of the street and the taxicabs that wait at the doors of the hotels, uses that street very little; but as to pedestrians there is a great flood of people going back and forth, up and down, and the same is true as to the street cars. The car tracks have already been put in there and the street cars have been running for a long

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; since we enacted the law I understand there have been street cars there.

Mr. WARREN. It did not require the enactment of the law for them to run street cars over that route.

Mr. NORRIS. At least the street cars are operating up and down through that block. I wish to ask the Senator if one reason why there is not more traffic over that block is the fact that it is hardly a full block, as I remember it, between F Street and Pennsylvania Avenue?

Mr. WARREN. It is not a long block because—
Mr. NORRIS. It is probably a little over half a block on account of Pennsylvania Avenue running diagonally there.
Would there not be more traffic if the street was wide enough to have it?

Mr. WARREN. I dislike to project my personality into this matter. I have, of course, no interest in the hotel and no interest in anybody connected with it. I do not know very much of the ownership and I do not care, but I lived in the hotel from the time it was rebuilt until three years ago, and my room opened out upon this part of the street about which we are talking. There has been to my knowledge no increase, but a decrease rather than an increase, so far as horse-drawn or motor-propelled transportation is concerned over that street. because, as I said, it is steep and it is rough, paved with cob-blestones, and it is not much farther around the swing from Pennsylvania Avenue to Fifteenth Street and back via F Street. Teams avoided it before just as they do now. To put asphalt paving there would be to make it nearly or quite impossible to drive a horse over it if it were at all wet or if there were snow or sleet upon it, and, in fact, I doubt whether they could drive safely over it with loaded teams even when perfectly Automobile grease would make further difficulty.

The amount of money expended under the sidewalk in question can only be appreciated by one who visits it. Last year when the matter was up I took it upon myself to go through it. The machinery there is two stories high. It would cost the hotel, I should estimate, nearly $100,000 to reconstruct and cover the machinery in providing other space.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator a question? I live in what is known as the Cochran Hotel. All their machinery and plant are under the pavement. Does the Senator know that they have had plenty of room for machinery there without extending the sidewalk? Does the Senator know that this width of the sidewalk can not be lessened and not disturb the machinery? As far as I can see, the machinery does not extend on the Ebbitt side, and to make it uniform with the balance of that great street the Willard Hotel would not be disturbed a particle there. I am asking the Senator if he knows if that can be done.

Mr. WARREN. The conditions are not entirely similar. The Willard Hotel on the north end, facing on F Street, is, I might say, three stories below the sidewalk. The consequence is that first there has to be a distance outside of the house taken to allow air and light to go down. But portions of it are in use for other purposes than storage and machinery. That narrows it to some extent. Then the balance, I think, is in use for machinery that is fitted in there, and the uses made for it are such shut down the work as it is now conducted and commence anew with much new machinery.

I doubt very much whether they would not have to ask permission to go out under the street. It is not at all strange that hotel buildings should use the space under sidewalks, and not only under the sidewalk, but under the street. Take the Congress Hotel in Chicago. It uses space under the street as well as under the sidewalk. Other hotels do the same. If it is proper to tax more on this hotel than on the others, then it ought to be taxed more. If it is subject to a license, let it be licensed. But this hotel was built under the proper authority. The commissioners have allowed it to be constructed and continued. They were there where they could see it every day; the District Building is located right near it. It has been carried on with the consent of everybody. The hotel has been to this

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. If the Senator from Wyoming will allow me, I will say whether right or wrong they were granted this permit by the Secretary of War. I do not say whether he had a right to do it or not, but they presumed he did have the right, and upon the authority given them they proceeded to spend an enormous amount of money. I must say I was utterly surprised when I went down into those vaults to see the extensive amount of machinery that is there.

Mr. WARREN. So would anyone be surprised.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I had not the slightest idea of it before, and I believe if Members of the Senate would go there and see it they would immediately find out whether there ought not to be some time allowed. I do not say forever, but their engines are under there, their boilers are under there, their dynamos are under there, their ice plant is under there, and the whole machinery of that hotel is under there. As to the expense, I am unable to state it; it would probably cost them from thirty to fifty thousand dollars to remedy it. Before we interrupt things of that kind we ought to be very careful and consider the matter thoroughly.
Mr NORRIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WARREN. Just a moment. What the Senator from Maryland says is absolutely true. I have such confidence in the fairness of the Senate that if Senators will take the pains to look in there I doubt if there is anyone who, after looking over the situation, will say that it is the right thing for this District, first, to give permission; second, to allow the construction to go on and to see how it is done; and third, to demand that the street shall be widened regardless of these great losses. We are only asking in this amendment that the matter may be suspended until the Senate does know more about it. I would be glad to see the street widened, if it could be done reasonably. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. This is the question I want to ask the Senator. It is proposed that the law shall be suspended until further action by Congress?

Mr. WARREN. Yes. Mr. NORRIS. It strikes me if we suspend the law we ought in the law making the suspension fix the time of suspension. Does it not really amount to a repeal of the law?

Mr. WARREN. No; I do not believe so. Mr. NORRIS. Then ought there not to be a limit at least in the amendment, say one year or two years.

Mr. WARREN. That might be, I will say to the Senator; but the Committee on Appropriations should have the opportunity to look into all these matters. I dare say very few members of the Committee on Appropriations have inspected this underground space and its contents, and few, if any, of the Senators not on that committee have ever inspected the underground premises at all. The most valuable machinery of that entire structure is located under the sidewalk. As I have said, in the world over spaces under sidewalks and streets even are used, and why select this particular building at this particular time and then force this through without having proper time granted to investigate it thoroughly?

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me, it seems if there is machinery or other property put in there lawfully, we ought to take it out, if we think it ought to be taken out lawfully, and if they suffer any damages we ought to pay for it, but, as I understand the situation, the sidewalk goes beyond the limits of a sidewalk. I do not know what the facts were when the machinery was put in there, but the very fact that somebody put machinery on public property and keeps it there for 25 years and has the privilege all that time ought not to be offered as an argument why he should keep it there continually.

Mr. WARREN. It was put there by consent and by arrangement.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President—
Mr. WARREN. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.
Mr. ROBINSON. I merely wanted to call attention to the fact that last year the District of Columbia appropriation act contained this language:

That hereafter the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to assess and collect rent from all users of space occupied under the sidewalks and streets in the District of Columbia, which said space is occupied or used in connection with the business of said users.

So that under the laws that now exist the hotel company would be compelled to pay a rental for use of lands under the sidewalk.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I desire to say a word on this amendment. Like the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], I have resided at the New Willard for 15 or 20 years, or since the structure was put up, and I think I can claim considerable familiarity with the particular neighborhood, more perhaps than almost any other Member of this body, except it be the Senator from Wyoming, who until recently likewise resided there.

This hotel, in my opinion, is in the nature of a great public improvement for the city of Washington and should be recognized as such. It is using the space under the sidewalk in precisely the same way that such space is being used all over the city of Washington, in Philadelphia, New York, Chicago, and every other great city in the world.

The point is raised that the sidewalk abuts 12 feet or more into the street upon each side. My recollection is that that condition of the sidewalk existed before the Willard Hotel was constructed. It is not peculiar to this hotel, because it prevails on the opposite side of the street in front of the Ebbitt Hotel, which is an old structure.

The Willard Hotel took advantage, in the same manner as every other hotel, of the space under the sidewalk. A hotel requires more space than a private dwelling or an ordinary store, and we should recognize that such is the fact. When they did that they were simply taking advantage of existing conditions, with the acquiescence of the District Commissioners, with the consent of the Secretary of War, and, as far as they knew, without objection on the part of anyone.

When the hotel was finished, I am one of those who are of the opinion that it was a distinct addition to the accommodation in the Capital of the Nation.

The street is quite precipitous. Now, about the street. enture to say that there is not an automobile or a vehicle of any kind that goes through that street which can avoid it. About the only conveyances that I have observed in my many years frequenting the neighborhood are the taxicabs which stand in front of either hotel or in the neighborhood of the Ebbitt House and the New Willard. It is not a street that vehicles use at I have been frequently impressed with the fact that day after day has elapsed and I have not seen a vehicle of any kind go down or up that street. I never thought it was necessary to extend the car tracks on the street, but it was done, and I have been frequently impressed with the fact that the cars are few and far between that travel over Fourteenth Street between F Street and Pennsylvania Avenue.

The hotel, as I am informed, is one of the largest taxpayers in the District of Columbia. I hesitate to say how many thousand dollars are paid in taxes; I have been told some $30,000. I may be wrong. Anyhow, it is a very large sum of money. If the commissioners or the taxing authorities believe that on account of these abutments and privileges the property is increasing in value and they should pay larger taxes, I have no doubt the hotel people would cheerfully do so.

I do not know who owns the hotel, Mr. President. quainted, of course, with the manager and the officials of the company who conduct the hotel. I have always had the impression that it was a corporation largely owned by a number of citizens of the District of Columbia, but as to their names I have never even taken the trouble to inquire. However, the hotel is there in good faith. This question about the sidewalk abutting beyond the line of the edge of the street is a condition which existed before the hotel was built. The abutment on this part of Fourteenth Street is, in my opinion, not one that causes any inconvenience, because the street is not used. When Fourteenth Street strikes F Street traffic is stopped on account of the hill. There is no travel on the street of any account, because one side of it is occupied entirely by the Willard Hotel from F Street to Pennsylvania Avenue, and the other side three-quarters the length of the block by the Ebbitt Hotel. I believe that a very great injustice and a very great hardship would be put upon the management of the hotel, and incidentally upon the thousands of people who use the hotel during the year, if they were subjected to what, in my opinion, is an entirely unnecessary action at this time.

At least, Mr. President, it can well be suspended, as the amendment provides. It is within the province of any Senator next winter, if complaints continue to come in, if they do-I certainly never heard of any-to revive this matter after full investigation in some way that will be equitable to those concerned.

It is, as I understand it, not merely a question of expense to the hotel; that, perhaps, could be overcome; but I doubt if they are compelled to recede to the extent of 12 or 15 feet of space that they already have under the sidewalk whether it will be physically possible for them to secure sufficient space for the machinery essential for the conduct of that great structure, and on that account the conduct of the hotel would be seriously curtailed and hampered and greatly interfered with.

As one having great familiarity with that section of the city and having spent so many years in Washington, interested in seeing ample accommodations for the thousands of people who naturally come to the Capital of the Nation, in view of the insufficient information which unquestionably exists, because few Senators in this body have any idea of the geography or topography or character of this proposition, I earnestly hope that we will at least suspend the law until those who are disposed to agitate the matter or to inquire into it can familiarize themselves with it, and at the next Congress any Senator can

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, if an amendment was proposed, like the Senator from Nebraska has suggested, to suspend it until a certain time instead of suspending it indefinitely, I think we might agree to that. I do not intend now to make any fight against this or against my committee. I took part in the debate two years ago. I want to say now I know nothing about who owns that hotel, but what governs me in my course as a member of the committee is not what Tom, Dick, or Harry or even a Senator might say, unless the Senator has investigated the matter. I am governed by the city engineers, by the Commissioners of the District, by the Secretary of the Treasury; and when those men whose duty it is to investigate and inform the Senate come before my committee and tell us that it ought to be done, I know what the city engineers think about it, I know what the Commissioners of the District think about it, and I know what the Secretary of the Treasury thinks about it. If the Senator will accept the amendment, I shall not go on any further, although I can, if it be deemed necessary, read what the officials to whom I have referred have said regarding

Mr. GALLINGER. I have investigated this subject very thoroughly, and I, too, have felt that some relief ought to be given to those people; but very likely the proposed amendment goes too far, and so I will offer as a substitute for the amendment of the committee what I now send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The Secretary. As a substitute for the committee amendment, from line 16 to line 21, inclusive, on page 28, it is proposed to insert the following:

Such part of the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1917 providing to "repave with asphalt the roadway of Fourteenth Street NW., from Pennsylvania Avenue to F Street, 70 feet wide, $7,500," is hereby suspended until March 1, 1918.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is extending it for a

Mr. OVERMAN. If the chairman of the committee will ac-ocpt that, I shall have nothing more to say.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That, it seems to me, is an unreasonable extension. The same arguments were used last year, that these people were located there and that we must not disturb them.

Mr. GALLINGER. This matter can not be adjusted in a day

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I realize that. I do not want to be unreasonable.

Mr. GALLINGER. This proposed relief is only for a year, and during that time conferences can be held and very likely an adjustment can be agreed upon.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will make no objection to Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I think the amendment to the amendment ought to be accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, is the bill now open to amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is one more committee

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is amendment which was passed over.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that there is one more committee amendment which was passed over that has not yet been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment passed over will now be stated.

The Secretary. The last committee amendment passed over was, on page 118, after line 2, to insert as a new section the following:

Sec. 8. Hereafter when any piping or other household fixtures or secondhand goods of any description whatever have been stolen and sold to a dealer in junk, or secondhand dealer, in the District of Columbia, under such circumstances that the commissioners, after hearing granted, are satisfied that said dealer should have had reasonable ground to believe, or could have ascertained by reasonable inquiry or investigation, that the goods were stolen, and that the dealer did not make reasonable inquiry or investigation as to the title of the seller before making the purchase, the commissioners are authorized and directed to revoke the license of said dealer; and this action shall not be a bar to criminal prosecution for receiving stolen goods.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland, I understand that the Senator

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I understand that the Senator from Nebraska has withdrawn his objection to that committee

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have talked with a number of Senators about the amendment, who have investigated the subject somewhat; and, so far as I am concerned, while I drew an amendment to the amendment with the intention of offering it. I have made up my mind that, as the committee amendment is satisfactory to everyone else, I shall not offer my amendment at this time. If the law does not work properly we can amend it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to:

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. After the word "each," at the end of line 7, page 56, it is proposed to insert:

One hundred additional privates of class 1, at $900 each, to be employed on or after March 1, 1917, $120,000; $30,000 of which shall be immediately available.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, this amendment is strongly urged by the District Commissioners, and especially by Mr. Commissioner Brownlow, who has supervision of the city police. The provision is more in the nature of an emergency act. The police force now has 715 men; 10 years ago it had 718 men; and in 1912 its total strength was 785 men. The force was decreased by Congress, together with the direction to remove a number of the men then stationed at the White House. In the last two years it has become necessary for the protection of the White House to restore these men to duty there, so that instead of 26 policemen at the White House four years ago there are now 49. Extra men detailed on duty at the White House and the various embassies number 62. There are other special points that require to be more closely watched, and this increase of a hundred privates to be made available upon the approval of the act is an imperative need.

These policemen, as I presume every one here understands, work in three shifts; so that, if the amendment is agreed to, it means approximately an increase in the number of policemen of 33. I do not think it is necessary to make a further statement in reference to the amendment, and I submit it to the the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it seems to me that there was nothing presented to the committee, unless it was presented to the subcommittee, to justify the employment of a hundred additional privates of class 1 on the police force.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator from Utah that Commissioner Brownlow had a talk with me about the matter. The policemen work in three shifts, as the Senator from Utah understands, and the amendment really only means an increase of 33 policemen on each shift. It is stated that a great many of these men have to be detailed on account of emergencies here to do certain work, which has placed the authorities in a very awkward situation. Commissioner Brownlow came to see me about the matter this morning. I suggested that they be put on the force temporarily, but his reply to that suggestion was that it would be pretty hard to get men at $900 a year to perform such service temporarily; that we had better arrange it in this way, and whenever the emergency ceased to exist they could discharge these men as they have heretofore done in similar cases.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot]. If my recollection serves me correctly, the number of Capitol policemen was recently increased by 100. This proposed increase for the entire city, relating to all public buildings in the city as well as to the property of the city and of citizens generally, is by the same number that we increased the Capitol police.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas does not mean that the Capitol police have been increased by 100? That is a larger number than we now have.

Mr. SMOOT. Or than we ever have had. Mr. ROBINSON. What was the number by which the Capitol police were increased?

Mr. OVERMAN. They were increased by 70. Mr. ROBINSON. By 70.

Mr. SMOOT. We have not a hundred Capitol policemen now.
Mr. ROBINSON. I did not mean to say they have been increased by 100, but I was speaking relatively.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator from Arkansas yield to

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield. Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to say that the Committee on Rules this morning held a meeting to consider the question of an increase in the number of policemen in the Capitol, which is now about 69; but not more than half of the force is constantly available. The Committee on Rules think that the Capitol police force ought to be increased by 50; and I have been authorized and instructed to offer a resolution providing such increase for the protection of the Capitol Building and of the House and Senate Office Buildings during the sessions of Con-I shall prepare an amendment to that effect, if the Senator will accept it, and will offer it to this bill, requiring the entire payment to be made out of the Treasury instead of out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Of course, the Senator from North Carolina recognizes the fact that the Capitol police have nothing to do with the Metropolitan police; that is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the reason why I said that I would only offer such an amendment if the Senator would accept it. If it should not be placed on this bill, it would be necessary to have passed through Congress a joint resolution to increase the number of the Capitol police force.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. But, if the Senator will excuse me,

I merely wished to give him the information he desired, while

I was on my feet.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, my memory has been refreshed since the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Overman] has made the statement which he has submitted to the Senate. Mr. Commissioner Brownlow did state to me and to the chairman of the committee this morning that the Capitol police force had been increased or would be increased by approximately 100. The Senator from North Carolina says that it is his purpose to increase the number by 50. For the purposes of this argument the conclusion is inevitable that if it is necessary under the emergency conditions which now exist, and with which every Senator is familiar, and which I do not think it necessary to go into in detail, to increase the Capitol police force by 50, it certainly is apparent that to increase the Metropolitan police force by 100 is entirely justifiable.

As I have already stated, these men work in three shifts a day, and the adoption of the amendment means the increase, approximately, of 33 on the force working during the entire time.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice the Senator's amendment provides for an appropriation of $120,000 with which to pay the Metropolitan police force, and then it provides that $30,000 of that sum is to be immediately available.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; it is intended to put this force on not later than the 1st of March in order that they may serve during the inauguration.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. It is desired to have them at once.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, I know that if the money is not made immediately available these men can not be employed until July I of this year. I simply wanted to know what was the idea of the Senator offering the amendment to make $30,000, or one-fourth of the money, immediately available.

Mr. ROBINSON. The amendment is in the form in which it was presented by the commissioners. The purpose of making the fund immediately available is to enable them to employ and pay these additional policemen before the beginning of the new

Mr. SMOOT. In other words, it is proposed that the 100 extra policemen shall begin duty on the 1st day of March.

Mr. ROBINSON. On the 1st day of March, or just as soon as they can be appointed.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment can go to conference. I shall not object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have another amendment to offer.

Mr. PENROSE. I inquire if the Senator has many more amendments, as I have to take a train in a few moments? Otherwise I would defer to the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; I will yield to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. PENROSE. I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 66, after line 19, it is proposed to insert the following:

That all the employees of the Metropolitan police department of the District of Columbia shall receive 30 days' annual and 30 days' sick leave, with pay, in any one calendar year: Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may, on the recommendation of the police surgeon, extend such sick leave as in their judgment is warranted by the circumstances of the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will not take the time of the Senate by asking to have the amendment again read if the Senator will explain it. I gathered from the reading that it proposes to give all members of the Metropolitan police force 30 days' leave of absence and 30 days' sick leave, and, then, in the judgment of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the sick leave can be extended beyond the 30 days. No Government employee has any such privilege as that now.

Mr. PENROSE. That was not contemplated, and I am obliged to the Senator for calling my attention to it. The amendment is designed simply to place the police force of the city on a parity with the other employees of the District. If the Senator will let it go to conference, it can be properly adjusted there, or the provision to which he calls attention can be stricken out.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will not object to the amendment, but will let it go to conference.

Mr. PENROSE. That is all I ask.

Mr. SMOOT. There is another consideration involved in the amendment, Mr. President. I do not want the Metropolitan police force of the District of Columbia to be put upon a better footing than all other Government employees.

Mr. PENROSE. Neither do I. 'Mr. SMOOT. But this amendment does that, I will say to the Senator, even with the proviso stricken out, for it says:

That all the employees of the Metropolitan police department of the District of Columbia shall receive 30 days' annual and 30 days' sick leave, with pay, in any one calendar year.

In all of the other departments and in the case of all other Government employees they may receive 30 days' sick leave, but they must actually be sick in order to receive that sick leave. Under this provision, however, members of the police department would receive it whether they were sick or whether they were not. In other words, the Metropolitan police force is to work 10 months instead of 12. That is not fair to the other employees of the Government, and I think a change should be made in the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just at that point I will ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if there is any more reason why this privilege should be extended to the police force than to the members of the fire department? If we are going into this matter wholesale, I think we ought to take in everybody who is entitled to consideration, and certainly the firemen are entitled to consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I recognize that the ramifications of an amendment of this kind would be very extensive, and I do not object to it, merely that it may go to conference. Of course I do not want the Senator to understand that I altogether agree with him.

Mr. PENROSE. I understand that. I only want to have the amendment considered in conference on its merits. I am willing to stand in that position. I ask in this connection to have inserted in the RECOND—

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I think it but fair to the Senator from Pennsylvania to say, as this amendment is going into conference, that we must not be expected to uphold it unless we felt after investigation that it was proper to do so.

Mr. PENROSE. Of course.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. When a matter goes to conference the conferees on the part of the Senate are naturally expected the conferees on the part of the Senator from Pennsylvania. to stand by it; but I assume the Senator from Pennsylvania does not demand that of the conferees of the Senate in this case.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not. I appreciate the courtesy of the chairman of the committee. It is obvious there are not many Senators present to listen to a discussion of the matter, and I will be content to let it go to conference for such consideration as can consistently be extended to it.

In that connection, for the information of the conferees, I ask to have inserted in the Record a brief statement entitled "Reaton and the statement of House hill 19119 sons for asking for proposed amendment to House bill 19119 relative to the Metropolitan Police Department." I call the attention of the chairman of the committee and the conferees to the statement, which will appear in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter referred to will be inserted in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

REASONS FOR ASKING FOR PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO H. R. 19119.

With the price of foodstuffs and other necessities of life constantly increasing, the bare necessities being almost beyond the reach of the average layman, with most of the large corporations in the United States recognizing the need of giving their employees a living wage, with 13 cities having a population ranging from 452,255 down to 32,906 giving their patrolmen salaries ranging from $1.464 down to $1,300 per annum, their percentage of patrolmen being about the same as Washington, D. C., namely, one to each 600 inhabitants, we respectfully ask that our plea for a living wage be considered. Following is a list of statistics as compiled from records of Department of Commerce for year of 1915:

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to this amendment by inserting after the words "District of Columbia," in the second line, the words "and the employees of the fire department of the District of Columbia."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the members of the fire department now have a leave of absence of 20 day

Mr. GALLINGER. But they have not 30 days, and they do not have sick leave, do they?

Mr. SMOOT. They have, in addition to the 20 days, one day layoff out of every five days. So they virtually have the same thing as 30 days

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well. If that be so, I will not offer the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that that is the case. Mr. GALLINGER. I move to strike out of the amendment Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may, on the recommendation of the police surgeon, extend such sick leave as in their judgment is warranted by the circumstances of the case.

I think those words would prejudice the amendment, and I move to strike them out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to. The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I have one more amendment, and then I am done. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The Secretary. On page 116, after line 23, it is proposed to

SEC. 7. That until otherwise provided for, the wages, salaries, or compensation of all persons provided for herein, carried on per diem or annual rolls, shall be increased according to the following schedule:

First. Every employee now receiving $1,200 per annum or less shall receive an increase in wages, salary, or compensation of 20 per cent.

Second. Every employee now receiving over $1,200 and less than $2,600 per annum shall receive an increase in wages, salary, or compensation of 10 per cent.

That a sufficient sum to provide for the above increases in wages, salary, or compensation is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That detailed reports shall be submitted to Congress on the first day of the next session showing the number of persons, the grades or character of positions, the original rates of compensation, and the increased rates of compensation provided for herein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether this amendment was considered by the committee? It provides a more liberal schedule of advance than that contained in the bill as reported.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that it was, and that the consensus of opinion of the committee was that increases should be given to the employees of the District in proportion whether they received under a thousand or over a thousand dollars a year; that is, that they should receive the same increase that is given to other Government employees.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Pennsylvania will permit me, there is this to be said about the matter, that we have already inserted in the bill an amendment taking care of all employees of classifications by a certain schedule of increases. If this amendment goes in, we shall have two provisions in the bill in conflict with each other. I really think the Senator from Pennsylvania ought to be content with what the committee has put in the bill and what the Senate has agreed to to-day, which is an increase of 15 per cent to the lowest paid employees and 10 per cent to those receiving up to $1,000. It is exactly the provision that went into the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and which we hope to hold in all the bills; but even that is being contested by some

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I recognize the difficulties and the complications surrounding legislation of this character. I do not want to withdraw the amendment, but I will ask to have it lie on the table, and will ask the conferees, if they can, to adopt a somewhat more liberal schedule than is now contained in the bill as reported.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I submit the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 18, on page 105, it is proposed to insert the following:

For the acquisition of a park in Klingle Valley, from Woodley Road to Connecticut Avenue, near the Zoological Park, in general accordance with the map on file in the office of the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia, dated February 10, 1916, with an area of approximately 83 acres, $87,000, the same to become a part of the park system of the District of Columbia.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, while the District Committee had under consideration an amendment relating to this subject, I was authorized to submit that amendment and the fol-

For the construction of a culvert to carry Klingle Valley Creek underneath Connecticut Avenue, in order to enable adjoining property owners to make an earth viaduct on the line of Connecticut Avenue where it crosses said valley, $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That no part of this money shall be available until the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have secured satisfactory guarantee of sufficient fill and base to bring said area up to the proper level of Connecticut Avenue.

The first amendment is in compliance with the estimates submitted by the District Commissioners. The amendment which I have just read was submitted to the District Commissioners by the Committee on the District of Columbia, but before their report was received the bill was reported to the Senate. They report adversely on the second amendment, but strongly recommend the first amendment. The first amendment is in substantial compliance with a report made by Col. Harts on July 19, 1916. In that report, however, it was recommended that certain other areas be also acquired. This amendment relates to the one area embraced in Col. Hart's report, which he said in the report he thought it most desirable to secure at this time.

My desire is to have both of these amendments included in the bill, so that the entire subject matter may go to conference and the conferees may have the privilege of selecting either of the amendments. The District Commissioners have very earnestly for some six or seven years advocated the adoption of the first amendment. They say that there is no suitable approach to Rock Creek Park at that point and that the acquisition of this area ought to be accomplished now, or otherwise it may pass from the power of Congress to obtain it.
Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. NORRIS. I want to get the location of this proposed addition to the park as provided in the first amendment, which, as I understand, is the only amendment the Senator has formally offered. Does the amendment now pending relate to the area contiguous to the bridge just north of the Connecticut Avenue entrance to the Zoological Park?

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the location of the land.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well; I have the location in mind, then.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, as chairman of the committee I accept the amendment and will let it go to conference

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator accept both amendments?
Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will accept both amendments.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, which amendment is that?
Mr. ROBINSON. The amendment read at the desk. I shall offer the other amendment after that is disposed of, for the reasons I have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas, as stated by the Secretary.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to that amendment, but I want to be heard on the other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I now offer the second amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. Following the amendment just agreed to, it is proposed to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

For the construction of a culvert to carry Klingle Valley Creek underneath Connecticut Avenue, in order to enable adjoining property owners to make an earth viaduct on the line of Connecticut Avenue where it crosses said valley, $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That no part of this money shall be available until the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have secured satisfactory guaranty of sufficient fill and base to bring said area up to the proper level of Connecticut Avenue.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I explained a moment agoprobably the Senator from Nebraska did not hear me-that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia had been urging the first amendment, the one which has already been agreed to, for a number of years, but it has not been authorized, and there is in another body very serious opposition, I think, to the amendment. The second amendment is not inconsistent with the first amendment, but in all probability if the first amendment is agreed to the second amendment might not be retained by the

It is desirable that some action be taken at the place indicated. If the property is not to be acquired, then the fill-in should be permitted. I therefore ask that the Senate permit the amendment to be agreed to in order that the whole subject matter may be considered in conference.

In that connection, I desire to insert in the RECORD the letter of the District Commissioners, signed by the president of the Board of Commissioners, Mr. Newman. Some of the objections made in their letter have been met in the amendment which I have submitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, Washington, February 2, 1917.

The letter referred to is as follows:

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,

Hon. John Walter Snite,

Chairman Subcommittee on Appropriations,

District of Columbia, United States Senate.

Dear Sin: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to submit the following on the draft of a proposed amendment to the pending District appropriation biff, as follows:

"For the construction of a culvert to carry Klingle Valley Creek underneath Connecticut Avenue in order to enable adjoining property owners to make an earth viaduct on the line of Connecticut Avenue where it crosses said valley, $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That no part of this money shall be available until the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have severed to satisfactory guaranty of sufficient fill to bring said area upon to information and for opinion as to its merits.

The substitution of an earth viaduct for the bridge which now carries Connecticut Avenue over Klingle Valley will necessitate the eventual filling of the greater part of Klingle Valley west of Connecticut Avenue, thus destroying one of the most beautiful approaches to Rock Creek Park. For many years the commissioners have advocated the retention of this valley in its natural condition, and about a year ago held a public hearing at which the proper treatment of this valley as the principal subject of discussion. The hearing was largely attended and, except for the representations of one or two dumping ground for surplus earth, the opinion multiple walley as a part of the park system, and condemnation proceedings have ree made to secure an appropriation for the acquisition of this valley as a part of the park system, and condemnation proceedings have ree made to secure an appropriation for the acquisition of this valley was recently been instituted to acquire a short connecting roadway between Macomb Street and Klingle Valley—a roadway which will be wholy unnecessary if the valley is filled as is contemplated by the propose to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Arkansas, but will let it go to conference.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to be heard on the amendment. I have not read, of course, the commissioner's letter which the Senator has just asked to have printed in the RECORD. I do not know what the letter contains, and had no idea that this amendment was to be offered to this bill. I am perfectly familiar with this location, and I believe that the first amendment ought to be agreed to, and have no objection to it, except that the price named in it, in my judgment, is more than we ought to pay for that land. As I recall, the amount to be paid will approximate $10,000 an acre. I think it is not worth more than $1,000 an acre, because it is on two side hills, and for building purposes it is practically useless. It ought to be a part of the park. I pass it every day when I come to the Senate and when I go home; and if I go home before it is dark I

Under the bridge on Connecticut Avenue which crosses the ravine there is a little creek-I will ask the Senator from Arkansas the name of it?

Mr. ROBINSON. Klingle Valley Creek. Mr. NORRIS. Klingle Valley Creek. The bridge over that ravine is just north of the Connecticut Avenue entrance to Rock Creek Park. There are slopes on each side, an angle in some instances of more than 45°, running down to a deep valley that is wooded, its sides being covered with very heavy timber. The land on the north side of that ravine or canyon is not far from Macomb Street, which is the only street there. There are lots and buildings facing on Macomb Street. of this land to be purchased on the north side of the ravine is owned by the people who laid out Cleveland Park, as I understand; that is, they laid out the lots fronting along Macomb Street, most of which they have sold, although I presume there are some few that they still own. The slope of the valley on the north comes up to the rear of those lots and buildings, from which it slants down to an angle of at least 45° to the bottom of the valley, where there is already a road. That is an entrance to Rock Creek Park; and you can also go into the Zoological Park in that way.

Mr. President, this land, at least on the side that is to be purchased under this amendment, as far as I can see, is of very little use. It has no outlet, in the first place, to any street that is inhabited or that could be inhabited. It ought to be a part of the park. It is covered with heavy timber. For that very reason, Mr. President, we never ought to adopt the second amendment that is proposed. As I look at it, these amendments are absolutely inconsistent with each other.

The proposition of the second amendment is that the Government shall pay $15,000, as I remember the amount from hearing it read, to make an archway for this small creek to flow under this bridge, and then permit the property owners to fill up that ravine even with the present street where the bridge crosses the ravine. That would mean that all this timber would be destroyed. That would mean that this slope that is nice to look at and is nice as part of the park would be of no value, of course, for park purposes. The timber would be destroyed and the beauty of the scenery absolutely rulned. It does not seem to me that that ought to be done. There is only one object in to me that that ought to be done. doing it, and that is to make valuable private property, at least on the north side of the ravine, where the people have already received ample compensation for their property by selling all that was good.

I hope, therefore, that the Senator from Arkansas will not insist on this amendment. I do not know how familiar he is with the subject, but I should like to go with him and show him the ground. If the first amendment is adopted, and we acquire this land for park purposes, then we do not want to destroy the timber or to fill up this ravine. It would certainly ruin it. It would be of no value for park purposes. If you should fill that up and have the street run over the top instead of the bottom of that ravine the people who own the land could build houses on it, and the lots would be valuable. But, Mr. President, that will be at the expense of ruining all the beauty there is there. That will have the effect of ruining the land entirely for the purposes of a park.

I understand that some of the land to be acquired by the first amendment is on the other side of this ravine. What I have said about the north side applies to the other side as far as the slope of the ground is concerned and as far as trees are concerned, but there are no buildings farther out. That is owned, as I understand, by the Chevy Chase Land Co., and if it were filled up it would make their property more valuable, it is But if the first amendment is agreed to, as I understand, it is the purpose to purchase the sloping part of that side of the ravine, and I think that ought to be done. They ought to get whatever the property is worth. My own idea, however, is that it is not worth, and that anybody who will look at it would say that it is not worth, nearly the amount of money that is carried by this amendment.

Mr. BRADY. There is no question that it was proper to adopt the first amendment; but I should like to ask the Senator whether or not this last amendment is recommended by the Commissioners of the District?

Mr. ROBINSON. No. I stated, Mr. President, that the first amendment was strongly urged by the District Commissioners, and the second amendment was not recommended, and that if the first amendment stays in the bill the second amendment in all probability will go out; but if the property is not to be acquired for a park, all objections to the second amendment cease. The objections which the Senator from Nebraska has offered to the second amendment are substantially those stated by the District Commissioners; that is to say that they want this land for a park, that it ought to be a part of the park system, and that the second amendment ought not to be agreed to for that reason alone, that it will mar the beauty of the park by having a fill there instead of leaving a natural valley

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I can not quite agree with the Senator as to what the conditions will be if the first amendment shall go out and the last amendment remain. If the first amendment should go out and the last amendment be adopted, it would forever stop the building of a park in that part of the city.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not think that is true.

Mr. BRADY. And it is very essential that the first amendment be adopted.

Mr. ROBINSON. The first amendment has been adopted already.

Mr. BRADY. I mean, by the conference report. I think that is a very important amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Here is the thought, if the Senator pleases: The matter ought to be determined soon. It has been under consideration now for nearly 10 years. If we are going to acquire this as a part of the park, it will be accomplished under the first amendment; and in all probability the second amend. the first amendment; and in all probability the second amendment, if agreed to here, would go out in conference. But if the first amendment goes out, there is no reason in the world why the fill which is authorized under the second amendment should not be made.

As to the cost of the property, I know nothing about that except that the District Commissioners estimated that amount, and Col. Harts's report is substantially in compliance with that estimate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, permit me to say a little further-and I thank the Senator from Arkansas for suggesting it to me-that if this fill is made, as contemplated by the pending amendment—

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will permit me, I think I can make the matter clear in one sentence. This proposition, if agreed to, will give the conferees complete choice between the two amendments.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. One side favors one amendment and the other side has insisted upon the other amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me proceed with the proposition now the same as though this amendment were agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.
Mr. NORRIS. If this amendment is agreed to and remains in the bill, and that ravine is filled, then it will have to be filled farther on beyond that bridge. The gully—the ravine—is filled farther on beyond that bridge. The gully—the ravine—is just as deep on the east side of that bridge as it is on the west side.

Mr. SMOOT. Deeper.
Mr. NORRIS. Yes; deeper, the Senator from Utah reminds
te. That will have to be filled. That runs through the tract that we passed a law a year or two ago to purchase as an addition to the Zoological Park. That bridge is right on the line. I will ask the Senator from Utah if I am not right about that?

Mr. SMOOT.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it is.
*Mr. NORRIS. When you get east of the bridge that ravine is part of the land that we have already passed a law to acquire as an addition to the Zoological Park. If you fill it up on the other side you must fill it on the east of the bridge, or you can not have a street there coming down in the place of the one that is now in the bottom of the ravine. So that we will be destroying the scenery, the timber, and the usefulness for park purposes of the part that we have already passed a law to purchase as an addition to the Zoological Park.

I am satisfied that Senators would not be for the second amendment under any circumstances if they could see and were acquainted with the situation and the lay of the ground. Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] lives not so very far from this locality, and I presume he is as familiar with it as I am. If I am not getting the facts right, I shall be glad to be corrected by him or any other Senator who knows the conditions.

Suppose this middle aisle here were Connecticut Avenue, and up there, about to the door, going in that way, were the entrance to the present Zoological Park. We are all familiar with that. Pass right on until you get north and west, and you come to a bridge going over a ravine that is 50, 75, or 100 feet deep. is the place where this fill is to take place. At the end of that bridge is this street or road, known as Klingle Valley. It runs right under it, running east and west, mainly.

that road. We put the road up here on top, instead of 100 feet down. We have got to fill it clear on here. Just as soon as we come to the bridge, we come then to the line of the property that we have passed a law to purchase as an addition to the Zoological Park. That has the same ravine in it, excepting that it gets a little wider and a little deeper and goes on down.

Now, there is a driveway in there. I believe there is no more beautiful driveway anywhere in any of the parks of the city of Washington than that is as it goes under that bridge. If the pending amendment is adopted, that will be obliterated entirely. The Government owns the road there. They can not destroy that. The only benefit will come to the owners of the property on each side, through enabling them to tear down the hill and fill up this ravine and make their property more valuable.

If the amendment that has already been agreed to remains in the bill, this is what happens: It takes both sides here as an addition to the park, and then these property owners are disposing to the Government of the only part of their property that is useless for residential purposes. The Government is getting is useless for residential purposes. The Government is getting it for park purposes. It is good for park purposes, and for nothing else, unless it is filled up.

That is the proposition, Senators. I believe that if you could see the lay of the land, no one would support the second amendment. I can not see anything in it excepting, it is true, that it would enable the owners of the property on each side of this ravine to fill up the ravine, and have the property then for whatever purposes they might wish to use it for, and it would probably make it more valuable for the purpose of speculation and sale; but for park purposes it would ruin it. Nobody except the Government owns the road; at least, that has to remain as it is; and this side, at least on the north side, can not be filled up unless the Government takes action and permits it to be done, because it would destroy public property to do it.

Mr. BRADY. Private property.

Mr. NORRIS. If it is filled up, it will destroy the road, of course. It can not be filled up without an act of Congress, as I understand, permitting it to be done. Now, it seems to me that that ought not to be done; and, at all events, before it is done I wish Senators would go out and look at it. If you walk across that bridge, you will see it, as I walk across it twice nearly every

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hope the Government will purchase the 81 acres provided for in the first amendment. That matter has been presented to the Senate time and time again. I think it has been adopted in the Senate and always has gone out in conference. But the price I consider exceedingly high, and I might say exorbitant. The amendment carries an appropriation of $87,000 for the 8\frac{3}{4} acres, which would be $10,000 an acre. I believe if any Senator would go out and look over the land, if he would just walk across the bridge and have pointed out to him where the $\frac{3}{4}$ acres of land is located, and see the character and situation of the land, he would immediately say that $10,000 an acre is altogether too much to pay for the land.

I say what I say at this time because if this matter goes into conference and the House conferees seriously consider purchasing this 84 acres of land this year, and yet do not feel that they can pay $10,000 an acre for it, I should like very well to have the amendment agreed to at a reasonable rate and allow the 8% acres of land to be purchased.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course I should be glad to see the Government get the property as cheaply as possible.

Mr. SMOOT.

Mr. ROBINSON. I simply submit the amendment in the form in which it was suggested by the District Commissioners. The Senator understands that. Of course he understands also that if it can be obtained much cheaper than that I shall be highly

Mr. SMOOT. Of course the Senator knows that I was not reflecting upon his judgment in any way.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, I understand that.

Mr. SMOOT. Because I knew very well how the amendment came here, and I knew why the Senator offered it.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator has well stated that the Senate has repeatedly put in the bill this first amendment, which has already been agreed to, or substantially that amendment, and that it has gone out, in conference or otherwise, year after year. If this land is not to become a part of the park is there, in the Senator's opinion, any reason why the second amendment should not be

Mr. SMOOT. The second amendment need not be considered for a minute if the first amendment is agreed to; and I want to say to the Senator frankly that even if they disagree to the first amendment, providing for the purchase of the St acres of land, I sincerely hope that the Senate conferees will not agree to the fill as provided for in that amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I just suggested that if they did agree to the first amendment, in all probability the second

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator interrupted me before I got through.

Mr. ROBINSON. All right.

Mr. SMOOT. Even if they do not agree to the first amendment, and do not purchase the 84 acres, then I sincerely hope, as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] said, that we will not provide for the fill at this time. I think it would be unwise. I think it would destroy the beauty of the road that the Government has already provided, and I believe it would be an unsightly piece of work that we never could get rid of in the

Mr. BRADY. And it would utterly spoil the prospect of securing a park.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt of it at all in my mind.

There is no doubt of it at all in my mind. Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I hope this mooted or controverted question may be settled this year. I have been instrumental several times in putting an amendment in the District of Columbia appropriation bill for the purchase of this bit of land for park purposes; but, as has been stated, we have always lost it. Now, last year we were confronted with this proposition: The bridge over this ravine is unsafe. The authorities have forbidden two cars to pass over that bridge at the same time. There was a proposition to make an appropriation for plans for a new bridge over Calvert Street, and also for a new bridge there. But while that was under consideration the question of making a fill came up, and the committee had not time to make careful inquiry, so we dropped out the proposed appropriation for that new bridge, which will cost $250,000 at least, waiting until this matter was more carefully considered, We did make an appropriation for plans for the Calvert Street bridge, which is that bridge that stands so high in the air as you pass along Calvert Street.

Mr. SMOOT. And which is very unsafe.
Mr. GALLINGER. That bridge is very unsafe, also; and I feel very sure that we will have a new bridge there in the near

The question as to whether we shall have a new bridge there, or whether that ravine shall be filled, is a question that may well be considered. I feel sure that the amendment that has been suggested by the Senator from Arkansas, when it goes to conference, will enable the conferees to work out this proposition so that we will have a question settled which has been a disturbing thing for a good many years.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, long before I entered public life I acquired some interests in the District of Columbia, and among them an interest in the Chevy Chase Land Co., which owns a part of the area affected; and I feel, as I am present at this discussion, that I ought to make some statement regarding it. It is not my intention, of course, to vote upon this matter or to take any part in it beyond a candid statement with reference to the situation.

You all know the western entrance to the Zoo Park on Connecticut Avenue, and you know the bridge just beyond it to the north, between the Zoo Park and Chevy Chase; and you know the valley underneath that bridge, called Klingle Valley, which commences at Woodley Lane, on the west, and runs easterly under Klingle Bridge into both the Zoo Park and the National Park. As the Senator from Nebraska has stated, Connecticut Avenue at the entrance to the Zoo Park is a very unsightly development. There are high clay banks upon both sides there that ought to be cut down. The property owners to the west of Connecticut Avenue and south of Klingle Bridge, owning an area of about 30 acres, of which Mrs. Von Hammert, a lady living in Paris, owns a strip of 7 acres immediately adjoining Connecticut Avenue, and the Chevy Chase Land Co. owns the balance, have been desirous for years of cutting down that hill and taking the surplus earth and filling Klingle Valley, which the owners of the land above own. The Government has no interest at all there except in Connecticut Avenue, and that it acquired by the gift of the Chevy Chase Land Co., which not only dedicated the avenue itself for a space of 3 miles but also without public aid expended about $250,000 in grading the avenue—a thing that I think is unexampled in the history of the District of Columbia.

The owners of the Chevy Chase company also built the bridge across the Klingle Valley at an expenditure of about $150,000, no portion of which was contributed by the Government; and also built the Calvert Street Bridge across Rock Creek without any contribution by the Government. So that the owners of this property to the west of the Zoo Park entrance, partly the Chevy Chase Land Co. and partly Mrs. Von Hammert, have the entire ownership of the valley. The only interest that the Government has in the valley itself is in a road, called Klingle Road, that passes through it, and that road was the result of the grant of a mere right of way by the owners of the property.

Now, let us see how the powers of the Government are being used to the hardship of these proprietors. That bridge is becoming unsafe. It is necessary, therefore, to make a viaduct across Klingle Valley, either of earth or of stone. owners are permitted to make it of earth, it will cost the Government nothing. If the Government constructs a bridge there, as it has over Sixteenth Street, it will cost the Government $250,000. So that the development that the property owners have considered for years, consisting of scraping off the top of this hill and filling in the valley, would save the Government $250,000 in the construction of a bridge. Then it would make every inch of that valley as profitable and as valuable as the upland at present, for it would all then be upland. This valley itself has a great value as a fill for the surplus soil on the upland, and if the owners do not utilize it, it means that at great expense they will have to grade their hills and transport the material elsewhere.

The purpose of the property owners was to grade that land, to put that entire region in a beautiful and attractive condition, and not to permit it to remain, as it has been for years past, the most unsightly part of Washington. They found, however, that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Art Commission were desirous of preserving this valley as a picturesque approach to the park and of maintaining it in its natural condition. Col. Judson, then engineer commissioner, informed me of that some 10 years ago, when the land company was proposing to level the hills and fill Klingle Valley. I told him what the plans of the company were, but he insisted upon it that this was a place of great natural beauty, and that public spirit ought to prompt me to postpone the execution of these plans until the Government could act.

It was entirely within our power to shave off those hills and to fill up that valley and end it, but I did not think that it would be a becoming thing to do. I thought it would hardly be a public-spirited thing to do until Congress should have an opportunity of acting upon the subject. Now, Congress has had that opportunity for 10 years, and for 10 years the District Commissioners—with the approval of the Art Commission, I think—have been seeking the condemnation of this valley; but as yet, while I believe it has had the approval of the Senate, it has not had the approval of the House. I am told that there are those in the House who think that as a matter of economy a viaduct of earth ought to be built across there, and save the Government the expenditure of $250,-000, and that when filled, after four of five years, it will be as attractive as it is now in its natural condition. I am assured by landscape architects that it can be made nearly as attractive when filled in as now, and that the approach to the national park can be made as effective as it could be if this natural beauty were availed of.

Now, meanwhile that land, which was acquired at a large cost by the Chevy Chase company 27 years ago, has been lying undeveloped, the owners feeling that they ought not to act arbitrarily in the matter, and, waiting for the Government to act, content that the Government abandon the acquisition of the parkway, desirous even that they should do so. So far as I am concerned, I do not wish the Government to acquire an inch of the land in which I have any interest. It is a matter of delicacy with me, as a Member of this body, and I would much prefer that I should have no dealings whatever with the Government with reference to any land in which I am interested.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PHELAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.
Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I want to fortify what the Senator has just said. When I was chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia and the committee took the matter up in the first place, the Senator op-posed the project, saying that he preferred to retain the holdings he had there rather than to have them sold to the Government at any price. I recall that very distinctly as having occurred on two different occasions.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I may say that it interferes very materially with the plans of the owners of that property, and if the owners of the property had been allowed to go on there would not have been during these 10 years this unsightly approach to the Zoological Park and the unfinished appearance that now

Now, as to the value, I will state that that land cost 27 years ago $5,000 an acre, if my recollection is right. The addition of interest and taxes for this period would bring its cost to the present proprietors to twelve or fifteen thousand dollars an acre. I call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to

I was engaged and did not hear the Senator. Mr. NEWLANDS. The land, as I stated, cost 27 years ago, if I recollect aright, $5,000 an acre, valley and upland. The cost would amount now, I imagine, to $12,000 or $15,000 an acre with interest and taxes added. The land to which the Senator from Nebraska refers has been appraised by the assessors for purposes of taxation at the amount recommended by the District Commissioners for purchase. The $87,000 recommended by the District Commissioners as their estimate of value is the amount at which the assessors of the District have appraised it for assessment and taxation.

The valley land has much greater value than the Senator attributes to it. It is easy to see if the surplus of the upland is cut off and put in this valley all will be equally valuable, and developed land around there sells for from fifty to seventyfive cents a square foot. Fifty cents a square foot would be over $20,000 an acre and 60 cents a square foot would mean over $25,000 an acre. This, of course, would be the value after a considerable expenditure in leveling, grading, and constructing street and other improvements. It must be recollected also that the loss of this valley by governmental purchase will mean an injury to the uplands, whose value depends on a near-by fill for the excess earth.

Mr. President, I am indifferent as to what is done. Indeed, I would much prefer individually that the Government should not take this valley and let the property owners go along and make that fill and earthen viaduct in Connecticut Avenue and save the Government an expenditure of $250,000 in the construction of the future bridge. The property owners will deal with that land in such a way as to make it infinitely more attractive than it is now. But we have a right to ask that the Government should come to some conclusion about the matter. It seems to me that the members of the committee have acted wisely in so shaping these matters that in conference the whole thing can be settled one way or the other, either to provide for a viaduct of concrete or earth or have the Government take the valley now or not at all. Whatever course the Government sees wise to pursue in this matter, I am content, but I do think-that fair dealing between the Government and its citizens requires prompt and decisive action.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat? Can the Senator state where the east line is to Klingle Valley between the park and the land owned by the Chevy Chase Real Estate Co.?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The easterly line of the valley sought to be acquired by this amendment is Connecticut Avenue.

Mr. SMOOT. I know what is the eastern line prov

I know what is the eastern line provided for by the amendment, but what I wanted to know is whether the Senator can describe to us the easterly line between the park and the land owned by the Chevy Chase Real Estate Co. How far down the valley eastward is the line from the bridge on Connecticut Avenue?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Chevy Chase Land Co.'s land runs right under the bridge.

Mr. SMOOT. Does it stop at the bridge?
Mr. NEWLANDS. It stops just about at the bridge. Mrs.
Von Hammert's land, the lady living in Paris, who owns the big bluff just opposite the Zoo Park entrance, also comes down to the bridge. She owns about 7 acres of this elevated plateau and the Chevy Chase Land Co. owns about 23 acres.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it the idea to fill the whole valley?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to say to that, no. The idea is that filling in the viaduct would only result in spreading out by a slope of 2 to 1 or 3 to 1 on each side toward the east and the west, and that that fill would run out on the west within, say, four or five hundred feet of the Connecticut Avenue Bridge, thus leaving a large portion of the valley in its natural state, not interfering at all with the beautiful residence of Mr. Parmelee, of Cleveland, who has built in that vicinity. I wish to say that we are very solicitous of the feelings and rights of everybody in that neighborhood and are

Mr. SMOOT. If the contemplated work was done then the bottom of the valley on the road up where the valley now is would be level with the present railroad bridge on Connecticut Avenue, would it not?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No; I think it is contemplated that there should be a slope from the Connecticut Avenue bridge toward the west.

Mr. SMOOT. And toward the east?

Mr. NEWLANDS. And toward the east, and that the fill will run out about 500 feet to the west of Connecticut Avenue bridge. The whole valley is about 1,500 feet long.

Mr. SMOOT. That is about one-third of the distance.

Mr. NEWLANDS. About one-third of the whole distance.
Mr. SMOTT. Is it the idea, then, where that slope runs down dwellings will be put along by the road on the level of the

Mr. NEWLANDS. I can not say as to that. The views of the landscape architect would control as to that. I will state that in all our development out there we have secured such men as Frederic L. Olmstead and other men of that character to give us their views regarding the most pleasing development of the property affected.

Mr. SMOOT. Your idea, then, is to put a drainage system to carry off the water that runs down that street into the. valley?

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is it.

Mr. SMOOT. After the work is completed the valley, as far as its original beauty is concerned, as nature provided it, would be virtually destroyed.

Mr. NEWLANDS. No; I do not think so because this fill would only run to the west a distance of about 500 feet and leave about 1,000 feet of the valley unaffected. I mean that it could be so done. In conference I imagine that the conferees would be certain to have the views of the Senator from Nebraska and all parties interested there—the Senator lives in that neighborhood—as to what is the wisest and best course to pursue, but I submit it is time for the Government to act in some decisive way. Connecticut Avenue was given to it by the very company that wants to fill under it. The very bridge you have there was the gift I may say of this company. The very right of ways that it has through Klingle Valley was the grant of the pro-prietors of the soil. There was no interest in anybody except those proprietors apparent there, and yet their interests have not been considered at all with reference to the development of that region, and I think they have been very unjustly tied up. I do not mean that it has been intentional. Such delay seems inseparable from Government enterprise.

I wish to say further, as there is this misunderstanding in reference to the Chevy Chase enterprise, many people assume that these streets that have been developed along the line of Connecticut Avenue running east and west from that line have been developed by Government funds. I wish to say that so far as the lands of this company are concerned the street improvements have been made at their expense, and I know of little that has been contributed by the Government. The company might well insist that the large taxes it pays should be expended in large part at least in public improvements within its own boundaries, but this has not been the case.

Mr. BRADY. I should like to ask the Senator a question relative to the filling of the valley. I did not understand until the present moment that it was the intent to fill the valley the entire width there

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state right here that I think it is quite practicable to fill it in possibly only two-thirds across, and then have a short bridge with a big arch that would enable the people to pass through below in their accustomed way over this road. All those things can be considered in the committee of conference, and I have no doubt that plans will be presented there regarding the matter.

Mr. BRADY. If they fill up the full width of the valley, I understand the Senator to say that it would extend the fill about 500 feet both east and west.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes Mr. BRADY. Would that fill go up to Mr. Parmalee's prop-

Mr. NEWLANDS. Oh, no. The aim would be to avoid an interference with Mr. Parmalee's property.

Mr. BRADY. Do you leave that valley open?
Mr. NEWLANDS. The roadway will continue as it is in front of Mr. Parmalee's property.
Mr. BRADY. If the whole valley is filled?
Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; the fill of Connecticut Avenue will not reach Mr. Parmalee's property.

Mr. BRADY. I was under the impression that it would cover part of his property, and it would spoil the scenic beauty of it very much, indeed.

Just a word, Mr. President, relative to this amendment. It is of such vast importance that if the Senator insists on its adoption this afternoon I shall ask to have the amendment go over until to-morrow, to give us sufficient time to show the importance of the defeat of the measure.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I hope the Senator will not make a proposition to detain final action on the bill until to-morrow.

We can dispose of it to-day. If this matter can be taken in conference we will give the Senator a hearing there regarding it. The bill is about ready to pass now, and I think that the Post Office appropriation bill will be ready for consideration to-morrow.

This is a matter that was up before, and it did not get into conference simply because we delayed the bill several days day after day. I think it would be decidedly ineffective to consider the matter longer before the Senate, but let us take it into conference. I have no objection to its going into conference.

Mr. BRADY. I think it entirely of too much importance to be permitted to go to conference without full discussion in the Senate. I am so thoroughly convinced along those lines that I believe it would be better for the District to pay $250,000 for the construction of that bridge, if it did cost that much, and $87,000 for this land, if that is the price to be paid, rather than to disfigure that part of the city where the Art Commission and the District Commissioners have for 10 years been endeavoring to get a proper entrance to the valley.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator I do not think there is any disposition to suppress any argument in regard to this proposition. We have been discussing it for about two hours, and if the Senator wants to discuss it, keep on at it, I have no objection, but do not take it over until to-mor-Let us dispose of the bill to-day, even if you want to discuss it further.

Mr. BRADY. I do not wish to be misunderstood about my position relative to the bill. I am very much in favor of the first amendment. I can not quite agree with the Senator from Utah as to the value of the land. I think the statement of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Newlands] relative to that matter should be given consideration, for in appraising the land they have a certain system of doing so, based upon the taxes that they have been paying for 27 years. It seems to me that part of it can easily be decided by the commission that will condemn the land, and it would be much better for us to pay these property owners $87,000 and permit this improvement to go on, rather than to pass the second amendment and forever stop our prospects of securing a park in that beautiful valley.

It seems to me that what we should do is to send the bill to the conference committee with this amendment in it with instructions, and with the understanding that we are not going to recede from our position, and in that way we will get this park. After the park is secured I do not believe there will be very much trouble in having a compromise made as to the amount of fill that should be made. If we purchase the 8 acres from the private owners we would do away with the necessity of making any fill in order to increase the value of that property. On the other hand, if we should reject the first amendment and the conference committee should agree upon the second amendment, it for all time prevents our securing a park in that part of the city. For that reason I sincerely hope that the amendment will be rejected and that the conference committee will insist upon retaining the first amendment that we have just

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I do not know anything about the merits of these two amendments. It would seem proper that the taking for the park should be adopted, but the two amendments would present to the conference a chance to settle this question definitely and for all time.

Now, what I want to call attention to is that the taxpayers have some rights. Take it or leave it. There is a lot of property here in the District of Columbia simply being held up in the air, so to speak. It is not taken. It is indicated possibly for park or some other public purpose and nothing is done through a long series of years.

Mr. President, I happen to know of an illustration that strikes me as one of the most remarkable cases of hardship under the government of this District that I have ever come across. Take the Patterson tract on New York Avenue extended across the terminal-station property. There is a tract of 80 acres. It is being assessed at a high rate. New York Avenue was laid off and condemned through it and assessed upon it. Undoubtedly that piece of property, which is mentioned from time to time and appears here in the District bill at every other session as to be condemned, is being assessed and taxed on the theory that the New York Avenue Bridge is coming to it. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, the New York Avenue Bridge was built in 1908. It cost $440,000. It was a part of the terminal system. A river of railroad tracks pass under it. It has been there in the air ever since and neither approach to that bridge has ever been filled or graded, and it is absolutely of no use to the public because Congress does not make the necessary appropriation to make that bridge available for public uses. It is there in the air and has been there in the air since 1908.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield?
Mr. LEE of Maryland. Certainly.
Mr. NORRIS. Why does not the Senator offer an amendment right now to this bill to do that very thing?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I just want to call attention to such situation. It looks to me as though there was a settled policy on some one's part to hold that bridge up in the air and to tax these owners until they have got to take some small price for their valuable property for a park. Of course that may not be so. It may be just the drift of what is everybody's business and nobody's business. This bill has $20,000 in it to grade New York Avenue. The amount will not begin to fix that bridge and avenue situation. And there is that bridge all the time unused and costing in interest and deterioration every year since 1908 more than the small beginning amount this bill carries to cure the omission in so many years.

Mr. BRADY. Will the Senator yield for a question?
Mr. LEE of Maryland. Certainly;
Mr. BRADY. Does the Senator to understand that we have already agreed to an appropriation to purchase this property? Mr. LEE of Maryland. I understand that.

Mr. BRADY. I am very much in favor of that. I am in favor of buying this property and paying $87,000 for it.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. It is intimated that it will not pass in conference, but will simply result in the continued suspension through another term of years.

Mr. BRADY. But if this other amendment is adopted it is settled forever.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. It settles it in one way or the other. Mr. BRADY. I believe if our committee would insist upon holding in the bill the amendment we have adopted it would be retained there, and this matter would be settled, which ought to be done.

There is no question that the Senator from Nevada has made citizens of this District every proposition a man could make that was fair and equitable relative to that property, but they have not accepted it. I want to be understood now as realizing that he has never attempted to do anything in this matter that he did not believe was for the best interest of the community, as well as himself and his associates.

On the other hand, I do believe that the scenic beauty of that valley should be retained. I do believe that we are making a fatal mistake if we permit a fill to go in there at this time. If these two amendments go to conference, the conferees will throw out the first, likely, and agree to the second.

Now, $15,000 will not build a structure there that will leave enough ground for a road. It is just a start. It would take from $50,000 to $75,000 to fill it properly the way it ought to

The way that valley should be improved is for the Government to buy these 8 acres, or whatever the amount is, and then agree with the people who own the adjoining property to fill that valley halfway across, if necessary. They could then leave the balance of the valley, so that you could drive through there very nicely; but if we put in this small appropriation now, it simply means to delay the matter for years to come, for they can never put a structure in there that can be approved by the Art Commission of the District, with the appropriation that we have, and they will have to come back here to get an additional appropriation.

Now, let us do business along business lines and follow busi-Let us purchase this land, pay these owners what they ought to have, and what it is worth, and then at another time consider the matter of the improvement of Connecticut Avenue.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, the Senator is consistent. He wants to provide for taking the property and settle the question that way. If he proposes to insist upon the amendment of the Senate to that effect, of course, his position would be unassailable. But I am simply talking about a vacillating policy with reference to these large pieces of property, most of them very much larger and more valuable than in the particular instance under discussion, where there does seem to be the most uncertain attitude on the part of Congress and the District Commissioners with reference to what is going to be done.

It seems to me that this New York Avenue and bridge situation ought to have enough money appropriated to grade to that bridge and start that street across the $440,000 bridge structure which has been standing there idle in the air ever since 1908, and which, by the way, was improperly charged under the terminal construction against the stock of the State of Maryland in the Washington Branch of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. I happened to take part in the investigation made in the Legislature of Maryland into the affairs of the Washington Branch of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, I learned in that way at the time the bridge was built what it cost, and I have been more or less watching it with amazement through the years that have succeeded to see it standing there and never used by reason of the lack of appropriation to fill in the approaches. The cost is now half a million dollars or more, with accumulated interest and deterioration, that this bridge represents, and I must say, Mr. President, that I could not help thinking of it as an illustration in connection with the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, and of the necessity of adopting some settled and de-cisive policy with reference to the treatment of the various properties in the District of Columbia that have been indicated by their position or by artistic recommendation for condemnation for park purposes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the bridge that the Senator is talking about along New York Avenue, of course, has nothing to do with the question here, but it is a good illustration of the way business is sometimes transacted. I do not think that is any argument why we should do something here if the Senate agrees with my idea, and I think most of those who have seen the property do, that it would be considered very unwise.

The Senator from Nevada has made a very good statement of the case. I want to call attention to one or two things that he has referred to. He has called attention to the fact that he and his associates donated the land constituting Connecticut Avenue and that they constructed this bridge and one other bridge. Of course, it is to their praise, perhaps, that all that has been done, although I think it ought to be said that they probably were not moved entirely by philanthropic ideas when they did so. They have developed their property in Chevy Chase and away beyond. It has become a very beautiful and attractive residence section, and they have disposed of lots and lots and lots.

The Senator says that for this land they paid $5,000 an acre 27 years ago. I am not saying, because I am not an expert on values in the District, that that was not a fair price. I presume the Senator from Nevada, when this land was purchased, supposed it was fair, and his judgment on that would be much better than mine. Assume that it is fair, does it follow that to take the few acres that it is proposed to take from it would be the same as they paid for the whole tract? Here we have a tract of land in which I think he said there were 23 acres. It runs up over a hill very slightly. It is not exactly across the street from the entrance to the park, for some woman owns a little strip in there, but it is just beyond that; a beautiful piece of land. It runs down into this ravine at its north line. When it reaches the hill there is a slope of at least 45° on the average; sometimes more and sometimes less. That sidehill is wooded. That is the part that it is proposed in the amendment which we have adopted to buy from the Chevy Chase Land Co. That sidehill is not of any use, unless the timber is taken off. In that case it might be useful when there was snow in the winter as a place to slide down hill; but it is not fit to build on; it is the lowest land in value of any of the tract. So it does not follow, because the old tract had a certain value, that this is of an equal value. That, however, is a matter, Mr. President, about which I am not particularly concerned.

I should like the Government to buy that sidehill for a park, and pay for it what it is worth to the Government. am willing that the amount should be left to be determined in the usual and legal way. But the Government is under no obligation to adopt this provision and to permit the filling of this ravine and thus spoil this beautiful park.

Senators argue here as though the Government was to blame because the Chevy Chase Land Co. happens to own a piece of property on a sidehill that is not valuable unless they can fill up that ravine. God made that ravine and the sidehill; the Government owns the road that runs through the bottom of the ravine, and I do not suppose the owners of this property could fill up that ravine without the consent of the Government on account of the public highway down there. If the Government wants to give its consent to have it filled up, that of course would be all right. It would be very profitable not only to the Chevy Chase Co. but to the people who own the land on the other I am not finding fault with them for wanting it filled up, but I am a little surprised that the man who has always been a leader in the movement for beautifying and decorating the city of Washington and its parks, as the Senator from Nevada has been, would want to mar the natural beauties, destroy the magnificent trees there, and fill up this beautiful ravine with a lot of unsightly dirt.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President-

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. Has this proposition had the approval of the Fine Arts Commission?

Mr. NORRIS. I think not; and the commissioners, as I understand, are opposed to it. I have not read the letter, which I understand is on file, but that, I think, will appear in the letter. I do not believe that the proposition will receive the approval of any disinterested person who will investigate it, though my judgment may be wrong.

I referred a while ago to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] who lives in the vicinity. I asked him about it, and I found when he took the floor later that he agreed with me. I now see the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] here. He lives a little farther beyond that place than I do, and passes over it nearly every day. I should like to have him tell the Senate whether, in his judgment, this ravine ought to be filled.

Mr. LANE. The Senator desires me to tell the Senate what? Mr. NORRIS. I do not care to have the Senator do so now, but I should like later to have the Senator state to the Senate whether the bridge across the ravine ought to be taken away, the ravine filled up, the scenery there destroyed, and the timber

Mr. LANE. Is it proposed to build a viaduct of earth in place of a bridge, and then have a roadway under that?

Mr. NORRIS. No; but to just fill it up; to dig off the top of the hill and to put it in the valley, so as to make it all level.

Mr. LANE. I do come up that roadway many times, and I enjoy the scenery and the beauty of it, more particularly in the hot weather of summer time. I know that entrance into the park, and I admire it. I think it is one of the most beautiful places in Washington. We have just such another gulch in my State, which we have turned into one of our city parks. We have done nothing there to mar the work of nature, not even cutting the trees or trimming the brush. A creek meanders through that park, as one does through this. They are both beautiful. That is the finest park we have. We have left conditions which are natural and unusually attractive. The park is used by countless hundreds of people, for the reason that it is not an artificial park. I should look upon this as the same.

Still I can see and realize the injustice it does to property owners alongside the cut through Connecticut Avenue, and can understand how it might wrong the property owners. An earth fill is more permanent and better than any bridge which can be built, as it will last for all time.

Mr. NORRIS. But the proposition is to fill it up.

Mr. LANE. If they fill it up, they will merely plug it at both ends, so that it will not be a park.

Mr. NORRIS. It will fill the whole valley.
Mr. LANE. If they fill the whole valley, that is still another

I was going to say that if they put a filled viaduct across it would not harm it much, and it would give them a chance to get rid of the surplus dirt, which is injuring part of their property to a considerable extent; so that injustice is being done them. If they filled it up in such a manner as to make it attractive, it would not be good for park purposes. It would then become residence property.

Mr. NORRIS. That is my understanding. Mr. LANE. With a "jump-off" of perhaps 100 to 150 feet in depth, the people who wish to get into the park would have a hard time, although a graded roadway might be made to it.

So there are two sides to the question. In fairness to the property holders, I can realize that their equities should be considered. The land should be purchased on each side of that gulch so far back that it would not interfere. Then it would be the duty of the District to pay enough money to help them get their dirt elsewhere in order that they might utilize their property. That would call for still larger appropriations; and if you are going to continue it as a park, as ought to be done, the property owners should receive such compensation as they would be properly entitled to. I will vote for a proposition of that kind at any time.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Government is under no obligation to any property owners to haul their dirt away because there happens to be a hill there. I would be glad to give them an opportunity to put it somewhere else if it would not interfere with what I believe to be the beauty of the valley, which ought to be kept as it now is.

There is not any law, of course, that would prevent the owners of property, for instance, from taking the timber off of it if they desired to do so. They would have a right to do that, and nobody would complain.

At this time? Mr. LANE.

Mr. NORRIS. At this time. They have a right to cut the timber on whatever land they own, but that would ruin it, and, of course, it ought not to be done. The right thing to do, I believe—and, in my judgment, it is the only thing to do, and it is to the interests both of the property owners and of the Government-is to let the Government buy both sides of this gulch for park purposes

I have had a good deal to say about what I thought the property was worth, and the Senator from Utah agreed with me, that it was not worth the value placed on it, but, of course, that is a matter as to which men's judgments will differ. We ought to pay what the property is worth; we ought to pay its value. Any method that will determine its fair value by men competent to judge I am willing to accept, whether their award agrees with my judgment or not.

Mr. LANE. There is one other equity involved, growing out of the condition of the cut along Connecticut Avenue, which leaves this property on both sides practically marooned from any use, either by the owners or anyone else. They ought to be allowed an equitable compensation for the expense to which they would be put in order to bring their property into suitable condition.

Mr. NORRIS. That has not anything to do with the question that is now pending here, as I understand.

Mr. LANE. It may not have; I am not familiar with that. Mr. NORRIS. Congress has already passed a law to purchase one side of Connecticut Avenue as an addition to the Zoological Park. The property which is just beyond, on the west side of Connecticut Avenue opposite the entrance of the park, is owned by a lady who, as I understand, lives in Europe. Mr. LANE. She may get submarined on her way home.

Mr. NORRIS. As to whether she ought to be given money to dig that hill away or not is a question on which we are not now passing. Personally I do not believe she ought to be compensated, but men may disagree as to that. However that may be, it does not have anything to do, as I look at it, with this proposition.

We have put into the bill a provision to buy this land. Certainly the appropriation provided is ample. The property ought to be bought for what it is worth, and we ought to be willing to pay what it is worth. Now, to put in another provision that is entirely inconsistent with it, with the understanding that it will stay in if the other goes out in conference, and with the idea of giving the conferees power to adjust the whole matter, is, to my mind, unjust. I am afraid, as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Brady] has said, that when it comes back out of the conference it may be that the good amendment will be out and the other amendment left in on the theory that some Senators have advanced, that we ought to do something on the

We are under no obligation to do anything, so far as that is concerned. Neither are the property owners. The rights of no one are being injured even though nothing should be done. They have the same rights as any other property owners, and the Government has the right to take any property it wants to, even by condemnation. I think we ought to take it, but nobody can charge injustice against us if we do not take it. We are not to blame that it is there or that anyone owns it; and, even though the proposition is rejected and nothing is done, while I think that would be poor policy from the standpoint of the Government, at the same time the property owners can not justly complain that we have not provided for the purchase of their land or that we have not made appropriations to conduct this stream under the embankment that we are going to permit them to erect in the public highway.

Now, one word more. It has been argued here by one Sena--I think the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]-that possibly this fill at Connecticut Avenue would slope down east and slope down west. This entire gulch there is about 1,500 feet long, and if filled for 500 feet on each side there would be a slope down from the fill.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator a

Mr. NORRIS. If that is done, then we will certainly have gotten into a position, as it seems to me, a great deal worse than though we filled up the whole thing, because we will have left a hole at that end out of which there will be no way to get, except by climbing up a steep hill to the bridge or go out the other way by another steep hill. In other words, in the middle of this gulch you would put a hill and you would then have to go down on either side to get into a gulch, when now you can go along the bottom of it. I now yield to the Senator from Oregon.

I do not understand the Senator's statement Mr. LANE. about that gulch or ravine being only 1,500 feet wide from Woodley Road to the entrance of the park.

Mr. NORRIS. I say, from the statement of the Senator from Nevada, that I think that is the idea the Senator meant to Mr. LANE. It is more than 1,500 feet from the Woodley Road entrance to that gulch to the outlet to the park.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think it is about 1,500 feet from Woodley Road down to the Connecticut Avenue bridge.

Mr. LANE. But not to the park?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Oh, no; to the Connecticut Avenue bridge.

Mr. NORRIS. That is, on an air line?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think winding with the road.
Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is only estimating it, is he not? Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; but I think that is approximately correct

Mr. NORRIS. It is not very far from 1,500 feet. My own idea would be that it would be a little less than that, but it may be as much as 1,500 feet.

Mr. LANE. It is all of that, and more than that.

Mr. NORRIS. If we made a fill there 500 feet wide from the base of the present Connecticut Avenue bridge it would leave a thousand feet of gulch west of the bridge. There would be nothing but a hole with a steep grade in any direction you might go; and if you were at the other end and wanted to go into the valley you would have to go clear out and clear down again in order to get into it. It would spoil the entire thing. I would a great deal rather fill it up from one end to the other and let the houses and residences be built.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas. [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes seem to have it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be designated as section 10, to come in at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add a new section, to be known as section 10, as follows:

a new section, to be known as section 10, as follows:

Sec. 10. That where any lot, parcel, or tract of land in the District of Columbia has been or may be assessed for general or special taxes, and the owner or other person having control over the same desires to sell, or has sold, a part of the same, or to subdivide, he or the purchaser may, upon application to the assessor of the District of Columbia, have a redistribution of such tax or assessment adjusted to the new subdivision or parcel. The assessor shall have full power to make such redistribution of such tax or assessment, having regard to the frontage of such property upon a public highway, the values of different sections of such land, and such other elements as in his judgment should be considered by him in making such redistribution; and such redistribution shall be as valid and effectual upon the various parts of the property in the same manner and to the same extent as if the tax or assessment had been laid originally thereon under the various laws appertaining thereto. No payment or fallure to pay a tax or assessment upon any such part shall change or affect the liability of the other parts of such property for any tax or assessment so redistributed, provided all parties in interest request said assessment and agree to abide by the decision of the assessor.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President-The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POMERENE, I do.

Mr. SMOOT. Since the assessment of the District of Columbia has been changed so as to make it biennial, does the Senator think the amendment is now necessary?

Mr. POMERENE. I was just about to explain the amendment. It was originally introduced as a bill by the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] and was referred to a sub-committee of the District of Columbia Committee, who favored its adoptiton. It is to meet this situation: We have been informed by lawyers and others here in the city that if I, for instance, owned a tract of land and sold a portion of it to the Senator from Utah, and I should refuse or neglect to pay the taxes on that portion which I still retained, the Senator from Utah could not pay his taxes, and the taxes would not be received at the Treasury Department, so he would be compelled to pay the taxes on the full tract or his land would become delinquent, as mine would be. The purpose of the amendment is to authorize any owner of any portion of land to go before the assessor and ask for a redistribution of the tax upon that land so that if, for instance, I were negligent in the payment of my tax the Senator from Utah could pay the tax upon his portion, and thus avoid the penalty for delinquency.

Mr. SMOOT. That is as I understood the amendment. think that such a provision ought to have been in the law of the District of Columbia for some years past, particularly when we had an assessment once every third year. I believe that it would perhaps be a good thing to adopt the amendment now, even with biennial assessments, and I hope the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I take it that the adoption of the amendment would not interfere in any way with the payment of the taxes on any portion of the land.

Mr. POMERENE. Not in the least.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Then, I will offer no objection to

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Ohio if he will kindly let that be numbered section 9?

Mr. POMERENE. I have no objection to that. Mr. GALLINGER. I want the provision for the salary increase to go at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the change will be made as suggested. The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I offer the following new amendment: On page 24, line 20, after the word "hereunder." I move to insert the matter which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 24, line 20, after the word "hereunder," the last word in the paragraph, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That motor vehicles, owned or operated by persons not legal residents of the District of Columbia, but who shall have complied with the laws of the State of their legal residence requiring the registration of motor vehicles or licensing of operators thereof and the display of identification numbers shall be displayed on such motor vehicles as provided by the laws and regulations of the District of Columbia, while used or operated within the District, shall not be required to be licensed or registered or bear other identification numbers under the laws and regulations of the District, if the State in which the owner or operator of such motor vehicles has his legal residence extends the same privilege to the motor vehicles owned or operated by legal residents of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a word of explanation of the amendment.

The pending bill provides a tax upon all motor vehicles in the District of Columbia, as follows: Five dollars for each vehicle of more than 24 horsepower, $3 for each vehicle of 24 horsepower or less, and $2 for each motorcycle or similar vehicle. It then proceeds to give a definition of the term "motor vehicle." This amendment provides, for instance, that if the State of Maryland charges a tax for a license upon a motor vehicle if Maryland autos come into the District they shall also pay a license to the District as long as there is not reciprocity between the District and the State of Maryland. This question was discussed in the Committee on Appropriations, but was not acted upon, and I reserved the right to offer this amendment on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. JONES. The Senator's remark might create a wrong impression. The matter was not voted upon in the committee, There was no amendment submitted to the committee, so that the question really was not passed upon.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment was not voted on, because no amendment was offered. The Senator is right that there was no vote taken on it.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] directed a letter to the commissioner of motor vehicles at Baltimore, Md., asking what the Maryland law was, and if a resident of any State temporarily residing in the District of Columbia, and carrying a license from that State, was entitled to travel in Maryland without a Maryland license.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that the license of any State in the United States is good in the State of Maryland.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, I want the commissioner of motor vehicles to answer the question.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. There is no question about that. Any Member of this Senate who has a license from another State is entitled to go into the State of Maryland without paying any additional license fee.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President, here is what the commis-

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I have taken the trouble to investigate the matter, and I received a letter last June—probably I have it in my pocket—from the road commissioner of the State of Maryland to that effect, that the license of any State is accepted in the State of Maryland.

Mr. SMOOT. Providing there is not a District number or District license tag upon the auto.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. They have to carry something to indicate that they have that license. That is all that is necessary.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows this, does he not? For instance, I may have a Utah license tag upon my auto, and under ment that I offer-this bill I have got to have a District license tag. If I go into the State of Maryland with a District license tag on my machine, I have got to have a Maryland license.

Mr. REED. Even though the Senator has a license from the State of Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. Even though I have a license from the State of Utah. Mr. SMITH of Maryland. No; all you have to have is the

Utah license. Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah entirely wrong about that.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us see what the commissioner says.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to read the letter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator declines to Mr. SMOOT. This is not a letter written last June by some road supervisor of Maryland.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I want to say to the Senator that I not only have a letter, but I have a thorough statement in regard to the matter. I would not state upon the floor of the Senate anything that I did not think was correct, and I want to say to the Senator that I would not do anything that would lead the Senate to get a wrong impression from anything I might say.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not imputing to the Senator any such thought or idea. I have a letter here signed by Mr. E. Austin Baughman, commissioner of motor vehicles, 11 East Lexington Street, Baltimore, Md., dated February 5, 1917. The letter reads as follows:

Replying to your letter of the 2d instant, I beg to advise that an automobile from another State, if it is not being used for hire, and is properly licensed in its home State, need not be registered in Maryland if it is here temporarily for a period not exceeding three months. If the car in question, however, displays, a District of Columbia license, it is also necessary to have a Maryland license.

I am inclosing copy of our latest automobile law.

Very truly, yours;

E. Austin Baughman.

E. AUSTIN BAUGHMAN, Commissioner.

Now, Mr. President, I want to read the law.

Mr. ROBINSON. Read the law. Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let us have the law.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in the laws of the General Assembly of the State of Maryland, chapter 687, act of 1916, I find, on page 6, a definition of the term "State." This is what it says:

The term "State" as used in the subtitle-

Now I want to read section 146 of the law:

Now I want to read section 146 of the law:

Any person or operator not a resident of this State who shall have compiled with the laws of the State in which he resides, requiring the registration of motor vehicles or licensing of operators thereof, and the display of identification or registration numbers on such vehicles and who shall cause the identification number of such State, in accordance with the laws thereof and none other, together with the initial letter or letters of said State to be displayed on his motor vehicle as in this subtitle provided, while used or operated upon the public highways of this State, may use the highways of this State without obtaining a registration certificate or operator's license from the commissioner of motor vehicles as hereinbefore prescribed: Provided, The State of which he is a resident and the registration certificate of which he displays shall extend the same privilege to residents of this State: Provided, That if any nonresident be convicted of violating any provision of this subtitle he shall thereafter be subject to and required to comply with all the provisions of this subtitle relating to the registration of motor vehicles and the licensing of operators thereof; and the governor of this State is hereby authorized and empowered to confer and advise with the proper officers and legislative bodies of other States of the Union and enter into reciprocal agreements under which the registration of motor vehicles owned by the residents of this State will be recognized by such other States, and he is further authorized and empowered from time to time to grant to residents of the States the privilege of using the roads of this State as in this section provided in return for similar privileges granted residents of the State by such other States.

The foregoing exemption of nonresidents shall not apply to operators of motor vehicles or motorcycles who are residents of States which do not require the display of identification markers on the same, nor shall it apply to nonresi

Mr. President, that is section 146. It does not mention the District of Columbia in any way, shape, or form. The amendMr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, will the Senator let

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. There never has been any reciprocity between Maryland and the District of Columbia; there could not be, and there is no statement that there is.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, there ought to be reciprocity between Maryland and the District of Columbia as there is between Maryland and other States.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. But, on the other hand, the Senator goes away beyond the mark when he says that the citizen of Utah who happens to come through the District of Columbia and get a District of Columbia tag ceases to be a citizen of the State of Utah and ceases to get the benefit of the Maryland statute in favor of that State.

Mr. SMOOT. I never made any such statement.
Mr. LEE of Maryland. That is the inference from the statement the Senator makes, that because the citizen of Utah picks up a District license he has lost his status as a citizen of the

Mr. JONES. Mr. President-

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator claim that the commissioner makes a false statement in his letter?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SMOOT. Wait just a moment. I am asking the junior Senator from Maryland a question.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I should simply say that the commissioner had misconstrued the law most egre-

Mr. SMOOT. I do know this, Mr. President-

Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. JONES. I want to call the Senator's attention to the particular language here which says that they must have that tag and no other.

Mr. SMOOT. No other.

Mr. JONES. The law says that; so that if the Senator from Utah, having a Utah tag on his machine, got a license here in the District of Columbia and put a District of Columbia tag on it the State of Maryland would not recognize the Utah license.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The Senator will acknowledge that if a man has a license granted in another State, and gives evidence of that license by having a tag on his machine, he has a perfect right to go into the State of Maryland.

Mr. SMOOT. Not under the Maryland law. I will read the law again to the Senator. Not only that, Mr. President, but if he has a tag from his own State on his auto, and then he has a District tag upon it, he has to pay from $20 to $30 for a license in the State of Maryland.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I do not understand why the Senator chooses to confuse with the District of Columbia a plain provision of the Maryland law that is aimed at everybody who runs an automobile, namely, that you must not have a whole lot of numbers plastered over your machine. The necessity of having single numbers to deal with, for police purposes, is absolutely evident, and to have a confusion of numbers flashed before the eye of the officer is objectionable. There is no discrimination there against the District. You simply have to take off your Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, under the provisions of this bill every person operating an automobile in the District from now on, and in the past, too, has been compelled to get a District license; and as long as he is compelled to have the District of course he can not go into Maryland without paying for a license there. If I drove from Utah and temporarily came into the District of Columbia I would not have to have a license. I could go over to Maryland if I only had the Utah license on my machine. But if I am temporarily residing in the District of Columbia and have a Utah license upon the car I am also compelled to have the District license on it, and under those conditions I am compelled to pay a license in the State of Maryland.

Now, if there is going to be any reciprocity, why not have it between the District of Columbia and Maryland? That is all the amendment I have offered proposes.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I want to say that the State of Maryland has spent $25,000,000 in making good roads. So far as reciprocity is concerned, it is the intention of Maryland to have reciprocity with every State in the Union; but in one instance a gentleman told me that in Montgomery County, the county of my colleague [Mr. LEE], three-fourths of the use of that road is by the people of the District of Columbia. We are taxing our people from $750,000 to $1,000,000 a year in order to keep up those roads. Now, it is not fair that we should have reciprocity with the District of Columbia when the District of Columbia have nothing to offer to us except the right to go through the streets of their city when we come from the State of Maryland to do business with them. It is unfair to ask us to keep up roads at a large expense, amounting this year to $800,000, and allow the people of the District of Columbia to use those roads without compensation. On the other hand, the District of Columbia offers nothing to the State of Maryland in the way of reciprocity in the use of roads.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator and I disagree upon that point. When I drive through the Washington parks on a Sunday afternoon, or any other day, but particularly on Sunday, I find Maryland citizens enjoying an auto ride over the roads of the parks, and upon every single day of the week Maryland people come into the District of Columbia to do business with the people of the District of Columbia.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. They have a Maryland tag on their machine, then. Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that may be; but have they got a District tag on their machine?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Yes; they have a District tag.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but they do not pay an annual license

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. We do, sir. Mr. LEE of Maryland. Every Maryland machine has to have District license to run in the District.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, well, they got it how many years ago?
Mr. SMITH of Maryland. But under the present law we are to be taxed every year, and in a greater proportion than the amount we pay is as compared to the amount that you pay in Maryland.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what the Senator says, but I do not think there is any comparison in the amounts paid.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. We pay $5 a year. -$5 a year—and our license fee is from $10, I think, up to $25. Mr. SMOOT. The District license is not paid yearly. The Maryland license is more than $25 in many case

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. How much did the Senator pay? Mr. REED. I understand it is $15 for a Ford. [Laughter.] Mr. SMOOT. I do not know what the charge is for a Ford. Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The average is not $20, so far as that is concerned. The license we pay here is $5, and I am sure that the roads of our State are used ten times as much as the Marylanders use the roads of the District of Columbia.

SMOOT. That, of course, I doubt very much, Mr. Presi-On Sunday there are a good many automobiles that go Mr. SMOOT. into Maryland.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. And every other day.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, not so very many.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Yes, sir; a great many of them.

Mr. SMOOT. Not many.
Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will give the name of the gentleman to whom I refer. I do not suppose he has any objection to my stating it. Judge Peter, of Rockville, told me that threefourths of the usage of that road in Montgomery County, from here to Baltimore, was by people residing in the District of Columbia.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. He has taken a great deal of notice of it, and I think his statement would be accurate.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I am making no statement here that is not accurate.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I did not say the Senator did; but I stated that Judge Peter's statement was accurate, in my judg-

Mr. President, some Senator said, in effect, that he challenged the letter read by the Senator from Utah; that it was a misinterpretation of the law. It may be; but it does not compare with the misinterpretation of the law, if the Senator is correct, which is put upon it by the constables who hang around the edges of the District to grab the unwary who happen to cross the line.

I know of an instance where a man had a Missouri license; he was a resident of Missouri, but he was in the District of Columbia; and he also had a District of Columbia license on his car. They arrested him, although he had his license. You are put to the difficulty of satisfying the local license. You are put to the difficulty with Maryland, in the constable that your State has reciprocity with Maryland, in the first instance; and then, as I understand their constructionthe constable law, if you please-if you happen to have a District license that bars you from the privilege which otherwise would be conferred by your State license.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Does the Senator mean to say that if a man has a State license, by virtue of the fact of having a District license the State license is not good?

Mr, REED. I say that that is the construction that the constable puts upon it.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. That is not the case.

Well, that is exactly what the law says.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I do not think the law states that.

Mr. SAULSBURY, Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Robinson in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Dela-

Mr. REED. Let me conclude what I was saying. Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator. Then I want to read the law.

Mr. REED. The junior Senator from Maryland stated, in substance, that that was the rule; but he gave as a reason that the existence of so many license tags might confuse.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I did not state that. The Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. REED. I say, the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr.

LEE] said that.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Pardon me; I understand that. did not mean to say that there was any confusion of the two licenses, but I do say that if a man's tag is properly applied, it does not matter whether he has a District license or not; if he has a license of another State on his automobile, he is entitled to the privileges of the roads of Maryland.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not understand the law, then, nor the enforcement of the law; and I want to read it. Mr. REED. The junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. Lee] made that statement.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. If there are two tags of the same kind-

The junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. Lee] stated, in effect, that there was such a rule, namely, a rule whereby a man having a State license and a District license would be barred from the benefit of the State license, because the existence of so many tags on the car might confuse the officer. Now, of course there is nothing in that. The constable can always stop a machine, and he can always ascertain whether there is, in good faith, a Maryland license; and under the Maryland law you have to have them both in front and behind.

The fact is, now, regardless of what the law may be when strictly construed, that the construction that has been given to this law by the constables and justices of the peace who immediately environ the city of Washington-the constable lying in wait always far enough back of the line so that you have violated the law if you go into the State, never at the line to warn you back-the construction they have put upon the law has been that if you have no Maryland license, although you have a State license, you have frequently been haled up and fined; but that where you have a State license and a District license you are thereby barred from the benefits of your State license. Now, I question whether that is the law of Maryland. Mr. SMITH of Maryland. That is not the law.

Mr. REED. But that is the construction that is put upon it. Mr. SMOOT. That is the law of Maryland.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. SMOOT. In just a moment.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if, by any chance, the citizen of Missouri to whom he referred happened to be a Senator? [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. The one that I spoke of was not. Mr. SMOOT. This is what the law says:

Mr. LEE of Maryland. There is nothing about the District of Columbia in that, is there?

Mr. SMOOT. Why, no. Mr. LEE of Maryland. Certainly not.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course there is not, and that is what I want to call attention to-that the only way a car can go into the State of Maryland is by carrying one State license, and no

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President— Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the junior Senator from Maryland if that is not correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah

yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. SMOOT. In just a moment; just as soon as I get an answer.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I wish the Senator from Utah would listen to the Senator from Delaware, because he has had an experience which will disprove what is stated by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps the Senator may have had an experience of one kind, while some of us have had different experiences

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Well, let the Senator from Delaware state his experience.

Mr. SMOOT. The senior Senator from Maryland and the junior Senator from Maryland do not agree as to what the law of Maryland is, and I agree with the commissioner.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I do not know whether the Senator has a right to make that statement or not.

Mr. SMOOT. This is what the commissioner says:

If the car in question, however, displays a District of Columbia li-cense, it is also necessary to have a Maryland license.

There is not any question about the law. It specifically states so. Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President-

Mr. SMOOT. Wait a moment. If a citizen of the District of Columbia has a license for the District of Columbia, he is not entitled to go into Maryland. The District of Columbia is not treated like all of the States are treated.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President-

Mr. SMOOT. And the Maryland law specifically eliminates the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, we do not profess to have reciprocity with the District of Columbia, because there is no reciprocity between the District of Columbia and Maryland. Maryland has spent $25,000,000, as I previously said, in building roads. She is to-day taxing her people in the State of Maryland about $800,000 a year to keep up these roads. It is unfair, when we tax our people to this extent, for the people of the District of Columbia, who can not give us reciprocity, to expect us to keep up those roads for them to use and to destroy. As I said just now, Judge Peter, of Montgomery County, told me that three-fourths of the usage of the roads of Montgomery County was by the people of the District of Columbia; and it is unfair to ask us to keep up these roads and not tax the people of the District of Columbia as we tax our own people.

In regard to the District of Columbia, they charge a tax of $5, which, I think, is more than proportionate to the amount of roads we use in the District of Columbia, which we pay yearly, according to the tax. We pay their tax, and we ask them to pay ours.

Mr. SMOOT. I now yield to the Senator from Delaware, Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I thought possibly I might throw a little water on the fire that seems to be getting up on this subject by relating the experience I have had, which extends now for the four years past.

In the summer time I go into Maryland every day, because I usually live out toward Chevy Chase. During the whole year I go from here to my home in Delaware, and I suppose I have traveled ten or twenty thousand miles on the Maryland roads.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have been waiting now for half an hour to make this statement.

Mr. THOMAS. I was simply going to ask how the Senator could keep out of Maryland if there was high tide in his State, [Laughter.]

Mr. SAULSBURY. The question of tide seems to have troubled a good many minds, but it does not trouble those in our State. The land under water at high tide we catch very good terrapin on, when the water is low, which you all enjoy so much. But now we will get away from the question of tide. I have never been questioned, having both a Delaware and a District of Columbia tag on that machine. In the last four years I have been warned several times by theMr. SMOOT. Does the Senator say that he has not a Mary-

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have not a Maryland license. I have a Delaware license.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not cross the line from Chevy Chase Circle into Maryland without being arrested, if I were without a Maryland license

Mr. SAULSBURY. They may not like the Senator's looks.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be true.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have never had the slightest trouble about it, and during the summer time for months I have used the roads of Maryland with absolute reciprocity. The Senator misconstrues what I said. There is absolute reciprocity between Maryland and every other State in the Union. There may not be between Maryland and the District of Columbia, and a license in the District of Columbia costs very little in comparison to a State license.

Mr. SMOOT. If a man has a State license, he can go into Maryland, and if in connection with the State license he has upon his car a District license tag, then he is arrested.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is exactly what I have done for The Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator escaped because he was a United States Senator. He is the only person I ever heard of being so favored.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have just heard from another Senator the same.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Here is another Senator who has not had that same experience. A Maryland constable has $5 of [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President-

Mr. SMOOT. There is not a Senator who does not know that he can take his automobile and pass through Virginia and never be disturbed if he has a District license, no matter whether he has a Virginia license or not; and it is also known that with the exception of the Senator from Delaware, and probably one other, as he says, they can not go into Maryland without a Maryland license unless they are arrested.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah

yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. JONES. Right in connection with that I want to say a Member of the House has told me that he had an experience like this: That he had the tag of his State and he got the District of Columbia tag and went over into Maryland, and he had such an experience there as compelled him to come back and take off the District of Columbia tag and put it away, so as to have nothing but the State tag.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I want to say in regard to the State of Virginia-

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will just withhold for a moment, I will be through, because I do not want to take any further

Mr. President, there is not a Senator present who does not know that there has been a regular business on the part of certain officials in Maryland to hold up and arrest people of the District of Columbia who happen to pass over the District line. That is understood by everybody, and particularly on Sundays, when they are stationed at every place where a road leads into Maryland from the District of Columbia, and they hide behind trees until you pass and give no warning not to cross the line. I do not know why it should be. I think whatever is right in this matter ought to prevail. The amendment I have offered to the bill will make reciprocity between the District of Columbia and Maryland, and I think that ought to be done.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Of course whatever is right ought to prevail, and I assume the Senator from Utah thinks that other Senators feel the same way. I contend that reciprocity with the District of Columbia is not right. I do not mean to say that the officers of the law in our State have always done what they should have done; I suspect they have violated the law; but I do say that the people of the State of Maryland do not feel that they ought to be taxed to build roads and keep them up at a heavy expense of from $800,000 to $1,000,000 a year and that the District of Columbia, which can not give reciprocity, should be exempted from paying a proportion of that tax. We tax ourselves and we propose to pay the Dis-trict of Columbia what their tax is, but it certainly should not be expected of us that we should give them the same right and privilege that we give the States that have roads through the States.

I wish to say in regard to Virginia—I am not sure of what I say, but I have been told that they have two periods in which you can use the roads of Virginia of a week each. I got that from a gentleman who has been there. If you stay there longer than that you have to procure a local license. Without meaning to reflect upon the roads of Virginia, they have not spent money for roads in Virginia as we have done in Maryland, and the people of the District of Columbia do not go there to use those roads. Besides that, they have heavy tolls. A gentleman told me that he was in Virginia three or four days and the tolls amounted to from $13 to $14.

In our State we have bought up the roads that had tolls in order that we might get rid of tolls, and we have no such tax as that upon the people who travel in our State. I say it would be absolutely wrong. The Senator from Utah says he wants to do right. We all want to do right, but I do not think it is right that we should tax ourselves to build roads and they should be used by the people of the District of Columbia, who can not give us reciprocity.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator recognizes the fact, does he not, that the people of the District of Columbia are taxed to build roads and the Maryland people use the roads?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Not in Maryland.

Mr. SMOOT. Not in Maryland, but in the District.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. But the use of roads in the District of Columbia by the people of Maryland amounts to little when compared with the use of roads in Maryland by people from the District of Columbia.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the proposition seems to be that the people of the District of Columbia ought to pay for the Maryland roads. I can not understand why that should be the case at all.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. If the Senator will pardon me, that is not my idea about it.

Mr. LODGE. I summed it up briefly.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. We ourselves pay something for the use of the Maryland roads.

Mr. LODGE. We pay an unusually high license to have the use of Maryland roads.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. It is only what we pay ourselves. Mr. LODGE. New England has unusually good roads; the States there have spent enormous sums of money. It costs us a good deal more than $800,000 to keep our mileage in Massachusetts in repair. In the summer New England is filled with people from other States who use the roads. Quantities of automobiles are there. Massachusetts draws no line on the District of Columbia. We interfere with no State and we do not interfere with the District of Columbia. We do not expect to have other people pay for our roads. I do not think any State does except Maryland, as far as I know.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. If the Senator will pardon me, the State of Massachusetts is not situated as the State of Maryland is in regard to the District of Columbia.

Mr. LODGE. That is perfectly true.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. There probably would not be a hundred people in the District of Columbia who would use the roads in Massachusetts, but they use our roads every day and use a part of them a great deal more than the people of Maryland themselves use them.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think it ought to be recipro-If Maryland is going to charge a high license to everybody in the District of Columbia who crosses the line-personally I have never been interfered with, but I know of such cases where there were posted men around the Chevy Chase Club and they grabbed them one after another as they came out and fined them, and it is only a little over the border-if Maryland is going to do that I think the District ought to put an equal tax on every Maryland automobile that comes into the District.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Does the Senator understand that it is reciprocal in that the District automobile owner gets a license when he goes to Maryland and the Maryland automobile owner when he comes to the District gets a license?

Mr. LODGE. I understand that it is reciprocal. I would put on the same tax they levy on us.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. That would not be reciprocity.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely, it is reciprocal; but to charge $40 in Maryland and $10 in the District of Columbia is not reciprocal. Mr. SMITH of Maryland. We do not charge $40—

Mr. LODGE. On some the charge is $30.

Mr. SMOOT. I know they charge $30.
Mr. LODGE. I know they charge $30, and I was told that they charge $40. The charge on the motor I happen to have is exactly double what is charged in Massachusetts.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. They charge the same price—

Mr. LODGE. I am not quarreling with that. You have a right to charge anything you choose.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. No State has better roads.

Mr. LODGE. There should be the same charge on Maryland people as on District people.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. It costs money to build the roads: it costs money to keep them up; and we tax ourselves for it.
Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have the floor.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I am going to wait until I get the floor in my own right. The vehemence of the attack has been so great that the defense has hardly a chance to utter a word.

Mr. JONES. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me, I wish to give the law with reference to charges in Mary-Class A. Fifty cents per horsepower or fraction thereof in the case of all motor vehicles having pneumatic tires, with a minimum charge of $5 for any motor vehicle.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me that it should be adjusted in this way. The streets of Washington cost a great deal of money. The parkways of Washington cost a great deal of great deal of money. It is paid exclusively by the inhabitants of the District and by the Government. The charge for a motor license in the District is very moderate. That is for them to settle, of course. But Maryland has undertaken, in my judgment, to squeeze the people of the District and make them pay out of all proportion. What I would like to see would be precisely the same charge placed on a Maryland motor when you enter the District as is placed on the District motors in Maryland, and vice versa. They should place the same on us if they insist on having it, but if a man has a motor license on his car, whether he has a State license or not, he is likely to get into trouble when he goes into Maryland. I think it ought to be put on an equality. It has become an intolerable annoyance. There is no such annoyance from Virginia, but I do not suppose they go there quite as much. It has become an annoyance, and I think a very unjust one. I hope something will be done to equalize it and put them both on the same level, that is all.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I am very sorry the Senator from Massachusetts is annoyed.

Mr. LODGE. I said explicitly I personally had never been annoved.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The Senator said it was an annoy-

Mr. LODGE. It is an annoyance; a public annoyance. I am not speaking of myself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I only wanted to object to being misquoted. I said specifically that I personally had never been annoyed. say it is a public annoyance, a public nuisance, and it is a very small way to squeeze the people of the District.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, this question has been pending for some years. On one occasion I happened to meet the then senior Senator from Delaware, Mr. Bayard, on the train. He said he was going to make a visit to the coast of Massachusetts-Nahant was the end of his pilgrimage. He said he never went up there along that coast and through Boston and saw the magnificent villas and display of wealth that Massachusetts gives to the eyes of the relatively impoverished from other States that he did not realize with what injustice the tariff laws had been operating through so many years, how tremendously they had operated to shake all the plums into one end of the pudding, and the New England end of it had gotten the plums.

Mr. President, in our way we have been struggling in Mary land to build up a road system and we have some of the best roads in the United States. We have had a great many practical difficulties in building that road system, but we have managed to do it and managed to keep it up. Every cent of this license business goes to the maintenance of the road service in Maryland, and the maintenance is more important than construction.

Our situation with reference to the District of Columbia is rather a peculiar one. Here is the District of Columbia like three-quarters of a postage stamp stuck right into our State, 350,000 people in a city topographically within Maryland, and it is impossible to treat that city within Maryland in any other way than we treat our own people.

The District of Columbia population is, generally speaking, a wealthy and well-to-do population. As my colleague has just said, they use the Maryland roads to a great extent. It has been impossible to establish a relationship and reciprocity between two-thirds of 10 miles square and a whole State, the twothirds of the 10 miles square being a city of 350,000 population stuck right into our State.

There have been other difficulties besides the physical one. The District of Columbia up to date has had no license tax of an annual nature. How could we reciprocate with people who pay a tax of four or five dollars and get a perpetual license for the life of a car when our people pay $20 a year and more for a license for a car annually? Reciprocity under those circumstances would be utterly ridiculous and absolutely impracticable.

But the real thing that we are asking is not that other people build our roads, as the Senator from Massachusetts in effect suggested, with perhaps somewhat of the unconscious insolence of conscious sectional wealth, but we are asking that other people contribute a part at least of what is due in proportion to their uses of our roads. Our roads are run out by miles and hundreds of miles, compared with the relatively short mileage and limited area of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Certainly.
Mr. GALLINGER. I want to ask the Senator if he is going to return to the tariff argument? If he is, I want to be present.
Otherwise, I am going out for a little while.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I just repeated the statement of the late Mr. Bayard, who was a philosopher, and commented upon the relative splendor and magnificence of Massachusetts.

Mr. GALLINGER. I believe he was a rather rich man himself, was he not?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I do not think so.

Mr. President, this thing has been agitated for some years. Every human being naturally wants to use something that he does not have to pay for. It has been an irresistible tempta-tion to some people here in the District of Columbia, paying an average charge of a dollar a year for the license of their machines, to go out into Maryland on the dollar that they have paid the District and have the same privileges that a citizen of Maryland has for $20, that he has to pay annually. Mr. President, that, as reciprocity, is an utterly absurd proposition. I want to suggest that is a very easy thing for city people to ride out in the country and say, "Why do not these farmers have better roads?" It is a very easy thing for a gentleman riding along in a rich, commodious, and easy-going automobile to look out upon the acres the farmer tills and the muddy roads he has to use and say, "Why do not these people have better roads?" But it is going a long way farther for gentlemen with big auto-mobiles to come out and say, "We will use these roads just as much as we please and we will not pay anything for the use

Mr. President, an illustration has been used in comparing Maryland with Virginia. I am sorry to say that if a man goes into Virginia he will not find very many good roads; but the very minute Virginia undertakes to tackle this road question with the same resolution and practical industry that we have in Maryland the Virginia people will have to make their charges just the same there against those who use and wear their roads in large numbers and through long spaces of time. In Maryland we only ask the District of Columbia people to pay for what they use as much or more than we on the same annual basis for maintenance that we pay. They have had to bear none of the high taxes we pay for the original building of the

There has been a good deal of confusion thrown into this debate by the Senator from Utah on this subject as to having a number of tags on a car. Mr. President, the police requirement of the State of Maryland that an automobile should only come into the State with one tag on is a reasonable requirement. If a man comes in from Delaware or Pennsylvania, he must have a Delaware or a Pennsylvania tag on his car. If he has one more tag or two more tags and kills somebody, how can the constable tell where the murderer came from? In such a case the constable would have to look up the license lists and go through the numbers of two or three State automobile license systems to come to a conclusion and endeavor to catch the criminal.

Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator-Mr. NORRIS. Mr. LEE of Maryland. The Senator knows that every tag on the back of an automobile is usually covered with dust or a certain amount of mud, so that differentiation in color is of very little use to the constabulary.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator mentioned the fact that the laws of Maryland required nonresidents to have but one tag. There is such a law, is there?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Yes; as to an automobile coming into the State. The provision of the Maryland law has been read by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. NORRIS. I was not in when the amendment was offered. I desire to ask the Senator another question. Suppose, for instance, the Senator from Utah goes into Maryland with a Utah tag on his automobile and also a District tag?

Mr. LEE of Maryland, Then he would have offended against that statute.

Mr. NORRIS. How, if he went in there with only a Utah tag on his automobile?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. He would be all right. Mr. NORRIS. He would be all right?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Yes, sir. Mr. NORRIS. No matter how long he might be in the District and how often he might go into Maryland?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Precisely.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator, then, if that car had also a District tag on it when it went to Maryland, would not the driver of the car have to stop at the line and take the District tag off?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. For illustration, suppose a gentleman from another State stays in Massachusetts for a longer time than the Massachusetts laws of reciprocity allow and he gets a Massachusetts tag; then he goes to New York and stays there longer than their reciprocity laws allow, and he gets a New York tag; then he goes to Pennsylvania and stays there more than three weeks, or whatever the reciprocity period is, and gets a Pennsylvania tag; and finally he runs over into the Maryland line with three tags on his machine. That is what our law is We simply want the gentleman to come into our State aimed at. under one flag and not under two flags. Let us know where you come from. That is all we ask; but do not come into the State saying you come from here or you come from there if you come from some other place. There is a great deal of necessity under modern police conditions for regulating and observing automobile traffic.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland another question for information.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to conclude the question I desire to ask?

Mr. NORRIS, Yes. Mr. GALLINGER. I am a little bit troubled about this. I go into Maryland very little-

Mr. LEE of Maryland. We will be glad to have the Senator come as often as he likes.

Mr. GALLINGER. But I have a couple of grandchildren at school in Maryland, whom I should like to visit. Now I have a New Hampshire tag on my car, but I can not get to the Maryland line without having a District of Columbia tag on my car also. Must I stop at the line and take the District tag off, so as to have but one tag on my car in Maryland? I am asking the question for information.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I am very glad the Senator has asked me that question, because it would take him a very little while when he gets to the District line to take one tag off. Then there would be no complexity about it. The New Hampshire tag would be good in Maryland. There is no occasion for using two tags, except to confuse the numbers, and it is a very small thing to ask the Senator to take off his New Hampshire tag. He is nowhere near New Hampshire, so what is the occasion for using the New Hampshire tag?

Mr. GALLINGER. There is occasion for using it, because certain States recognize it.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. If you are going into another State, then put it on.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it not true that if the New Hampshire license tag was taken off and the District license tag was put on he could not go into Maryland then unless he paid the Maryland license'

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Certainly. Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield to me for another question?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I am asking my question entirely for information. I have a good deal of sympathy, I want to say from what I have heard of the argument, for the position the two Maryland Senators have taken. It seems to me that the District of Columbia, occupying the position it does, with such a large population and such a small area, and Maryland having the beautiful roads that she has, it is not unfair that she should be compensated in some way for the very large use the people of the District make of the Maryland roads; but I want to ask the Senator this question: Suppose the Senator from Utah, for instance, being here during the sessions of Congress-and that means most of the time—has a Utah tag on his car in the District. Is there anything in the law here that will protect him or would he be required to get a District license and put a District tag on his car?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I presume that after being here a certain length of time he would have to get a license. I do not know how long the reciprocity period is between Utah and the District of Columbia. Ordinarily the reciprocity period between States is for a period of a month or three weeks.

Mr. NORRIS. How long is it in Maryland?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. About three weeks, if I remember correctly, or a month.

Mr. NORRIS. That is, he could stay in the State that long with his car, but if he went out and came back again, would it count from the time he came in again?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. It is practically unlimited, because it is impossible to spot a man when he goes out and when he comes in. That is why such an arrangement between Maryland and the District can not be worked. If we gave the District a three weeks' reciprocity period, we would never find the time when that period was ended, so far as a District car was concerned.

Mr. NORRIS. The idea that impressed me, however, was this: If Maryland is giving other States the proper reciprocity, as I understand the Senator to claim she is, in case of some one, like a Member of Congress or a Cabinet officer, from some State, residing in the District during the sessions of Congress, if the laws of the District make it necessary for him to get a District tag, then in order to comply with the law of the District, he would in reality offend against the laws of Maryland if he crossed the line. So there is a sort of discrepancy there.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. If he carries two tags over the District line.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; in other words, in the little territory of the District he would be required to have two tags, and when he crossed the line into Maryland he would not dare to have but one. If we could have a law that would harmonize that discrepancy, it seems to me, it would be very desirable.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the argument on which the junior Senator from Maryland seems to rely more than anything else is, it seems to me, contrary to the actual requirement of the Maryland law. He says the purpose is to keep a number of tags off the machine to prevent that practice. The Maryland law requires two tags on an automobile coming from the District of Columbia. There must be two tags—a District of Columbia tag and a Maryland tag. So that I do not see very much force in that argument. The amendment proposed, if carried out, would meet that situation.

Mr. NORRIS. What does the amendment that is now pending purport to do?

Mr. JONES. As I remember the amendment, it provides that any person who is not a legal resident of the District of Columbia in bringing an automobile in here shall pay the license charge fixed for motor vehicles of legal residents of the District of Columbia if the State from which he comes or in which he has his legal residence does not recognize the District of Columbia

Mr. NORRIS. Then it would not apply to residents of the District at all, and would have no application to them?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Not in the slightest,

Mr. JONES. Except that it is hoped that it would work out reciprocity between Maryland and the District of Columbia.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand, then-and I want to get a right understanding of it-it would only apply to people in the District who are legal residents outside of the District. Is that right? In other words, it only applies to nonresidents of the District who are in the District.

Mr. JONES. I suggest that the amendment be again read. That will be the best way to determine the matter.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, before we go any further I claim-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. JONES. I do not yield just now.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I claim that this is general legislation, and I make the point of order against it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, it certainly is in order with reference to the provision of the bill as it came here from The House provision might have been subject to a point of order in the House, but it is not subject to a point of order here, and any amendment that is germane to that proposed legislation is in order. I, of course, recognize that the Senator from Maryland has the right to interrupt me to make a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not familiar with the proposal to which this is an amendment, and would like to have the amendment returned to the Secretary's desk, so that it may be read. The Secretary will first state the proposed amendment.

The Secretary. On page 24, after the word "hereunder," in line 20, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That motor vehicles, owned or operated by persons not legal residents of the District of Columbia, but who shall have complied with the laws of the State of their legal residence requiring the registration of motor vehicles or licensing of operators thereof and the display of identification or registration numbers on such vehicles, and which identification number shall be displayed on such motor vehicles as provided by the laws and regulations of the District of Columbia while used or operated within the District, shall not be required to be licensed or registered or bear other identification numbers, under the laws and regulations of the District, if the State in which the owner or operator of such motor vehicle has his legal residence extends the same privilege to the motor vehicles owned or operated by legal residents of the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is clearly of the opinion-

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hear the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The provision in the bill to which this is an amendment is the House text, and not the Senate text. This is absolutely new legislation. Whilst there was some provision in the House text regarding this matter, the amendment is not applicable in this case.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not hold that the Senate has not the right to amend the House text?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is prepared to The Chair is compelled to overrule the point of order made by the Senator from Maryland, as the proposition is an amendment to language on a cognate subject in the bill.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington still has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Maryland? Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, just a moment. We really have been rather resenting the aspersions cast upon our State in this matter of licenses more than we have been debating the amendment of the Senator from Utah. The amendment of the Senator from Utah simply has two effects. It does not affect the Maryland people in the slightest, as I read it. no effect on us at all. We simply come into the District and get a license, as we always have done and probably always will do: but it has this effect: It excuses the Senator from Utah from paying license on his car in the District of Columbia and excuses every other Senator in this body from paying a license on his car in the District of Columbia. That is rather a small procedure. I think, gentlemen, you ought to pay licenses

There is another thing the amendment does that is bad, and that other thing is that the name of the owner of the car is not registered in the District of Columbia, no matter how long the owner of the car may be here during the year with the license of a distant State. I think it is bad policy from a police standpoint not to have the operator or owner of a car register his name and be accessible to the police by registering his name when he comes into the District of Columbia. I think it is a very bad proposition to admit anyone here from a distant State, with the license tag of that State on his car, with liberty to operate as long as he likes in the District, without making any police report or having any police surveillance.

Mr. NORRIS. With the permission of the Senator from Washington, I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland another

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

The Senator from Maryland says it would Mr. NORRIS. only relieve the Senator from Utah and other Senators from procuring licenses in the District?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. That is about what it amounts to. Mr. NORRIS. That would depend altogether, as I understood the reading of the amendment, as to whether the State of Utah or any State from which a Senator might come, and of which he was a legal resident, had a law that extended the same privilege to the citizens of Utah.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. There are very few of them that do not have such laws

Mr. SMOOT. The State of Maryland does not, Mr. NORRIS. There is not any State that I

There is not any State that I know of-I am not familiar with the laws of many of the States in this particular-that extends to nonresidents of the State the right to remain in the State as long as the citizens of the various States have to stay here in Washington if they are attending Congress. Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator from Nebraska-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES. Yes.
Mr. SMOOT. That does not apply to Utah to any extent. The only exception in the entire United States is Maryland, and there they discriminate against the District of Columbia, and this amendment simply seeks to remedy that.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, I do not understand the amendment. I do not see how it does that.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington will further indulge me-

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. This amendment does not remedy A Senator can not come into our State with an automobile without a license. I may prophesy that he is not going to come into that State without a license and without paying for it; and for that reason he sees fit to introduce an amendment here that excuses him from getting a license from the District of Columbia. That does not hurt us any.
Mr. SMOOT. That is not the amendment.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. That is what the amendment means; it does not mean anything else; and it has the further evil effect of not requiring a foreign car, running under a foreign name and number, from reporting to the police and having the name of the owner at least set down on the records of the police jurisdiction.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senate committee amendment simply follows the Maryland law. It is designed to secure reciprocity. The operations of the Maryland law to secure reciprocity in the State of Maryland and in the other States of the Union is almost word for word with this amendment. The sole purpose of this amendment is to secure, if possible, reciprocity between the District of Columbia and the State of Maryland, or any other State, for that matter that does not recognize a District license or tag.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. How does it secure reciprocity?

Mr. JONES. It secures reciprocity exactly in the same way that the law of the State of Maryland secures reciprocity; that is all.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. We do not secure reciprocity. Mr. JONES. If you do not, then this will not secure it.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Certainly not.

Mr. JONES. But you secure it with the State of the Union? Mr. LEE of Maryland. That is just what I say. You do not secure reciprocity, but you simply dodge a legal tax.

Mr. JONES. No, Mr. President.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me, as I heard the amendment read, that it does not apply to residents in the District at all; it applies only to proposite the content of the content of it applies only to nonresidents. Is not that true? I may be mistaken.

Mr. JONES. That is true.

Mr. NORRIS. Then how does it affect a man who is a permanent resident of the District of Columbia?

Mr. JONES. It does not affect him unless the State of Maryland will reciprocate, because their citizens must pay the tax in the District of Columbia, and their citizens would not have to pay the tax in the District if they would recognize the citizens of the District of Columbia in their State. That is the way it helps the people of the District.

Mr. NORRIS. If the provisions of this amendment do not apply to residents of the District of Columbia, I do not myself see how they will be affected.

Mr. JONES. It applies in this way: I will call the attention of the Senator to the fact that it says to Maryland, for instance-and I use Maryland merely as an example-it says to Maryland, "Your citizens will have to pay the tax in the District of Columbia if you fix a tax upon the residents of the District of Columbia in your State; but if you relieve the peo-ple of the District of Columbia, if they have complied with their law, from paying a license tax in your State, your citizens will be relieved from paying the tax in the District of Colum-That is the way it affects them.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator has the amendment there, I wish he would read the first part of it.

Mr. JONES. I will do so. It reads as follows:

Mr. JONES. I will do so. It reads as follows:

Provided further, That motor vehicles, owned or operated by persons not legal residents of the District of Columbia, but who shall have compiled with the laws of the State of their legal residence requiring the registration of motor vehicles or licensing of operators thereof and the display of identification or registration numbers on such vehicles, and which identification number shall be displayed on such motor vehicles as provided by the laws and regulations of the District of Columbia, while used or operated within the District, shall not be required to be licensed or registered or bear other identification numbers under the laws and regulations of the District if the State in which the owner or operator of such motor vehicles as his legal residence extends the same privilege to the motor vehicles owned or operated by legal residents of the District of Columbia.

That is the way it affects the people of the District of Columbia, and that is the way the State of Maryland brings about reciprocity between that State and the other States of the Union, and that is the sole purpose of the amendment.

Mr. President, we are the only body that can legislate for the people of the District of Columbia. We are the only body that can protect them in any way or provide any way by which they may not be discriminated against by other States in this country. This is about the only method, as I take it, that can be pursued with reference to this particular subject to secure reciprocity between them and the State of Maryland.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. JONES. I will.

Mr. GALLINGER. As this seems to be a matter which affects the entire country, does not the Senator think that the Committee on Interstate Commerce ought to deal with it?

Mr. JONES. Well-

Mr. GALLINGER. I am serious about that,

Mr. JONES. I think that whole matter should be considered in that way. I understand that a bill has been introduced in in that way. I understand that a bill has been introduced in another body covering the whole United States, and I think it would be well if that bill could be passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that would be wise legislation.

Then we would get rid of these controversies.

Mr. JONES. But until that time comes I think that we, as the lawmaking body of the District of Columbia, ought to do what we can to put the citizens here upon an equality with other citizens

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—
Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Utah,
Mr. SMOOT. The junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. Lee] says that this will relieve the Senator from Utah from paying a tax in the District of Columbia. It will do no such thing unless there is reciprocity between the District of Columbia and the State of Utah.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Well, there is.

Mr. SMOOT. And I may say there ought to be the same thing with regard to Maryland.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. There is, is there not? Does the

Mr. SMOOT. Just wait until I get through with the statement.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. That is the very point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] has the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not trying to get away from the point, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator never does.
Mr. SMOOT. What we want to do is this: We know that the people of the District of Columbia have had no reciprocity with Maryland. We know that Maryland is not going to give them reciprocity, because both the Senators from Maryland state right here that they will not do it.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. We can not afford it.

Mr. SMOOT. The idea of attempting to make it appear that I am interested in the amendment for the purpose of getting rid of paying $5 a year to the District of Columbia is ridiculous. Mr. President, that has never entered my mind. I never thought of it at all until the junior Senator from Maryland mentioned it.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I will acquit the Senator of having any such purpose; but that is exactly what his amendment accomplishes, and nothing else.

Mr. SMOOT. I say, Mr. President, that that is not what the amendment accomplishes. The amendment proposes this: That if there is reciprocity between Maryland and the District of Columbia, then it will be just the same as any other State of the Union, and there will be no more rights granted between the people of the District and the citizens of Maryland than between the citizens of Utah and the citizens of the District of Columbia.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. He pays a license fee in the District of Columbia now, does he not?

Mr. SMOOT. I paid it, I think, about 12 years ago. I think I paid $5.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think I will say what I in-

Mr. NORRIS. Otherwise, the Senator from Washington will forget that he has the floor. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. JONES. No; I do not yield just now. I have just a word or two more to say.

I just want to call attention to the fact to which attention has already been called by the Senator from Utah that the State of Maryland directly discriminates against the people of the District of Columbia in their law and by the very terms of their law. Apparently they have framed the law for the specific purpose of discriminating against the people of the District of Columbia. The senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. Smith] admits this discrimination; and I want to call the attention of those who are here and who probably did not hear the Senator from Utah to the language of the Maryland law itself. They define the word "State" here. They say:

The term "State" as used in the subtitle, except where otherwise expressly provided, and except in section 116, shall also include the Territories and Federal Districts of the United States.

In other words, the word "State" in this act includes the District of Columbia, except where expressly excluded, and ex-District of Columbia, except where expressly excluded, and except in section 146; and section 146 is the section that levies the tax and requires the tag. The District of Columbia, as a Territory of the United States, is expressly excepted from the provisions of that section, which provides that where another State reciprocates with Maryland that State's license is good in the State of Maryland. So it is expressly provided by this law of Maryland that the tag of the District of Columbia shall not be good under any circumstances in the State of Maryland. So all District of Columbia motor vehicles must have two tags, no matter how confusing it may be.

Of course this provision will not do away with that unless the State of Maryland sees fit to reciprocate. She has seen fit to reciprocate with reference to other States in the Union. If there is a State in the Union that requires a tax of $3 for automobiles, she makes no question about that; she lets that automobile go through her territory. But if a person in the District of Columbia owns a vehicle and goes there with it he must pay. Now, then, she may not see fit to reciprocate with reference to the District of Columbia. She may say, "Our citizens must pay in the District of Columbia the $5, or whatever is required there, and the people of the District must pay in the State of Maryland." If she does, of course, this will not bring about reciprocity.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question for information?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. Under the present law of the State of Maryland can a resident of the District of Columbia owning and operating, say, a 40-horse power machine, go through the State of Maryland without paying $30 for the privilege of going through it just once?

Mr. JONES. He can not go through without paying whatever tax is imposed under that law.

Mr. McCUMBER. That tax is $30 under the present system. Mr. JONES. It is 50 cents a horsepower, measured according to their system of measurement.

Mr. McCUMBER. But you can not even drive once as far as the Chevy Chase Club, three blocks into Maryland, under the present law, without having to pay from thirty to forty dollars for that privilege?
Mr. JONES. That is right.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think we really do need some kind of a change, as long as they can drive with impunity over every road in the District of Columbia. Another thing that the Senator has not mentioned is this: Unless it has been done away with very recently, in addition to paying $30 to go across the State, every few miles you have got to go into your pocket and pay another quarter for traveling upon that road, under a toll system that SEVERAL SENATORS. That has been abolished. Mr. McCUMBER. I hope it has been abolished.

Mr. SMOOT. That is in Virginia.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; in Maryland. I drove from here over to Gettysburg but a few years ago, and there was one of these bars across the road every few miles.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. We have bought all those pikes.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am glad to hear it. Mr. JONES. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from North Dakota has the floor. To whom does he yield, if to anyone?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Washington first.

Mr. JONES. I just want to say, with reference to this toll matter, that I have not been around over the roads of Maryland very much; but just four or five months ago I went up to Gettysburg, and I had to pay tolls coming back. I started to go down to Harpers Ferry, and I ran onto a little road going across and had to pay tolls every 5 miles, in the State of

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I think the Senator is right in saying that that condition exists in one portion of our State.

Mr. JONES. That may be the portion I got into.

SMITH of Maryland. There may be some there, but we have been and are buying up all the toll roads in the State in order to abolish tolls. Of course, we can not do it all at once, but I do not think you will find many tollgates in There may be some in that section of the State. Otherwise there are none.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know the extent of the toll roads in Maryland now. Of course, I never heard of tolls until I came down into this section of the country. You can drive over any place in the Northwest without being held up for toll. If, however. I go down through this beautiful valley in Virginia, made famous by Sheridan's ride, I find that it costs me at least 5 cents a mile just for tolls alone to drive through that valley, in addition to whatever other expenses there may be.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator that I do not believe there are any toll roads in our State except in this very section of which he speaks. I want to say that I have been through the State, and I do not know that I have ever paid a toll in the last three or four years. There may be one or two roads of that kind.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator a question. If I want to drive over to Baltimore once a year at the present time, or on beyond Chevy Chase Circle, with a 40-horsepower machine, I have to pay $30 for that privilege, though I go only once. Now, does not the Senator think that there ought to be some kind of a change so that that injustice would not be imposed upon me?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Well, the Senator has the privilege of going every day in the year.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but I do not want to go every day in the year. I might want, as many people from the District might want, to cross the State of Maryland once a year. Does the Senator think it is fair that for that little privilege a citizen of the District of Columbia must pay from thirty to forty dollars?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say that that is a pretty excessive price to pay, but it is pretty hard to know how to regulate a matter of that kind. If you have a license, you have the license for a year, and you are entitled to go as many times in the year as you please. I will say to the Senator that, so far as he is concerned, if his car is licensed in his own State, it is not necessary for him to pay anything.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, Mr. President, I am not speaking for my State. Has not the resident of the District of Columbia the same right, and ought he not to be accorded the same right, to cross your State that the resident of the State of North Dakota would have? Why should you make a distinction between the

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Because there is reciprocity with all other States

Mr. McCUMBER. Why should not Maryland have reciprocity with the District, then?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Because the District has not the same privilege to give us. It has a very contracted area, with very short mileage. The District of Columbia has a population of about 350,000 people that use our roads, which we have spent $25,000,000 in building, and which we are now taxing ourselves to the amount of $800,000 to $1,000,000 a year in keeping up. We feel that if the people of the District of Columbia use those roads as we use them, which they do to a very great extent-probably you in Washington, in proportion to your population, use the road between here and Baltimore as much as Baltimore does itself—if they abuse those roads and tear them up, they ought to help pay for them, as we do.

Mr. McCUMBER. Right here, Mr. President, may I not make the same answer that the Senator made to me a moment ago, when he said that I could travel there all the year?
Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. So can a resident of Maryland, if he wishes to do so, travel every day in the year in the District of

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Yes; but there is not much road here to travel over. There is a very short mileage here, and there is not much to travel over.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am afraid that if we should take all of the streets here that we are paying for we would find quite a little mileage.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Yes; but we are not likely to travel over all of the streets. Probably the residents of Maryland that come here have an objective point to which they want to go, and they probably would not go 2 miles in the whole District.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then it seems to be a case of this kind: The people of the State of Maryland see an opportunity whereby, out of the necessities of the case, they can get a very large sum of money from the residents of the District of Columbia. whether they want to go across the State once or a dozen times a year; and they purpose to take advantage of that, and therefore they except the District of Columbia from the gen-

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I do not think anybody who wanted to go from the District of Columbia into Maryland one time in a year would get a license at all.

Mr. SMOOT. He would get arrested. Mr. STERLING obtained the floor. Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

NEWLANDS. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what became of the amendment

Mr. NORRIS. I want to make a few remarks on the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Utah is still pending.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I thought. Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have been somewhat impressed with the argument made in favor of Maryland in this controversy, although there may be extreme cases where hardship would arise from the enforcement of that law. price that would be necessary to go once through the State, or a little way in the State and out, would be a hardship. I presume that is true, and must necessarily be true, of every license in every State. If you are required to buy a license that will last a year and you only use your car one day you are paying a pretty high price for it; or if you are unfortunate, as I was, and get an Overland, you can not use it at all; it breaks down every time you get out.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator does not get over land with it, does he? [Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. I do not get over land with it; no. That is pretty good.

Mr. President, I can see a reason that appeals to me as being fairly just why the people of Maryland made an exception in their law with regard to the people of the District of Columbia. Here is the District of Columbia, with a very small mileage and a very large population living right at the edge of the State of Maryland. I presume that many miles of some of Maryland's fine roads are used more by the people of the District of Columbia than they are used by the residents of the State of Maryland. Reciprocity is based on the theory that people coming from one State and going to another are doing that for temporary purposes, but it is different with the use of the Maryland roads by a large number at least of the population of the District of Columbia. It is a permanent thing. On the other hand, they pay but very little for a license in the District of Columbia. I do not know how much, but for a small amount one gets a license for a car that will last during the life of the car.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will state that we have amended

Mr. NORRIS. This bill makes it annual, I understand, and that will be a change of the law. So it would not be much of a hardship for the people of Maryland to pay that little license in the District of Columbia, and the people of the District of Columbia who live here permanently, it seems to me, ought not to object to paying something toward the upkeep of roads in Maryland. The justice is not all on one side, as I look at it.

Maryland. The justice is not all on one side, as I look at it.

I should like to have some law of reciprocity. I dislike to go as far as this amendment would go. It does not seem to me to be quite fair. It is hardly applicable to any other case that I know of where a large city is just at the edge of a State whose population use the roads of the State more than the people themselves who build the roads.

The Maryland people have to pay the taxes, and enormous taxes, to keep up the good roads they have. They have been doing wonderfully well, it seems to me, on the good-roads proposition in Maryland. It would hardly be right to allow the 350,000 people who live right at the edge of Maryland continually to use the roads day after day, not for temporary purposes but permanently, without requiring them to pay something toward the upkeep of those roads.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word about the amendment. My colleague and I are the only Members of the Senate who own machines that can vote on this amendment in the affirmative without excusing ourselves as license taxpayers. We are going to pay the license in the District anyhow; we always pay that and always will; but every other Member owning a machine who votes for this amendment, without realizing it, I believe, is simply excusing himself from obtaining a license for an automobile in the District of Columbia while he is here, and at the same time increasing that tax for machine owners in the District and for

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I call the Senator to order.

It is not in order to make an accusation of that kind. Mr. LEE of Maryland. I did not reflect upon the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. I am not talking about reflection upon me, but upon all the balance of the Senate who do not vote with the Senators from Maryland—because it excuses them from some financial obligation. It is, in my judgment, stepping across and over the rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the point of order made by the Senator from Wyoming is correct, but the Chair did not understand the language of the Senator from Maryland to mean that.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. No; there was no invidious reflection in my remarks. I was speaking to the Senator from Utah just now, and I said he was unconscious of that, which was perfectly proper.

Mr. WARREN. I speak of it as a reflection upon the entire Senate, except the Senator and his colleague, and I think I am justified in making the complaint. The record of the report of the remarks of the Senator will show. But I do not care to pursue the subject.

Mr. SMOOT. As far as I am concerned, I will state—
Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I believe I have the

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland will proceed.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I should like to go on and make a Mr. LEE of Maryland. I should like to go on and make a statement of what I propose to say.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say that "the Senator from Utah" is not unconscious of what the amendment provides. I do not put the same construction on the amendment that the Senator from Maryland does. He must be mistaken as to what the object is.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I will ask the Senator now if he pays a license tax in the District of Columbia on his automobile?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will pardon a further interruption. I ask him now

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I have asked the Senator a question. Mr. SMOOT. Wait until I anwer that, because the Senator in a few minutes will say I did not answer it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. To answer the question.

Mr. SMOOT. I started to tell the Senator before that some 10 or 12 years ago I secured a license tax in the District of Columbia for my automobile.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. The same machine the Senator is using now?

Mr. SMOOT. No; not the same machine.
Mr. LEE of Maryland. The Senator is running an automobile with a license he did not get for it.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President, I am not. The Senator from Utah is doing exactly the same as any other citizen of the District of Columbia and every other Senator who resides in the District of Columbia; but the bill provides that hereafter there shall be an annual tax. The Senator from Utah does not expect to avoid paying that tax. He has no intention of avoiding the payment of the tax.

The amendment which I have offered proposes that whatever treatment the other States give to the District of Columbia they shall have the same treatment given. That is all there is to it. I do not expect to get rid of paying any tax. I am glad to pay the tax. In fact, I want to say to the Senator that some four or five years ago the Commissioners of the District of Columbia thought there ought to be an annual tax, and that under the law they could collect an annual tax. I was asked to pay an annual tax and paid for that year. The question was taken to the court and decided that the payment of an annual tax was not required under the law. This bill, if it becomes a law, with the amendment will provide for an annual tax. The Senator from Utah expects to pay any tax imposed the same as the Senator from Maryland will have to.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I do not reflect upon the Senator from Utah or the Senator from Wyoming in the slightest degree or upon any Senator who votes for this amendment. It is simply an awkward piece of legislation. The alleged object is to produce complete State reciprocity between the District of Columbia and Maryland. It has no effect on that situation whatever, not the slightest. We pay our license tax when we come into the District as we pay our Maryland license, and that is all, so far as the Maryland people and the District people are concerned.

The proposed amendment is absolutely reciprocal, so far as we are concerned; but the effect it has is that it excuses every Member of the Senate or anybody else in the District of Columbia from paying an annual automobile license tax if he has an automobile license in some other State. That is all it does.

The Senator says he wants to produce a State reciprocity situation between Maryland and the District. This amendment has no effect of that kind. It leaves things as they are now, save the increase, which is objectionable. The amendment is simply an awkward piece of legislation in that it is alleged to accomplish one result and actually accomplishes another. only reflection that I make on this occasion is not that the Senators are desirous of escaping this small license fee; I excuse them entirely from any such small object. The amendment simply proposes an awkward piece of legislation which does not accomplish what the proposer seems to have in mind.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, the thought has occurred to me that it is passing strange that all these travelers want to go to Maryland. I have not heard anybody suggest going to Virginia or West Virginia. What may be the reason or the cause I do not know. There must be a reason, God knows.

Mr. GALLINGER. We have to go through Maryland to get to New Jersey

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It is worth going through Maryland to get to New Jersey. Then you go to God's country. But there must be some reason. I have racked my brain for half an hour to find out why it was that what these distinguished gentlemen say in this body all tends one way, to Maryland. Finally the thought came across my mind that Maryland is wet and the arid portions of our immediate neighborhood are in Virginia and West Virginia. As much as I love Virginians and West Virginians, I think the gentlemen here are justified in bearing for Maryland.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator that we have such good roads they can get to their destination very quickly.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Good roads in Maryland, good whisky, and beautiful women.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

The Secretary. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add the following as a new section:

SEC. —. That section 11 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved September 1, 1916, be amended so that the same shall read as follows:

"SEC. 11. Section 6 of the act of July 1, 1902, entitled 'An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes,' is hereby amended by adding, after paragraph 2 of said section:

"SEC. 11. Section to of the act of July 1, 1992, entitled An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes,' is hereby amended by adding, after paragraph 2 of said section:

"That the moneys and credits, including moneys loaned and invested, bonds and shares of stock (except the stock of banks and other corporations within the District of Columbia, the taxation of which banks and corporations is herein provided for) of any person, firm, association, or corporation resident or engaged in business within said District shall be scheduled and appraised in the manner provided by paragraph 1 of said section 6 for listing and appraisal of tangible personal property and assessed at their fair cash value, and as taxes on said moneys and credits there shall be paid to the tax collector of said District three-tenths of 1 per cent of the value thereof: Provided, That savings deposits of individuals in a sum not in excess of $500 deposited in banks, trust companies, or building associations, subject to notice of withdrawal and not subject to check, shall be exempt from this tax: Provided further, That such tax on moneys and credits shall not apply to bank notes or notes discounted or negotiated by any bank or banking institution, savings institution, or trust company, nor to savings institutions having no capital stock, building associations, firemen's relief associations, secret and beneficial societies, labor unions, and labor-union relief associations, nor to beneficial organizations paying sick or death benefits, or either or both, from funds received from voluntary contributions or assessments upon members of such associations, societies, or unions: nor shall the provisions of this act apply to life or fire inurance companies having no capital stock, nor to the shares of stock of business companies having no capital stock, nor in addition to incorporations shall be rated, assessed, and taxed as individ

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I make no objection to the amend-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota is accepted by the chairman.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. BRADY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted at the proper place in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to insert in the proper place in the bill the following:

Two thousand dollars for plans for a bridge to be built across Klingle Valley on Connecticut Avenue.

Mr. BRADY. If the amendment which we adopted to-day relative to the purchase of a park site is retained in the bill, it is very essential that this amendment should be adopted. If that amendment is not retained, the conference committee can, of course, reject this amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I make no objection to that amendment. Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment to the pending bill, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 14, after line 18, it is proposed to insert the following:

Enforcement of child-labor law: For the enforcement of the provisions of the act to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia, approved May 28, 1908, namely, for two inspectors at $1,200 each, $2,400: Provided, That existing provision of law requiring the detail of two privates of the Metropolitan police force for the enforcement of said act is hereby repealed.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I think this item is estimated for, and I shall make no objection to it. Let it go to conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHILTON. I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. After line 25, on page 105, it is proposed to insert the following as a new paragraph:

Insert the following as a new paragraph:

For the acquisition, for a public park, of the tract of land known as the Patterson tract, assessed on the records of the assessor of the District of Columbia as parcel 129-2, lying north of Florida Avenue northeast and bounded on the east by the grounds of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf, on the west by New York Avenue and the tracks of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., and on the north by Fairview Avenue, containing 81 acres, more or less, $500,000 (or so much thereof as may be necessary): Provided, That said tract of land shall not be acquired by condemnation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I shall make no objection to the amendment, and it may go to conference so far as I am concerned.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I hope that amendment will not be adopted. It does not strike me that this is a very apt time to be purchasing half-million dollar parks in the District. We are needing about all the money we have. The Federal Government is needing its half of it, and that matter can easily go over to some more convenient season, as was suggested by Saint Paul upon an occasion when the remark was not quite so apropos as it now is.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I expected some opposition to this amendment. It is a result of the system that we have had in dealing with the District of Columbia, and to which I, at the last session of Congress, briefly called the attention of the Senate. So long as we have the half-and-half system we shall have a half-and-half government of the city of Washington and of the District of Columbia.

What are we doing here to-day? We are putting into effect in part what has been talked about in the city for years. Everybody knows that there has been a contest in this city whether we should buy what is known as the Patterson tract in the northeast or whether we should buy the Dean tract in the northwest. The committee has decided to buy the Dean tract of about 9 acres for $625,000, instead of buying the 83½ acres of the other tract for $500,000. I want them both to go in, and let us further limp along in this uncertain way that we are governing this city, but with all sections fairly dealt with. I suppose that one or the other, possibly both, will be knocked out in conference. It does seem to me, however, that this great northeast section of the city should have some consideration. Here is a tract of land that has been, practically by unanimous consent, dedicated to park purposes. It is in a section where a park is needed, but is rejected; while the Dean tract is to be taken, in a section where a park is not needed. I should like to have the amendment adopted now, and let it go to conference. Let us get that composite judgment of the committee of conference as to which section of the city shall be favored, or which plan seems to be just and right for the public good.

Of course, the sensible thing would be for the United States to get away from the old system of gauging its plans in this city by the amount of money which the city can raise. The sensible thing would be to appropriate forty or fifty or one sensible thing would be to appropriate forty or fitty or one hundred million dollars, whatever is necessary, to carry out your park system at once, and not take the childish system of gauging our work in this city by the narrow ideas of a few people in the city of Washington as to what they or we are able to do and what we ought to do. That would be the broad way. Of course, the Senate is not now going to do that; but it is going to do that the standard senate with as many things as it to keep on in the old-fashioned way with as many things as it can, and the half-and-half system is one of them. It is going to keep on in the little, narrow, impractical way of doing a few things this year and a few things next year. Of course, the property is going to get more valuable from year to year; more and more people are going to suffer because they do not know what to do with their property; and this great northeast section will be more and more neglected, as it has been in the past.

But I thought there might come a sense of justice across the Senate that would induce it at least to let these propositions go to the committee of conference side by side, and let somebody think of them both at once and decide in some, as I think, sensible—not meaning to reflect upon anybody—some sensible way the great question of the park system and the development of this great Capital City.

I have no personal interest in the world in this matter. Some citizens over in the northeast, people whom I know, amongst them the chairman of the citizens' committee of the northeast, and Dr. Hall, of the Columbia Institution, out there, called my attention to it. I agreed to offer this amendment. I know nothing about who owns the property or anything about the matter other than what I have stated. I only know that we are again up against the proposition of the old half-and-half system that is holding down the development of the city of Washington simply because a few people who are in the habit of governing the city and trying to govern the United States have decided long ago that this Government should not have any other system.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the old-fashioned plan of cutting your cloak according to your cloth is not a foolish one, but a very sensible one. It is pretty good common sense for anybody, an individual, the Nation, the State, the District, or any other entity, not to spend any money that they have not got, and it is a very good idea for us not to allow the District of Columbia to run into debt to the Federal Government any more. It is already very heavily in debt, and we are going to have a pretty hard time in getting the money back. There is a good deal of local feeling against ever paying it, and a very great effort will be made to have them excused from paying that part of the half of past expenditures which they now owe to the Federal Treasury.

This is an appropriation of not to exceed $500,000. means $500,000, if I understood the amendment aright that the property shall not be condemned. I will ask the Senator from West Virginia if that is not correct?

Mr. CHILTON. That is a provision of the amendment.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Therefore, of course, the man who has the property for sale is not going to take less than $500,000 when Congress says the amount to be paid is not to exceed that.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, the remarks of the dis-tinguished Senator from Mississippi would have been much more in point, I think, if he had been here and said some-thing about the item of $625,000 for the purchase of the Dean The Senator is eminently correct when he says that this Government should not spend more than it has; but we passed that point a good while ago, and that question does not arise here now. The question confronting us in this instance is whether we are going to adopt the little, cheeseparing policy of developing only a part of the park system this year; that I want to call the attention of the Senator to the remark he made that the Government ought not to allow the District to become further indebted to it. He might as well say that the left hand should not be indebted to the right hand. By that very remark he condemns what we are doing. We are here keeping up the fiction of a District government. I do not want to argue that question now; but it arises in connection with everything we do affecting the District of Columbia, and it constantly will arise until we go at this subject in a commonsense way and recognize that the government here in the District of Columbia is the great United States, and that it is trying to develop a great capital. We are not going about it in the right way.

I do not expect this amendment to go through in the final wind-up, in which event neither ought the Dean tract amendment to go through; but there is a probability that one or the other of them will go through, and I should like for this amendment to go alongside of the Dean tract amendment, which provides for the purchase of 9½ acres, at a cost of $625,000, in a rich, well taken care of portion of the city, where the great homes are located and in close proximity to another fine park. I should like to have the committee of conference consider this proposal to acquire eighty-odd acres of land in the neglected northeastern portion of the city in conjunction with the amendment providing for the purchase of the Dean tract.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I said to the Senator a while ago that we would consider the matter in conference, and that I did not object to the amendment.

Mr. CHILTON. But another Senator objected for the Senator. I am not now answering anything that the Senator from Maryland said or did, nor am I taking exception to the manner in which he looked at me, but I was answering what was said upon the floor of the Senate. I shall be glad to have the Senator allow the amendment to go to conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am very glad that the Senator from Mississippi made objection to this amendment. This is a simple little appropriation of half a million dollars for the purpose of buying some land for a public park in the city of Washington. It might be a very wise appropriation to make, but the Senate has no information upon which it can authorize the expenditure of such an enormous amount of money for that purpose at this time.

pose at this time.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. WALSH. I do.
Mr. CHILTON. Does not the Senator know that this item has been recommended by the District Commissioners; that it has been estimated for, and has in every way been considered; and does he not know that what I said in the beginning of my accounts is true that the question has been as to whether or remarks is true, that the question has been as to whether or not this year we would buy the Dean tract for $625,000, or the not this year we would buy the Dean tract for $625,000, or the 80-odd acres in the Patterson tract in the northeast section of the city for $500,000?

Mr. WALSH. Unfortunately, I do not know anything about it. Mr. CHILTON. I was informing the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. I remember very definitely that at the last session of Congress, when the District appropriation bill was under consideration, the matter was agitated of buying three or four different tracts, including the Dean tract.

About the merits of it I have not any idea at all, and I do not know; but I do know that this bill was reported to the Senate know; but I do know that this bill was reported to the Senate without this appropriation of $500,000 in it; and now, when the usual hour for adjournment is reached, we are supposed to vote in an appropriation of $500,000 in a kind of hope or expectation that the conference committee will take care of it and just cut

That is not a commendable way to legislate, as it seems to me. We certainly ought to have some basis upon which we can act. For my own part, I do not think this is a time when we ought to be spending such enormous sums of money for the purpose of buying lands for parks in the city of Washington. I do not mean to condemn the policy at all; but there is an appropriate and an opportune time for these things, and at the present time, when we are pushed to the limit to raise funds to meet the tremendous expenditures which are actually forced upon us, it does seem to me that we can not justify ourselves in making this expenditure, and we certainly can not justify ourselves in voting in favor of the appropriation on the meager information that has been afforded to the Senate this afternoon.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WALSH. I do. Mr. JONES. I also want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that we have in this bill already a provision appropriating $625,000 for the purchase of a tract out here for park purposes.

Mr. WALSH. So I understand; and this would be a mere matter of making the appropriation for park purposes for the city of Washington something over a million dollars.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I rise simply to say that I agree very cordially with the sentiments expressed by the Senators from Mississippi and Montana. I do not think we should load up a conference committee with items which do not receive our approval to the extent that we expect the members of the conference committee to stand for the proposed amend-

I have every desire to comply, where I can, with the wishes and desires of the Senator from West Virginia; but I certainly hope that some evidences of economy, somewhere, will be manifested in this session of Congress before we adjourn.

The Finance Committee is busily engaged in an effort to formulate a revenue measure. Every interest which is sought to be taxed is protesting against being compelled to contribute to our expenditures. That is perfectly natural; that is only human, in fact; but those of us who have the task of providing revenue for these enormous appropriations have some little appreciation of what the task means.

If it be true that $625,000 has been appropriated by this bill for the purchase of park land elsewhere, then I am very sorry. I do not think this is the time for the expenditure of money for any such purposes anywhere. They can wait. We are upon the brink, possibly, of a situation that will require tremendous expenditures, and that ought to bring to us, to some extent at least, a sober realization of our financial responsibilities.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, from local knowledge of this piece of property it is my judgment that it would be an excellent purchase for the Government at this figure. It is next to 100 acres that is now owned by the Government as part of the deaf and dumb institution; and the whole 180-acre tract would be practically a part of a great terminal area that could be used by the Government in connection with any terminal purposes that hereafter might be needed.

My judgment is that it is not to the interest of the owners of this property to accept this price. I do not know what they would do. But this morning we had this matter up, and I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Colorado both to what I had to say this morning about this very property.

There is a bridge over New York Avenue that cost $440,000. It was built as part of the arrangement of this terminal system, and it points right into this Patterson tract. That bridge was built in 1908, and ever since that time that $440,000 of expenditure has been up in the air, because the District of Columbia would never appropriate the money to put in the fills and use the bridge. These people have had New York Avenue condemned through their property, and they are being assessed and taxed to-day on the theory that they practically have this great thoroughfare, New York Avenue, coming at their property and going through it; and yet for all this period that $440,000 structure has been up in the air, and no provision whatever has been made to make it available for the benefit of the public at large or the development of this tract and other real estate to which this bridge would give immediate access across the river of railroad tracks that run into the Union Station.

Here is a very good illustration of what we were talking about this morning. Either "take it or leave it," so to speak. Let these streets go out, and let these people develop their land according to the natural conditions, or take it, if you are going to take it-whichever you are really going to do. But to hold these people up for eight years and tax them at a high rate, with a bridge suspended in the air that cost $440,000, and not be willing to appropriate the little money that is necessary to fill in and continue that highway, seems to me to be practically a sort of municipal highway robbery.

Under the circumstances, Mr. President, if the Senate see fit to vote down this purchase, I am going to ask them to double the amount of money that is in this bill to put that street out. There is $20,000 carried in this bill to extend New York Avenue and fill in the approaches to that bridge, and it will not do more than a little of the work—hardly any of it. If the Senate see fit to vote down the proposal to take this land, then, for goodness sake, let these people alone and let them have the street. Do not stay here any more in this dog-in-the-manger attitude of having a bridge there, right next to them, that cost this great sum of money without permitting them to use it as access to their land. Over half a million dollars of money has gone into that bridge half a million dollars of expenditure to build it, with accrued interest at a low rate.

The positions are absolutely inconsistent. Congress ought not to be guilty of that sort of treatment of any of our citizens. So, if the Senate see fit to vote down this amendment to take this property, then I think they ought to be consistent and at least give $40,000 to let that street go out over that bridge that has already cost $500,000, and is now and has been for eight years of no use to anybody.

Mr. CHIL/TON. Mr. President, as I said, I do not know all of the details of this matter, but I do know that the people who have had it in charge understand all about it. The committees understand the different arguments in favor of these different parks. I send to the desk and ask to have read a letter from Dr. Hall and Mr. Tucker to me on this subject. Then, as far as I am concerned, the vote may be taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the letter, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 8, 1917.

Washington, D. C., February 8, 1917.

Hon. William E. Chilton,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I beg leave to call your attention to the inclosed amendment which I feel should be made to House bill 19119, commonly known as the District of Columbia bill, now pending before the Senate. This amendment I hope you will be willing to propose when this bill is finally considered.

The citizens of the northeast have approved of the purchase of large tracts for the benefit of all parts of the city. They are especially interested at the present time in having provided for the northeast section a park much needed for the use of people from their own locality. The tract they desire, which is known as the "Patterson tract," has the following points to recommend it:

1. Great need. The section in which it lies is being built up rapidly. It has no public park, with the exception of one-half of Lincoln Square and all of Stanton Square, both together representing a few acres of formal parking.

2. The Patterson tract is already being used extensively as a park, showing the need of securing it as public property.

3. The tract is included in the park commissioner's plans.

4. The purchase of this tract has been recommended year after year by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia as the most desirable park project in contemplation.

5. It is not an expensive tract, comparatively speaking. The 81 acres of which it is comprised can probably be bought for $500,000. Comparing this with the 9½ acres of the Dean tract for $625,000, makes the desirability of the price more evident.

This tract, once acquired, will not require much further expense. Part of it is already level, another part consists of open hillside, and the remainder a high wooded hill containing a splendid oak woods. No tract within the city can be so easily and quickly made into a beautiful park at small expense.

The tract in question is directly on a car line, easily accessible from all parts of the northeast, as well as many parts of the n

EVAN H. TUCKER. PERCIVAL HALL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia,

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, about a year or so ago the Senate passed an act to exempt from taxation certain property in this city belonging to the Daughters of the American Revolution, and made an appropriation to reimburse the tax they had paid. Since then the association have bought some more property, which they are occupying. Some time ago I introduced a bill to exempt it from taxation; but, in view of the work that devolved upon the members of the committee, instead of pressing the matter before the committee, I let the matter go, with the thought of offering it as an amendment to this bill. understand that the chairman of the committee will not object; and so, at the proper place, I ask to have inserted the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question. Of course, the propriety of exempting this property from taxation depends altogether upon how it is to be used. The Senator would not exempt it merely because of the people who own it, merely because it is this association, because it is conceivable that they might invest in property which was to be used for purposes of profit.

How is the property to be used?

Mr. CLAPP. This is used for their building and their grounds. They have purchased this additional ground and expect to enlarge the use of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It can not be used for commercial purposes or other purposes of profit?

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, no.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is merely to extend the ground around their buildings?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; it is simply a part of their plan.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. It is proposed to insert, on page 17, after line 7, the following:

That the property situated in square 173 in the city of Washington, D. C., described as lots 4, 5, 6, 7, and 11, inclusive, occupied by the Daughters of the American Revolution, be, and the same is hereby, exempt from and after February 23, 1916, from all taxation so long as the same is so occupied and used, subject to the provisions of section 8 of the act approved March 3, 1877, providing for exemptions of church and school property, and acts amendatory thereof, and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $99.19, the proportion of taxes upon said lots since February 23, 1916, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay said sum of $99.19 to the treasurer of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, this amendment is in entire harmony with one that we adopted some time ago, and I shall not object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. In that connection I should like to have inserted in the RECORD the paper which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, that may be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Washington, D. C., December 18, 1917.

DEAR SENATOR CLAPP: I am inclosing the statement in regard to the taxes on the last lots purchased by the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution. Thanking you very much for what you have and are doing, with much appreciation,

Very truly,

EMMA HAVEN DAVIS.

LOTS 4, 5, 6, 7, AND 11, SQUARE 173.

$282.99

Amount paid by society.

$282.99 will be due May, 1917. [From page 13822 of the Congressional Record of Aug. 1, 1916.]

Mr. Clapp. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator in charge of the bill we have lately passed a law which exempted from taxation some property the Daughters of the American Revolution had bought here subsequent to the original purchase. In the interim, rather than to explain why they did not pay their taxes, it was suggested that they pay their taxes, and if the bill became a law it would be a very easy matter to have a bill passed to reimburse them for the taxes. The taxes which they paid amounted to $271. I have the tax certificate here, if there is any question raised as to that. It is a small matter. I realize that probably it would be subject to a point of order, but it is one of those things that nobody in particular has to look after. To save them the bother of trying to get the bill passed through both Houses, if it is agreeable to the Senator in charge of the bill, I offer the following amendment.

The Secretary. On page 122, after line 16, insert:

"That the sum of $271.76 is hereby appropriated to repay the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution the taxes paid by said society upon lots 23, 24, 25, 27, and 28, square 173, in the District of Columbia, as follows: $143.78 as per receipt for taxes paid March 14, 1916; $127.98 as per receipt for taxes paid March 14, 1916; said sum to be paid upon the presentation of said receipts by the treasurer general of said society."

Mr. Smith of Maryland. I make no objection to that amendment. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, the Senate having

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, the Senate having just rejected the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Chilton] to purchase the Patterson property, I wish to offer an amendment. Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Certainly.

Mr. CHILTON. I simply wish to serve notice, Mr. President, in view of the action of the Senate regarding the Patterson tract, that I want to reserve for a separate vote in the Senate, when the bill comes to the Senate, the amendment putting in the purchase of the $9\frac{1}{2}$ acres at \$625,000. I am glad to see this wholesome idea of economy, and I want to see if it goes to the bone or if it is just skin deep.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, the Senate having just refused to purchase the Patterson tract, I want to offer an amendment that represents the converse proposition. As I said just now, this New York Avenue Bridge, standing there in the air, without any ends to it, is costing the public $20,000 a year in loss of interest. Now, is that to go on? Are we to hold these people up with one hand and threaten them with the other? Or will Congress simply and candidly go ahead and let these people have the street and get the advantage of the commercial value of their land?

Mr. President, in order to test that situation, in line 14, page 34, I move to strike out "$20,000"—a wholly inadequate sum—and insert "and improve, $40,000," making the amendment read:

Northeast. New York Avenue and U Streets, Florida Avenue to Bladensburg Road, grade and improve, $40,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 34, lone 13, it is proposed to strike out "$20,000" and insert "and improve, $40,000."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland her has been presented.

land has not been estimated for and is plainly out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Can the Senator from Maryland say that it has been estimated for?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, the greatest latitude has been shown here to-day on the subject of amendments. This is an amendment dealing with a proposition that is in the bill, and the gate has practically been thrown open, as I understand the rulings of the Vice President, to the discretion of the Senate

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order on the ground that the item has not been estimated for.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am going to offer an amendment. I will simply state its effect, and then let it be voted on.

I do not think the license tax on motor vehicles provided in this bill is large enough, so I am going to offer an amendment to it. The provision in the bill at present is $5 for each vehicle over 24 horsepower, and $3 for each vehicle of less than 24 horsepower. I am going to offer an amendment that will make it $5 for each vehicle over 24 horsepower and up to 30 horsepower, and $10 for each vehicle over 30 horsepower.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be

The Secretary. On page 24, after the word "power" in line 6, it is proposed to insert:

And not exceeding 30 horsepower, $10 for each vehicle of more than 30 horsepower.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. On what page is that?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On page 24, line 6. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to what I have been told is a mistake in the bill as it passed the House. My attention has been called to this matter by a member of the House Committee on the District of Columbia. He thinks it is a mistake, and he thinks it ought to be rectified. I do not know anything about it myself, except what he has said about it.

I wish the chairman of the committee would take the bill and turn to page 66, commencing with the last word of line 17, and he will find these words:

Five police matrons, at $720 each, to possess police powers of arrest. On page 68, under the heading "House of detention," line 20, we find this language: "Three matrons, at $600 each, to possess police powers of arrest." A member of the House committee tells me that the last three are getting only $600 a year for the same work in performing the duties that are performed by the others who are paid $720.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I grant there is a discrimination, but they will all get an increase under the amendment we put on of 10 or 15 per cent. We started to increase some of these salaries, but the entire committee cut them out and would not put them in.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course under that amendment we could increase the salaries, but there would still be a discrepancy just the same as now

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I grant that.

Mr. NORRIS. I can not see why there should be any difference. On one page there is an item for five police matrons at $720 and on page 68 there are three matrons at $600 each, each one having as far as I can see the same power of arrest to act as policemen. There may be some reason for that, although the Member of the House who called it to my attention thought that the hard work was to be done by those who are getting only a salary of $600.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say there are others who are receiving salaries probably not commensurate with the service rendered and probably discriminatory, but when the subcommittee started to make increases the committee determined to make no increases whatever; but we have agreed to one amendment, the Senator will notice.

I noticed that. Maryland. We have depended upon the in-SMITH of Maryland. crease made by the Smoot amendment. We hope after a little while to be able to remedy these discrepancies. I am not going to argue with the Senator that it is exactly fair, but these things will creep in, and it takes a little time to eliminate them.

Mr. NORRIS. Since these police women have the same duty to perform, and as far as the work is concerned it is exactly alike, as far as I can see, would the Senator object to putting in an amendment equalizing them and let it go to conference, and if there is any difference the conferees of course could recede. If we do that there is not anything here with which we can equalize the salary.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I have admitted to the Senator that there is a discrepancy, but there are other discrepancies probably similar to this, and we felt if we started to put up salaries there was no telling where it would end. The entire committee determined that they would not increase any salaries, and let them be subject to an increase by the Smoot amendment. We will probably get it in the next time. I think the Senator from Nebraska is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that the clerks be authorized to correct the totals in the bill.

The Chair hears no objection, and it is granted.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, if I may disturb the conversation of Senators I wish to offer an amendment and give fairly good reason for its presentation at this time.

Mr. President, it is impossible to hear. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will resume their seats and preserve order.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say that we wish to finish the bill to-night, and I hope the Senate will pardon us for taking a few minutes more in order to get it through.

Anyone who has visited the Zoological Park Mr. LANE. will notice a thing which will, perhaps, appeal to not many which can be easily remedied and which I may say is inhuman and ought to be stopped. We have a large collection of animals there, and it is most unfortunate for them to be deprived of their liberty. are animals that love their liberty, and they ought to have as good treatment as we can give them, plenty of ground to range in, proper food, and so forth. So I make an appeal for those particularly interesting animals such as deer and elk. They are confined in small paddocks on barren hillsides, and the feed during the winter and probably the greater part of the summer is dry feed, such as hay and oats. A deer does not eat grass in its native haunts

They browse Mr. SMITH of Maryland. If the Senator will pardon me, the Zoological Garden is provided for in the sundry civil bill, unless under such circumstances that it can not secure anyand there is no estimate made for it here.

Mr. LANE. Then I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maryland about the provision on page 48 for the Rock Creek Park. I think the committee has charge of those matters. Mr. STONE. The Zoological Garden is under the control of the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. LANE. Then there is no place for it here, but here is an item put in this bill to which I wish to call attention. I consider it to be a part of the duty of this body. It would cost but a few dollars to in part feed those animals properly some green stuff, kale, turnips, and so forth, which can be raised on farms, all of which can be produced for little money.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say the matter the Senator speaks of is under the entire control of the National Zoological Park, and we have nothing whatever to do with it, and we have no right to consider the matter at all on that bill.

Mr. LANE. If there is no opportunity for them to have green food they are surely confronted with continued hard times.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. There is $100,000 appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. LANE. Not in this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Not in this bill, because it does not come in this bill. One hundred thousand dollars is appropriated for the National Zoological Park and that which pertains

Then I withdraw that part of my amendment and suggest the other part, which has to do with conditions outside of the park as well as in the park, and it belongs on this bill.

It is a bill pertaining to the District of Columbia, said to be the most beautiful Capital City in the world, and one which we are trying to improve in every way.

If you will go to that park at this time of the day, or a little earlier, you will find all the buzzards from Virginia and Delaware, and I assume clear down to Florida, roosting in the trees, and all transient buzzards in their travels between the southern part of this country and the North Pole, stop off and congregate there to roost and enjoy its fragrance. They do that for the reason that the odor arising from the captive animals' houses smells so good to them that they by hundreds and hundreds roost there and in an ecstacy of delight inhale it all night and get up in the morning much refreshed, I have no doubt. Then they strike out across the sky in great circles, hunting for something more substantial, though not so odorous, to eat and sometimes get it and sometimes they do not. Then, although miles away, they get a whiff of the park and back they come with the fixed conviction that surely there must be something where the indications are so strong. Either that or they use it as a kind of bracer, as some do who take a cocktail before dinner, intoxicated with the fragrance and elated with the hope of getting something to eat before they go to roost.

It is not a fair way to treat scavenger birds or stray and unsuspecting birds; it is a kind of bunco game which they are put up against, and should be stopped.

So I offer an amendment here for an appropriation of $500 with which to buy Chinese "joss" or "punk" sticks to burn in front of the cages and menageries to dilute and modify the air about the park, so that these God-fearing birds may get a chance to go about their business of making an honest living without being deluded and flimflammed into thinking they have struck a bonanza, and also that pleasure seekers may make a tour of it without having to suffer nausea while doing so.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say that the amount has not been estimated for, and I make a point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, except the one reserved, pertaining to the Dean tract, out objection, the amendments other than the one referred to will be held to be concurred in. They are concurred in. The question now is on concurring in the amendment which was reserved.

Mr. STONE. That is the amendment proposing to expend $625,000 to buy the Dean tract.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the amendment which was reserved for a separate vote.

Mr. STONE. I hope, and very much hope, that it will not be concurred in.

Mr. THOMAS. So do I. Let us strike it out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I shall not urge this matter at all. I merely want to state the reasons why the committee put it in the bill. The tract has been held for about a million dollars for many years. It is now assessed at $625,000. Within two blocks of the Dean tract there are 49 apartment houses and it is one of the most thickly populated sections of the city. It is costing the parties who hold the property about $30,000 a year.

I do not hesitate to say that if we could buy it in a year hence or two years hence I would say not to take it now, but from what I can learn I fear that the opportunity for buying the property will not long be had by the Government of the United States and the District of Columbia. That was our reason for putting it in. Of course if the Senate feels that they are willing to take the chance and knock it out it is for them to determine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was nonconcurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8492) to restore homestead rights in certain cases.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 7757) authorizing a further extension of time to purchasers of land in the former Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indian Reservation, Okla., within which to make payment, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18542) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Byrns of Tennessee, Mr. Sisson, and Mr. Good managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 14074. making.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado will state it.

Mr. THOMAS. My understanding is that the so-called waterpower bill is the unfinished business. I have no desire to retain that bill before the Senate, but I am a member of the Committee on Public Lands, and the chairman of the committee is not here. In his behalf I make the inquiry.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn. Mr. RANSDELL. I hope the Senator will not make that

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask the Senator to withdraw the motion and move a recess. I will accept that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m., Friday, February 9, 1917) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 10, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 9, 1917.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who art supremely wise, all-powerful, the essence of whose being is love, quicken all that is purest, noblest, best in us, and help us to eliminate the evil tendencies which lie in wait to destroy; that the trend of our life may be forward not backward, upward not downward, heavenward not hellward; that we may build for ourselves from within a character which shall be an everlasting memorial to our Maker, through Him who taught us the way and the truth and the life. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANGLEY rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. LANGLEY. To ask unanimous consent to address the House for not exceeding five minutes in order that I may explain and modify a statement I made in debate yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to address the House for not exceeding five minutes.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his request for a moment?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this is pension day, and I ask unanimous consent that two pension bills on the Private Calendar, one a Senate bill from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and one a House bill from the Committee on Pensions, be considered in order and taken up following the completion of the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that a Senate private pension bill from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and also a House bill from the Committee on Pensions, be taken up immediately following the conclusion of the consideration of the naval appropriation bill,

Is there objection?

Mr. KITCHIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the gentleman from Missouri that it was understood the other day, or rather the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Rauch] gave notice, that immediately after the conclusion of the naval appropriation bill he would ask for the consideration of the pension appropriation bill. It will take not more than an hour and a half or two hours, if that. I suggest that the gentleman from Missouri make his request to follow that bill. I understand the gentleman from Missouri thinks it will take only half an hour to dispose of his bills.

Mr. SHERWOOD. It will take about 22 minutes to pass the two bills

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, we can stay here an hour later if

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Well, I will change the request and ask that these private pension bills be taken up following the consideration of the pension appropriation bill.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Missouri, as well as to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kitchin], that there is no objection to the consideration of these bills, but there is some difficulty in making an agreement in advance. It is just as easy to take up these bills after the pension appropriation bill is passed or after the naval appropriation bill is passed as it is now, but why make this advance agreement?
Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Because this is pension day, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. They are in order at any time.

Mr. GARNER. I know they are in order.
Mr. KITCHIN. I think there will be no objection. We can stay here an hour or two later if necessary.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman believe that in spite of the effort of any man it would take more than half a day?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; and it will not take half a night.
Mr. MANN. They could be considered now while waiting for Members to come in.

Mr. GARNER. I have no objection, Mr. MANN. Why not read them now?

Mr. KITCHIN. That would be perfectly satisfactory to me. If the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] in charge of the naval appropriation bill would prefer that course, all right. But if he prefers to go on with the naval bill, very well.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I would prefer that the matter be disposed of now rather than to break into it at 5 o'clock this afternoon, because I can not forecast as to the time. If it will not take more than 20 minutes I shall not object.

Mr. MANN. It will be in order at any time to move to defer it. I suggest that the gentleman from Missouri ask to consider those bills in the House as in Committee of the Whole

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Lang-LEY] asked unanimous consent to proceed for not exceeding five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for five minutes.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, acting wholly upon my own initiative and in obedience to a sense of justice, I am making this statement for the RECORD.

Yesterday while the House was debating some of the Senate amendments to the legislative bill I had an understanding with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns], who had charge of the time, that I was to have five minutes in opposition to the amendment proposing to classify postmasters. I hurriedly proceeded to arrange in my mind the points I would endeavor to cover in that time. At the last moment the gentleman from Tennessee informed me that owing to encroachments upon his time by those who had preceded me he could only yield me a minute and a half and I then had less time than that remaining representatives of Valentine Brasch; in which to think of something to say in that minute and a half,

[Laughter.]

It occurred to me that I could cite my experience as appointment clerk of the Census Office in helping to organize that office independent of the civil service as an illustration of how easily a high standard of efficiency can be obtained without competitive examination. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] had both just spoken in support of the Senate amendment. I recalled that they had both submitted, along with other Members of Congress, their recommendations to fill the quotas allotted to them in that office; and, speaking in a spirit of badinage and, of course, hastily, I used language which was calculated to place those two gentlemen in a false position. The reporters' notes, which are usually correct, show that I said these two gentlemen were among those who made the most consistent appeals for patronage. After thinking the matter over I regretted that I used the language that I did, and would gladly have recalled it. The facts are that we made an allotment of Census Office appointments to each Senator and Representative and notified each of the number allotted to him and requested him to submit a list of recommendations. Both of the gentlemen named did this and my recollection is that the quota allotted in each instance was filled, but if I am in error as to that the records of the Census Office will show it. However, that is neither here nor there. I want to frankly, and in this public manner, say that as I now recall it there was no effort whatever on the part of either gentleman named to get more appointments than the bureau had requested them to ask for, and both of them were always courteous and considerate in their dealing with the bureau in these matters.

During my 10 years of service in this body I have never intentionally misrepresented or otherwise done an injustice to any of my fellow Members.\ I have always been scrupulously careful on that point, and I can not, in justice to my own sense of fairness and in justice to the two gentlemen referred to, permit this incident to pass without putting this statement in the

RECORD. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit me to say what I said to him privately yesterday, but not publicly, that he did not hurt my feelings any? [Laughter.]

Mr. LANGLEY. I am very glad, indeed, to have my friend say that publicly.

Mr. Speaker, having made this explanation and not having had the opportunity to express myself fully yesterday on the question, I ask unanimous consent that I may state briefly in the RECORD my reasons for opposing the proposition to classify postmasters and my views on civil service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the Niagara power bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Niagara power bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. Key of Ohio, a motion to reconsider the NAVY YARDS AND NAVAL STATIONS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, Report No. 3 of the Commission on Navy Yards and Naval Stations, dated January 31, 1917.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 9, 1917.

OUR RIGHTS ON THE SEAS.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to extend my remarks in the Record by printing documents relating to our rights upon the seas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to print in the Congressional Record as part of his remarks documents concerning our rights upon the seas. Is there ob-

Mr. BARNHART. Reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Ohio what is the nature of these documents, and what is the extent of them. Mr. FESS. Yesterday I placed in the Record the documents pertaining to our controversy with Germany on the submarine question. Now I should like to print the documents relating to our controversy with Great Britain on the question of contraband, blockades, and so forth, separate from the German con-

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; but what I inquired or tried to inquire was

Mr. FESS. How extensive the documents are?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes. First, how extensive, and, secondly, do these documents come from the State Department?

Mr. FESS. I got a good many from the State Department, but there are some which I get from the New York Times.

Mr. BARNHART. Does the gentleman think newspaper reports are sufficiently reliable? Might they not be colored so as to be misleading?

Mr. FESS. My intention is to print nothing except official documents. I do not print opinions or newspaper comments, but simply the documents themselves.

Mr. TOWNER. Let me say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] that these documents are exceedingly valuable to Members of Congress, and it is desirable to have them in a form in which they may be available, and not in scattered newspaper articles, which, as the gentleman says, are very often unreliable. But I take it the gentleman is perhaps aware that the New York Times is publishing these documents, and publishing also a current history of the war which is supposed to be as nearly official and as reliable as anything that can be procured. I am sure Dr. Fess will not put in anything that is not desirable and reliable.

Mr. FESS. I will not print any opinions. The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DIGEST OF CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES (H. REPT. 1445).

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a privileged resolution, which I ask to have read and considered at this

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana submits a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 70.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 5,000 copies, bound in buckram, for the use of the House of Representatives, of the manuscript prepared by Hon. MERRILL MOORES, being a digest of contested-election cases in the House of Representatives from 1901 to 1917, together with laws relating to contested elections in the House of Representatives and campaign contributions and expenditures.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. How are these copies to be distributed? Mr. BARNHART. Through the folding room.

Mr. STAFFORD. The resolution does not make any such provision.

Mr. BARNHART. They go to the folding room unless the resolution provides otherwise.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought perhaps the Committees on Elections might desire some copies of this document.

Mr. BARNHART. There are 5,000 copies. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] is the author of the resolution, and I heartly concur in it. At this time, when so many election cases are coming up, I think it is important that this digest be brought down to date.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not wish it to be understood that I am opposing the resolution. I am only inquiring as to the method of distribution.

Mr. MANN. That will be through the folding room.
Mr. BARNHART. If there is no other provision in a resolution of this sort, the documents go to the folding room.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BARNHART. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.
Mr. SHERLEY. Is there any necessity for binding all these number bound in buckram for the individual Members, and the rest could be bound in paper.

Mr. BARNHART. The difference in cost between buckram and paper is less than $500. If we should have a part of them bound in buckram and the rest in paper, the difference in cost would be so slight that it was the opinion of the committee that we had better bind them all in buckram, the volume being an important one.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolu-

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

FOX RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Fox River Bridge bill, which was passed by the House yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the Fox River Bridge bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MOORE'S DIGEST OF INTERNATIONAL LAW (H. REPT. 1447).

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolu-tion which I ask to have considered at the present time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana sends up a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 31.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That 1,000 copies of Moore's Digest of International Law of the House of Representatives be printed, 700 for use of the folding room of the House and 300 for use of the folding room of the Senate, and the superintendents of the said folding rooms are hereby authorized to deliver not more than one copy to each Member of the Senate and each Member of the House on request of the Member desiring same.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Certainly.
Mr. LANGLEY. What will be done with the balance of the volumes? There will be only one, you say, for each Member, and there are but 435 Members.

Mr. BARNHART. They will be held in the folding room until our successors come in and take them up, one by one.

Mr. LANGLEY. I wish the gentleman would make it enough so as to give each Member two sets.

Mr. BARNHART. The difficulty is in the expense, and the extra set would hardly be worth while. Unless we had enough to distribute to those who are asking for them, we would be in a worse situation than if we could say we did not have any for free distribution.

Mr. LANGLEY. The reason that I make the suggestion is that I have in mind one very urgent request from my district for a copy, and I need one myself.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman, being familiar with international law, can give his copy to him.

Mr. LANGLEY. Well, as a matter of fact, I did take a three years' course in international law in the George Washington University, and I have a diploma for that course, with the names of several distinguished authorities signed to it, including such men as the late Justices Harlan and Brewer, of the Supreme Court, and David Jayne Hill. [Applause.] Apparently the gentleman from Indiana did not know that.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BARNHART. Certainly.
Mr. MANN. I think there is no authority under existing law for documents to be held in the folding room and delivered to Members who come into the House hereafter. Has the committee jurisdiction over that matter? The law requires equal distribution between the districts, and the extra numbers go to the superintendent of documents for sale.

Mr. BARNHART. Does the gentleman think that the bal-ance would go to the superintendent of documents after the enactment of this resolution?

Mr. MANN. I do not know; probably the gentleman knows more about it than I do; but under the present law, where documents go to the folding room, there is an equal distribution between the districts, and the extra numbers go to the superintendent of documents for sale.

Mr. BARNHART. That is where there are a few extra numbers left over after an equal apportionment to Members.

Mr. MANN. If there is a vacancy in my district and that vacancy is filled, there is no law that gives preference to that district in the distribution of documents in preference to another district represented by a Member who remains here.

Mr. BARNHART. The committee had that situation under consideration, and we have specifically enacted that these shall copies in buckram? I should think you could have a given be sent to the folding room and not more than one set be given to each Member, and the folding room thereby will hold the balance until they are taken up.

Mr. MANN. The folding room will have to hold them; but can they ever do anything with them?

Mr. BARNHART. They can give them out in accordance with this resolution.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.
Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Has the printing of the Moores's International Digest been heretofore authorized? Mr. BARNHART. Yes

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Then this involves a duplication or an extension.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are the plates in existence?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why does the committee provide a larger surplus for the Senate than for the House? The Senate does not change as often as the House.

Mr. BARNHART. The experience of the committee has been that unless we give to the Senators a proportion of one-third, which they claim as their share, they do not play ball; they let the resolution die, and we need these books.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then it is in consonance with the rule rather than the harmony of the two bodies.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes. I do not want to make any statement about the other body that will have to be stricken from the Record, as sometimes happens.

The resolution was agreed to.

JOURNAL OF THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC (H. REPT. 1446).

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 65.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Schate concurring), That there shall be printed as a House document 1,500 copies of the journal of the fifty-first national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, for the year 1917, not to exceed $1,700 in cost, with illustrations, 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House and 500 for the use of the Schate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20632, the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. Page of North Carolina in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter all laws relating to the examination of officers of the Navy for promotion shall be construed to apply to the regular advancement of staff officers to higher ranks on the active list, the same as though such advancements in rank were promotions to higher grades: Provided, That nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as in any way affecting the original appointment of officers to the Dental Corps as provided in the act approved August 29, 1916, making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I would like to ask what is the meaning of this?

Mr. PADGETT. In the last naval appropriation bill, in the legislation reorganizing the personnel of the Navy, there was inserted a provision known as the running-mate provision for the Staff Corps-where a man on the Staff Corps would go up with his running mate in the line, the man next after whom he holds his commission. It appears that there is another statute passed some years ago requiring all the officers promoted from one grade to a higher grade to pass an examination—mental, physical, moral, and professional—in order to go up to the higher grade. With reference to the running-mate provision he might go up in rank and receive pay, but be held down in the original grade without passing the examination. This simply provides that he shall pass the examination which is now provided by law in the grade before he goes up in the rank and receives the advance pay.

Mr. MANN. Let me see if I understand the gentleman. An officer of the line is promoted, and that would give automatic promotion to his running mate on the staff, and under existing law the officer on the staff is not required to take an examination, but he gets increased pay?

Mr. PADGETT. He would go up under the running-mate provision without examination in rank, but would not in grade. Mr. MANN. I say under existing law he would get increase in pay without taking an examination.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. This is to require him to take the examination before he gets an increase in rank or pay.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The other day the gentleman had an amendment read for information enabling the President to commandeer the various activities of the Government. lieve that the chairman stated that he was going to call the committee together to consider that provision, as well as-

Mr. PADGETT. Two others.
Mr. STAFFORD. As well as the Government purchasing the rights to patents in aviation.

Mr. PADGETT. And also expediting appropriations.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to inquire whether the committee has made any formal report upon the respective measures, and whether they are in print, so that the Members of the House can have them before they are submitted?

Mr. PADGETT. No. 1 have a draft of it here, and I can tell the gentleman what it is. If the gentleman will take the bill H. R. 20779 I can explain it. All of paragraph (d) is bill H. R. 20779 I can explain it. All of paragraph (d) is eliminated. That is the paragraph that authorizes the commandeering of labor. Then, on page 4, line 2, the language "at such reasonable price as shall be determined by the Secretary of the Navy" is changed by inserting the word "President" instead of the words "Secretary of the Navy," so that it would be determined by the President. The other changes are simply verbal and do not change the meaning in substance. Mr. STAFFORD. May I inquire what is the purpose of the chairman as to the two other proposals?

Mr. PADGETT. There was no change made except that with reference to aviation there was an additional proviso added, as follows:

Provided further, That in the event there shall be pending in court litigation involving the validity of said patent or patents bond with good and approved securities in an amount sufficient to indemnify the United States shall be required, payable to the United States, conditioned to repay to the United States the amount paid for said patent or patents in the event said patent or patents are finally adjudged invalid.

That was added for the reason that there is now pending litigation in the courts. The Curtiss Co., that manufactures aeroplanes, proceeded, so it is contended by the Wright Co., to infringe upon the Wright Co. patents.

Mr. STAFFORD. I did not wish to enter into a discussion of the merits of the respective propositions.

Mr. PADGETT. I was just giving the reasons.
Mr. STAFFORD. I merely want to have for the benefit of the House the action of the committee, so that the House can consider the respective proposals before they are offered formally for consideration.

Mr. PADGETT. Because of that pending litigation we inserted this proviso requiring a bond to indemnify in case that finally the patent should be adjudged an invalid patent. In other words, we do not want to buy a patent that is not any good.

Mr. STAFFORD. As to the third proposal, House bill 20781, providing for the expeditious delivery, has there been any change

Mr. PADGETT. The committee inserted the words "in his discretion," so that it would read:

That to enable the President in his discretion, etc.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am much obliged to the gentleman for his information.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This section relates to the personnel of the Navy, and the personnel is more important than the materiel.

Mr. PADGETT. I think they go together.

Mr. FOSS. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he thinks they have made ample provision here for the personnel of the Navy? That is to say, for the increase in officers and the increase in the number of men.

Mr. PADGETT. I think so. That is all provided for in the act of August 29, so far as the officers are concerned. We base it for the first time on a percentage of the enlisted strength, and that authorized a total commissioned strength in the line of 2,988, as I remember, and at that time we had 2,130, and odd. We also provided for additional appointments to Annapolis, which made the increase of 531, running the total appointments up to about 1,800 from about 1,300.

Mr. FOSS. I want to state to the gentleman that I was particularly struck by the testimony of Admiral Palmer, to be found on page 599, in which he stated that if we should mobilize to-day we would be about 938 officers short; that is, by putting all of the ships into commission, which we have never yet been able to do.

Mr. PADGETT. In explanation of that, I can state that we have about 700 officers available from the Naval Militia, and then we have all of the retired officers, and that would more than fill it up, so that the whole 938 could be made up from the Naval Militia and retired officers and still leave a surplus.

I would like to ask the gentleman in reference to the enlisted force. We provide in this bill for 68,000. Is that correct?

Mr. PADGETT. The authorized strength of the Navy, think, is 78,000 and something, and the appropriation is made in this bill to take care of an increase up to 70,000 during the fiscal year.

Mr. FOSS. I want to call the gentleman's attention to what Admiral Palmer said on the same page, 599. He said, in speaking of mobilization, if that should occur-and, of course, that is the first thing that will occur if we should get into trouble with any foreign power, which I trust we will not do-we would be short about 8,049 Regulars and 23,330 reserves, after using 9,000 militia and 463 fleet reserves, and that the shortage would increase for each new ship commissioned in 1917 and 1918, and the three-year program alone would require 29,127 Then, over on page 601, there is a preliminary estimate of the personnel required for mobilization plan for July, 1916, which calls for enlisted men, Regulars, to the number of 99,809, and reserves, 45,870. How near do we approach at the present time, or under the provisions of this bill, to these requirements stated by Admiral Palmer, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation?

Mr. PADGETT. The President is authorized in time of emergency to increase to, I believe, 88,000 in the bill of last year, and then we have between nine and ten thousand in the Naval Militia.

Then we have the reserve that was provided and created by the act of August 29-845-a few days ago. Then the others would have to be enlistments which would come in from the 30,000 or 35,000 of ex-enlisted men who were out in civil life, who have gone out of the service and-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I renew my motion to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes additional. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PADGETT. And, as the gentleman is aware, there is a large number of ex-enlisted men in civil life; and Admiral Blue stated to the committee, I think last year it was, that the department had a mailing list of addresses in which they could be in touch with a large number of those men.

Mr. FOSS. Will all of these men which the gentlemen has spoken of, some-

Mr. PADGETT. If the gentleman will permit me for just a moment. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Hamlin] asked me if the ex-enlisted men can be forced back in time of war, and I said to him, no; but that needs some qualification. two years ago all those who went out of the service prior to that time could not, but in the act of two years ago we had inserted a provision so that ex-enlisted men can be called back into the service.

Mr. HAMLIN. I thought so. Mr. PADGETT. Where they retire, where they are on the retired list, they can be called back.

Mr. HAMLIN. I thought there was such a provision in a recent bill.

Mr. PADGETT. That is true in reference to the retired list. Now, that does not apply to where a man enlists and serves out his service and goes completely out of the service and severs all connection with the service.

Mr. FOSS. I would like to ask the gentleman, summing up all these different bodies of men to which the gentleman has referred, what would that make as our total of enlisted force if they should come in?

Mr. PADGETT. With ex-enlisted men?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. One hundred and twenty-five thousand; something like that, or possibly 130,000. I do not know the exact

Mr. FOSS. That would leave, then, a shortage of about 25,000 in case of a mobilization of our naval forces, according to

Mr. PADGETT. Taking that statement for the full completion of the three-year program of all ships under construction and those which are authorized for the third year of this threeyear program, but you see their third-year program would take several years to be completed.

Mr. FOSS. We are speeding up on the program, and it is necessary to train men in advance. They ought to have at least a full year's training before going on these big ships, and if they had two years it would be all the better.

Mr. PADGETT. It would be impossible to complete these big ships that take 1,200 and 1,300 men much short of 30 months under any circumstances.

Mr. FOSS. Then the gentleman feels we have made ample provision in this bill for the personnel in view of the circum-

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think we need to make more at this time; if an emergency arises, we could authorize.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last Considerable has been said-Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment? I desire to ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes, to ask some questions,
Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I would want five minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. Well, I will say 15 minutes.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

[After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, considerable has been said in the last two or three days with a view of comparison between what transpired under the Taft administration and what occurred under the present administration in the way of shipbuilding as well as to personnel, and it has been repeatedly stated on the floor of the House that the enlisted personnel under the Taft administration was 51,500, and that the enlisted personnel under the present administration is 77,956-

Mr. PADGETT. That was authorized; neither one of them were up to their full limit.

Mr. BRITTEN. That is just the very point I am coming to, Mr. Chairman. Attempt has been made continually to convey the impression that the Navy to-day was 26,000 better supplied with ordinary seamen than under the Taft administration, referring always to the authorization, when the truth of the matter is

Mr. PADGETT. But let me say to the gentleman I have stated time and again to the contrary of that, and I think the House understands that that refers to authorizations-

Mr. BRITTEN. If the gentleman will permit me Mr. PADGETT. And not to the actual enlistments.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am just elucidating, not asking the gentleman a question at this particular moment. I am simply using five minutes of time in making a statement.

Mr. PADGETT. Then, I will not take up the gentleman's time; I thought he was addressing a question to me.

Mr. BRITTEN. No, sir. I want to call attention to the fact that under the Taft administration the enlisted personnel of the Navy was recruited up to 92 per cent of the authorization, and I also want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the enlisted personnel of the Navy to-day, after three years of world unrest, is recruited only 68 per cent of its authorization.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman— Mr. BRITTEN. I can not yield inasmuch as I have only a few minutes.

Notwithstanding the fact, as I said before I was interrupted by my good friend from Texas, that the world has been at unrest for more than three years, and the need for men in the service has been evident everywhere but in the Navy Department, on February 1 we are recruited only 68 per cent of the authorization of 77,956, exclusive of 2,313 men with the Militia or on probation. And I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the Navy is worse off to-day by 3,024 than it was four years ago in the matter of enlisted personnel. In the last four years we have commissioned the Arizona, the Nevada, the New York, the Oklahoma, the Pennsylvania, and the Texas, all dreadnaughts, taking practically a thousand men apiece, or a total of 5,640 ordinary seamen. We have commissioned 24 destroyers, and we have two more, the Shaw and the Allen, over 95 per cent completed, which will require 2,600 men. We have commissioned 20 submarines, requiring 630 men, and 3 little gunboats requiring 237 men. The total requirement of the enlisted personnel of the ships commissioned during the Wilson administration is 9,107. With a positive increase of but 6,083 men in the last four years, it will be seen that the actual additional requirement on account of new ships makes us just 3,024 enlisted men worse off than when the present administration came into power.

Now, the idea of talking about the Taft administration and referring to the authorization to-day in comparison with what it was four years ago is all poppycock. You can not get away from a deficiency to-day of 24,500 men in the ordinary seamen of the service. So the Navy is worse off to-day in the point of shortage than it was four years ago. And I want to say further that this accentuates, if it is possible for anything to accentuate it, the lack of business administration in the Navy Department in the fack of blashess administration. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. He said in answer to an inquiry by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], as I understood him, that there was no expectation of filling the necessary complement for vessels already in commission until, as he expressed it, some necessity arose. Is that true?

Mr. PADGETT. I did not say that.

Mr. TOWNER. I hope I misunderstood the chairman—
Mr. PADGETT. You did if that was your understanding. I said that the three-year program would require for the construction of the big ships, the battle cruisers and the battleships, at least 30 months for construction, even if expedited. The time that the contractors offered was, first, 48 months and 51 months, and the lowest they have up to the present time indicated was 40 months. But assuming that they should speed up to 30 months, I said for those ships provision could be made as they came into commission.

Mr. TOWNER. Let me ask the gentleman this question: As I understand it, the department says they are doing all that they can to fill the deficiencies in the personnel of the Navy under existing law?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. And yet notwithstanding that fact there is existing a large deficiency now. Will the gentleman tell us what efforts are being made, and especially what provisions are made in this bill or any other, to fill the personnel of the Navy, at least to the extent of manning the ships that are now in com-

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. The Navy Department is using every effort and energy. They are advertising, they are estab-lishing recruiting stations throughout the country, and they have been publishing and circulating, so as to get in touch with the public, the provisions of the law of August 29, 1916, re-organizing the personnel of the Navy, the enlisted personnel, whereby we gave very substantial advantages and benefits to the enlisted men. And as that is getting out and they are becoming acquainted with it, the enlistments are proceeding with much more satisfaction than heretofore. For instance, I had the statement here, which I read on a former day, but I now call attention to it merely, that in January, 1914, the net gain in enlistments was 793 for the month. They do not go back of that time. They have no record kept before that time. That was in January, 1914. In January, 1915, the net gain was 375; in January, 1916, the gain was 576; in January, 1917, just past, under the operation of this new legislation that I stated, which information has just been scattered abroad and made known to the public, the net gain was 1,344.

Mr. TOWNER. Well, but does the gentleman believe that within a reasonable time we can fill the complement of the ships

Mr. PADGETT. The chief of the bureau, Admiral Palmer, informed me that he expected, and he based his expectations upon an investigation into the working of the plan, and believed that during the fiscal year for which this legislation is passed he would have the enlistments up to 70,000.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that the country will not be satisfied with that. I believe that at present, and under existing circumstances, the people will demand that the ships that we have in commission be fully manned. They will demand that our Navy be ready for any emergency. They will demand that anything that is necessary to be done to secure a full complement for the ships now in commission should be done. And it occurs to me that it is the duty of this committee, and it is the duty of the administration, to take immediate steps to see that this be done.

The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. The CHAIRMAN.

Towner] has expired.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words for the purpose of referring to what occurred yesterday when several distinguished gentlemen, members of the Committee on Military Affairs, found it necessary to defend them-selves against an attack contained in a newspaper published in the city of Chicago. What I deplore is not the attack contained in the paper. I do not care who the editor of the paper is. I do not know whether he writes his own opinions, or whether he is just an ordinary hireling, taking orders. I do not know whether he believed in what he said or whether he said it because he was ordered to say it. What I regret is that the Members of the House find it necessary to defend themselves against meaningless attacks of this kind. I look upon the news items and the editorial complained of as an attempt to intimidate Members of the House from giving expression to their honest opinion and from acting in accordance with their honest conviction. Only a few days ago we heard abuse heaped from the floor of this House upon one of the most distinguished statesmen that the country has produced, William Jennings Bryan [applause], and all because he dared advise against war. The Constitution has given Congress the power to declare war. Does it mean that Congress is merely to act as a rubber-stamp clerk, obeying the orders of an individual, or does it mean that every Member of Congress is conscience bound as a man and as a Representative of a free people to search his own soul and to utilize all the power of his brain in determining the gravest question that can present itself in the life of a man? And shall Members of Congress permit themselves to be fright-ened, to be intimidated by bullies, by lip patriots, by ignoramuses. who would terrorize those they can not control? I protest, Mr. Chairman, against this attempt to intimidate the free Representatives of a free people from acting as free men. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Provisions, Navy: For provisions and commuted rations for the seamen and marines, which commuted rations may be paid to caterers of messes, in case of death or desertion, upon orders of the commanding officers, commuted rations for officers on sea duty (other than commissioned officers of the line, Medical and Pay Corps, chaplains, chief boatswains, chief gunners, chief carpenters, chief machinists, chief pay clerks, and chief sallmakers) and midshipmen, and commuted rations stopped on account of sick in hospital and credited at the rate of 50 cents per ration to the naval hospital fund; subsistence of officers and men unavoidably detained or absent from vessels to which attached under orders (during which subsistence rations to be stopped on board ship and no credit for commutation therefor to be given); subsistence of men on detached duty; subsistence of members of the Naval Reserve force during period of active service; and for subsistence of female nurses and Navy and Marine Corps general courts-martial prisoners undergoing imprisonment with sentences of dishonorable discharge from the service at the expiration of such confinement: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to commute rations for such general courts-martial prisoners in such amounts as seem to him proper, which may vary in accordance with the location of the naval prison, but which shall in no case exceed 30 cents per diem for each ration so commuted; and for the purchase of United States Army emergency rations as required; in all, $10,144,943.40, to be available until the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, in no spirit of criticism of the Committee on Naval Affairs, or of any of the Members of this House, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that last year we passed a naval bill and this year we will pass a naval bill, and yet apparently no attention has been given to the number of retired officers that this Government is now supporting.

I have no disposition to criticize these officers, because under the law, as provided by Congress and as I understand it, they have to be retired whenever the plucking board desires to retire them, or when they reach the age of 64, and therefore they are not to blame; but I thought it might be interesting to the country to know that there are to-day 900 retired naval officers, men the majority of whom I am satisfied are in perfect physical and mental condition, and who would object to being called "old men" or "broken-down horses," who are receiving from the taxpayers of the country three-quarters of their salary and for which they give nothing in return. In the present bill there is provided for the purpose of paying these gentlemen the sum of $2,940,368.72.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the present war across the waters has demonstrated that gray-haired men and men beyond the age of 64, as leaders, are waging the successful battles, and that the United States might well learn something from that demonstration and retain in the service longer than the age of 64 is reached, these men who are so anxious to remain in the service.

The present bill provides for the promotion and retirement of naval officers, and this will continue until the people begin to understand that in the Army and Navy bills we have passed and to-day will pass paying approximately $7,000,000 for retired

Army and Navy officers.

I say, Mr. Chairman, if some reasonable law should be passed, and one that would not impose a hardship upon these, that would let these patriotic officers, whom we have educated at great expense, continue to serve the Government, and thereby save this Government the larger part of this $7,000,000, we could use it in increased pay for the ordinary seamen who serve on the battleships, and then, perhaps, the shortage of men that the gentleman from Illinois just complained of would not

I simply make these observations-

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEARS Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. What percentage of these retired officers of the Army and Navy are under 64 years-that is, victims of the plucking board?

Mr. SEARS. I have tried to secure the information, but I am unable to tell the gentleman. I understand that some as young as 45 or 50 years of age were plucked because the plucking board said they were temperamentally not fit to continue longer in the service.

Now, Mr. Chairman, at the Naval Academy, which is one of the best academies in the country-and I desire at a later time to discuss that proposition—these distinguished, able, patriotic men could be used for the purpose of teaching the young men that we send there for instruction from our various districts. By so doing, Mr. Chairman, they would not only give to these young men the benefit of their knowledge, but also their varied It seems to me that a man who holds a degree from the Annapolis Naval Academy and has had 20 years or more actual experience in the service, as these young men that we are sending there are expected to have, could better instruct these young men than could civilians who know nothing of the service and are simply selected because they are able to undergo a mental examination.

I think, Mr. Chairman, the time is coming when the people of the United States will demand that they be informed as to how and why their money is spent, and that this $7,000,000a paltry sum to some, it may be-will cease to be appropriated by Congress to support people on the retired list who are anxious to serve the Government actively and who now return no service for value received. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I fully agree with the opinion of the gentleman [Mr. Sears] who has just taken his seat on this matter of retired officers of the Navy. I know of instances, as do other Members of this House, of men who have been retired from the naval service and who have been granted the regular retired pay, but who are just as active to-day as they ever were, except for the few years that have been added to

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are in the service to-day men who are on the retired list who are acting in the capacity of captains and are receiving only retired officers' pay; in other words, they are receiving lieutenant commander's pay. As I understand it, there is nothing in the law that permits the Secretary of the Navy to draft an officer back into the service and give him the same rate of pay that he received before he was retired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.
Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand the gentleman to say there is no authority for the department to call men from the retired list and put them on the active list?

Mr. TAGUE. Oh, no, Mr. Chairman; the Secretary of the Navy or the President, I believe, can call in any retired officer. But, as I understand it, if a retired officer is called into the service he can be paid only the amount of wage that he received as a retired officer, no matter what he was getting

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman is mistaken in that. If he is called to active duty, he gets his full pay and allowances. is another provision to the effect that if a retired officer requests shore duty he can, at his request, be assigned to some shore duty and get the pay and allowances of a lieutenant commander. But if he is called to active duty he gets his full pay and allowances of his grade; and in time of war every retired officer is subject to be called to active duty.

Mr. BUTLER. In case of an emergency?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. I want to state another thing in that Last year Congress increased the retiring age from 62 to 64 years; and the retiring age is greater in the Army and in the Navy of the United States-and I am speaking especially of the Navy-than it is in the navy of England or France.

Now, with reference to the pay. Up until the bill of August 29. 1916, they received three-fourths of the active pay which they were receiving at the time of retirement. Now that has been changed, and for a service of 30 years they get 21 per cent for each year, which would be three-quarters pay, but for every year of service less than that the amount is reduced 21 per cent, so that a man has to serve 30 years in order to get threequarters pay. That was the law of August 29, 1916, and it is no longer based upon the full three-fourths retired pay.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, may I ask an extension of my time for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts, having now one minute remaining, asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SEARS. On page 49 there is appropriated, in addition to the amount I gave, $198,307.50 for the increased pay of re-tired officers regularly assigned to active duty. I do not know whether that is in addition to their retired pay, or extra pay, or what it is, but it adds $198,000 to the amount.

Mr. PADGETT. Let me correct the statement of the gentle-man. The $198,000 is for the entire pay of all the retired officers of the Marine Corps

Mr. TAGUE. While the chairman of the committee is of course better informed on this subject than most of us, still my contention is this: If a retired officer is active enough to perform service for the Government, and does so at his own request, then he is entitled to the remuneration that he received while in active service. Now, for instance, we have in the navy yard at Boston a commandant who, until last October, was rated as a captain. He went before the plucking board for advancement to rear admiral-

Mr. PADGETT. Not the plucking board. Whatever you want to call it. Mr. PADGETT. It is the examining board.

Mr. TAGUE. The examining board. He was examined and found to be physically and mentally sound, but for some slight and trivial matter he was not allowed his promotion, but was retired with a lieutenant commander's pay. Now, that man is to-day doing the same service for the Government that he has done in that yard for three years. He is commandant of the yard, and he is receiving in return the pay of a lieutenant commander. I do not know just how much, but much less than he received as a captain. He is performing good service for the Government. He is physically and mentally able to perform that service. He has a record in the Navy as good as that of any man who ever served in it, and was honored by receiving a medal for bravery from Congress. Yet for a trifling matter this man is compelled to be retired against his own wish and against the wish of those who know him. He is working to-day for the Government. He is performing the full duty of a commandant and captain and is receiving a lieutenant commander's There is no provision in the law, and there is no provision in this bill, that permits the Secretary of the Navy or the President of the United States to give this man one single cent more than the pay of a lieutenant commander. I think this is unfair. I do not believe the law was ever intended to do this. I believe it was intended that when a man is performing Government service with a certain rank he shall receive the pay of that rank. Why this should be as it is I do not know. I have tried to find some way out of it, but I know of no way except to amend the law, and if I offer an amendment to do that a point of order will lie against it under the rule. So, Mr. Chairman, I think it is one of the many unfair things imposed upon officers in the Navy, many times creating hardships and leaving them no opportunity of redress.

They have spent the best years of their lives in the service of their country, and when they have grown old, too late to begin life over again, although in perfect health, the cruel redtape methods of this department must be inflicted upon them.

It has been decided by the board that the brave officer must go, no matter how it affects him, but it is decreed, and go, go he must to the scrap heap of humanity. [Applause.]

It is an easy matter to smirch the name and reputation of any man, but I am willing to judge a man upon his performance of duty; and when a man with such a brilliant record for faithful performance of duty and for bravery is treated in this manner it is time to modify the law. Mr. Chairman, it is in keeping with what I said on the floor of this House yesterday. Some of the officers in the Navy whom this Government has educated, supported, protected, and pensioned, have not only abused the privileges that have been given them, but they have driven from the service of this Government men with reputation and character superior to theirs.

I have in mind many cases of young men discharged from the Navy whose reputations have been ruined by charges of intoxication, and these men who had been driven out were obliged only a night or two before to take the same officer who had preferred the charges and put the officer into bed.

I am speaking as a matter of justice to men who have served their country faithfully. The Lord knows that we all have our weaknesses. There is no man perfect, and men should be judged on the good things that they do and not always by their

Mr. BRITTEN, Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes. Mr. BRITTEN. The commandant of the navy yard is a line officer, and because of his age has served through probably 12 or 15 different sittings of the plucking board, which would indicate that his character and ability must have been very good.

Mr. TAGUE. Yes; and I want to say that I am not here to eulogize anybody, but I have met a great many men in the naval service. I have met many splendid officers, and no one will go further to say a good word for them than I will; but I never met in the service of the Navy a man whose heart was as big as is that of this man, or one who would go further to help his fellow man. There has never been a man, to my mind at least, since I have had the honor to represent the navy-yard district, to whom you could go and who would so willingly help some unfortunate fellow. I know of no man during my time who has served in the Navy of the United States and who has done more to build up the navy yard.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, now that the House is about to complete the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, I take this opportunity to commend and indorse the great work of the popular, faithful, and efficient chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett] [applause], and the members of that committee who have acted cooperated with him in the preparation of this important and far-reaching measure providing for an adequate navy for the defense of the honor, the rights, and the interests of the American people. This bill and the amendments which have been adopted since the President delivered his address to both Houses of Congress last Saturday is the highest and best evidence of the fact that the Members of Congress have laid aside partisan bias, captious objections, and differences of opinion, and are a unit for the proper defense of our common country are in line and fully determined to aid the President of the United States in his patriotic stand to maintain, uphold, and safeguard the rights of American citizens on the high seas. While I represent a district intensely Republican—not having elected a Democrat to Congress in 60 years [applause]—I am sure I voice the sentiments of Republicans and Democrats in that district in saying they will loyally support the President and the American Congress in maintaining the honor of the Nation, and in protecting the lives and property of American citizens on the high seas, in Mexico, or in any country on the face of the earth.

East Tennessee now and in the future will do her full patriotic duty as she has ever done in the glorious past. She is loyal and ready to answer her country's call. [Applause.]

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. AUSTIN. I always yield to my handsome friend from Illinois.

Mr. BRITTEN. Referring to the last sentence of the gentle-man, wherein he says that Tennessee will always come to the call

Mr. PADGETT. I want to say that there is no question about that.

Mr. BRITTEN. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact and ask the gentleman whether Tennessee has not contributed one of the most able young officers in the American Navy to-day, in the person of Lieut. Charles M. Austin, son of the distinguished gentleman now on the floor?

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, the gentleman embarrasses me. [Laughter.] The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin] move me to say that, along with him and my other colleagues, I hope to see the President sustained in all proper efforts to maintain the honor and dignity of this country. We are considering now one of the great war bills, and the most of us will vote for it even to the limit of those things asked for to sustain the President. While doing that and considering other war bills, it seems to me that we might say to ourselves—whether it is carried over the telegraphic lines to the people of the country or not—that there are many disturbing and conflicting rumors concerning war conditions which are asserted to-day and denied to-morrow. Yesterday we were informed that an American had been killed on the wrecked steamer Turino. His name was George Washington, and, of course, it would occasion a patriotic thrill the whole length and breadth of the country if it was true that George Washington had gone down at the hands of an enemy in foreign waters. But the newspapers had their say yesterday, and they had it again this morning, that this sureenough American was killed, and therefore we ought to go to war with Germany.

Mr BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Did this man have any number? Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not know. He was an individual of color, but his taking off was supposed to be reason to cause war. Efforts have been made, desperate efforts have been made, since the President was here on Saturday last, to prove that we must go to war. The coasts of the world seem to have been raked to find some overt act to force the President to come in here and ask us to declare war. We have had very little but rumors, but we have had headlines galore, all with a view of stampeding the House and stampeding the country into an act of war. [Applause.] I rose to make this very brief statement because I do not want the people of this country to be deceived. I am satisfied that most of the people of the country want peace; peace with honor, of course. [Applause.] But they do not want to go into a dishonorable war, and they ought not to be forced into a war by the munition makers or the munition users of this or any other land. [Applause.]

Most of the dispatch headlines declaring that American ships have gone down, that American lives have been lost, that international laws have been violated have come from London, and London has been crazy with delight since it heard the glad tidings on Saturday last that the President had severed diplomatic relations with Germany. Coming from the Liberty Bell and Independence Hall district of the United States, I can not forget that we had trouble with London in 1776, and that we had trouble with London in 1812. I am not quite ready to accept all of these rumors that come out of London now without a grain of salt. London is a little more in need of American help just now than we are in need of the advice of London. I am not quite ready, therefore, to believe every damnable, pernicious, and lying report that comes out of London, or to accept it as an inducement to declare my country in a state of war.

plause.]

On the night of the day that the President appeared here and informed the Congress of the fact that he had severed diplomatic relations with Germany, we had newspaper "extras announcing in startling headlines that the Housatonic had gone down in violation of international law; there were great scare heads, and boys on the streets shouting it aloud. It was declared that American rights had been violated by a country with which we were on friendly terms up to that time. Yet the next day's newspapers announced in smaller type that the Housatonic was loaded with contraband, and even our State Department declared that there was no occasion for any warlike declaration in consequence of her sinking.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

said; but-

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Is it the contention of the gentleman that because a ship is loaded with contraband, Germany has the right to destroy the lives of passengers and crew?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I made the statement that after all these headlines the State Department declared that there was no breach of international law. The people were being inflamed-

Mr. GORDON. But they did not say it was because the ship was loaded with contraband.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I stated what the gentleman's own Secretary of State announced to the public-he was not as anxious as some newspaper editors are to rush into war. Mr. GORDON. I agree with much of what the gentleman has Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am not arguing the point of contraband at all. The gentleman is merely taking my time. I am trying to make a plain statement to the House as to the truth and the facts. The gentleman may be stampeded because certain things appear in the newspapers, but—

Mr. GORDON. Oh, don't you worry about my being stampeded. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am making the statement that we see alarming headlines to-day indicating that we are on the verge of war because some "overt act" has been committed, and the next day the whole thing is denied.

Mr. GORDON. I agree with the gentleman about that. Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman tell me what he thinks the duty of this Government ought to be if the German Government has taken charge of and forcibly restrained by order our ambassador in that country?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is carried away with the headlines

Mr. RAGSDALE. No; he is not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will listen, I will demonstrate what fools some men are-not like the gentleman from South Carolina, of course-who believe everything they read. I was coming to that very point. For three days we have heard that our American ambassador, who was on excel-lent terms with everyone in high life in Germany, has "been in captivity" and held for exchange. The gentleman believes that statement.

Mr. RAGSDALE. No; the gentleman does not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is absurd upon its face. Though we have had it for three days, this morning's newspapers announce that Berlin is in conference with the American ambassador, that conferences have been going on in Berlin, and that the ambassador will be safeguarded out of Germany just as we are going to safeguard the German ambassador out of the United States. Oh, how easy it is for you to rush into war upon the say so of somebody who is interested in having war.

Mr. DYER. His passports have been issued to him.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The ambassador is going to Somebody wanted to inflame the American peoget out safely. ple by declaring that the American ambassador had been held in captivity. Absurd! We have given safe conduct to the German ambassador and are sending him home, and the Germans have been decent with the American ambassador. But at least 2 college professors and about 150 editors, more or less, yesterday declared—not that they were willing to enlist, for the barracks down here are waiting for men like them to come forward and enlist—but they declared in effect that they were willing to involve their country in war because "the American ambassador was held in bondage in Berlin." This morning the newspapers show that those editors and those college professors did not know what they were talking about, and that is what I am trying to say to the gentleman from South Carolina. The plain people should not be fooled. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. One minute.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In that one minute let me say, and I hope not to be interrupted again, that the Housatonic alarm has gone glimmering. The State Department seems to concede that the Germans were within their rights and that the Housatonic presents no casus belli. The next day we had the California sensation. Because this ship bore a good old American name everybody was made to suspect that it was an American ship, and that the Germans had perpetrated such an outrage as would force us to go to war. After the sensation had thrilled the country we were quietly informed that the California was a British ship, sailing under the British flag, and that she had been given the warning required by international law. But a great deal is made of the fact that one American was aboard that ship. He may have been planted there to protect the cargo and to involve this country in an international warfare; I do not know, but the next day after the newspapers had worked the story of the American passenger to the limit, it developed that he was taken off the ship to a place of safety. It matters not that he was a colored man.

Mr. BRITTEN. And the ship was armed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, again, Mr. Chairman, the report went broadcast over the United States on the day after the President addressed Congress, that this Government had seized all the interned German ships. These reports were tempered here and there with the suggestion that the German sailors were endeavoring to destroy the property of their own country, but nevertheless it was broadly announced that our naval officers had seized this German property. I will not stop to discuss the moral aspect of this seizure except to say that there had been no declaration of war and that it was not clear why we should deliberately take this German property and appropriate it to the United States. Within a day or two the answer came from both the State Department and the White House that these German ships had not been seized, and that while this Government was taking certain precautions with respect to possible impediments to navigation, every courtesy was being shown the officers and men in charge of these German vessels. It was evident that some tall lying was done in this instance for the purpose of irritating Germany under very aggravating circumstances. Somebody evidently wanted Germany to commit an "overt act" that would bring on a war. We ought to be on our guard against this dangerous "rumor' business, whether it originates in London or the United States.

sylvania has expired.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement that I have of how the newspapers of this country have been handled by the munition

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record by inserting a certain statement. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I ask whether it is the gentleman's purpose to insert a long list of extracts from newspapers?

Mr. CALLAWAY. No; it will be a little, short statement, not over 21 inches in length in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, under unanimous consent, I insert in the RECORD at this point a statement showing the newspaper combination, which explains their activity in this war matter, just discussed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]:

"In March, 1915, the J. P. Morgan interests, the steel, ship-building, and powder interests, and their subsidiary organiza-tions, got together 12 men high up in the newspaper world and employed them to select the most influential newspapers in the employed them to select the most inducatial newspapers in the United States and sufficient number of them to control generally the policy of the daily press of the United States.

"These 12 men worked the problem out by selecting 179 newspapers, and then began, by an elimination process, to retain only those necessary for the purpose of controlling the general policy of the daily press throughout the country. They found it was only necessary to purchase the control of 25 of the greatest papers. The 25 papers were agreed upon; emissaries were est papers. The 25 papers were agreed upon; emissaries were sent to purchase the policy, national and international, of these papers; an agreement was reached; the policy of the papers was bought, to be paid for by the month; an editor was furnished for each paper to properly supervise and edit information regarding the questions of preparedness, militarism, financial policies, and other things of national and international nature considered vital to the interests of the purchasers.

"This contract is in existence at the present time, and it accounts for the news columns of the daily press of the country being filled with all sorts of preparedness arguments and misrepresentations as to the present condition of the United States Army and Navy, and the possibility and probability of the United States being attacked by foreign foes

This policy also included the suppression of everything in opposition to the wishes of the interests served. The effectiveness of this scheme has been conclusively demonstrated by the character of stuff carried in the daily press throughout the country since March, 1915. They have resorted to anything necessary to commercialize public sentiment and sandbag the National Congress into making extravagant and wasteful appropriations for the Army and Navy under the false pretense that it was necessary. Their stock argument is that it is 'patriot-They are playing on every prejudice and passion of the American people."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am in favor of this paragraph in the Navy appropriation bill, because I think the country ought to be fully prepared for any possible invasion; but I think the Congress ought to be careful about encouraging "rumors of war" when war has not actually been declared. Perhaps it would be safe to leave this matter to the President of the United States and to those who have direct knowledge upon the sub-States and to those who have direct knowledge upon the subject. I call attention, however, not only to these false reports of the Housatonic and about the California, but the steamship Philadelphia was reported sunk since the President was here, and yet the next day, after these reports had gone over the country like wildfire and everybody got excited about the Philadelphia which naturally attracted interest in that the Philadelphia, which naturally attracted interest in that great city and in the State of Pennsylvania, we found the Philadelphia had safely arrived in port, so that report was also in error. Now, whether by design or not I do not know, but it seems that most of these false reports come from London. There seems to be an intense desire there to tell us about German outrages and about American blood shad on the same than man outrages and about American blood shed on foreign ships or to find that some American ship has been shot up. This colored man, George Washington—
Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will yield to the gentleman, Mr. BARKLEY. But was not there a statement in the morning paper that the colored man on that ship was a British

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am coming to that. The dispatches have made it appear that because of the loss of dispatches have made it appear that because of the loss of George Washington, an alleged American citizen, we are now in position to declare war against Germany. This morning's papers have headlines something like this: "Death of American on wrecked Turino reported to London. An American negro fireman, George Washington was killed, according to a report received to-day when the British steamship Turino was sunk by Now, that is enough to inflame every American—Mr. FOSS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will yield.

Mr. FOSS. I am very much interested in what the gentleman says, but how will the gentleman provide a remedy to stop these international thrills which we are receiving, which the publishers of these newspapers place in their headlines? Would he provide for a censorship of the press?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not at this time. I simply urge that the true facts and only the true facts be reported at this time when we are at the verge of an outbreak with a foreign country. [Applause.] I think it would be better for some of the editors to "shut up" when they do not know what they are talking about. [Applause.] I think it would be better for some of these professional patriots who have determined our international relations in advance, and who insist upon adjusting our diplomatic affairs in this crisis, to not only "shut up," but go tie a rope around their necks, attach an anchor to it, and jump into the sea. We could better afford to dispense with their meddlesome services than to plunge the people of this country into a foreign war. I think it would be far better for this country. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I regret to say it, but we are gradually turning over the business of Congress, turning over all our constitutional rights, turning over our powers delegated by the people, to a lot of editors, theorists, and college professors who are not capable of conducting our affairs and to whom we should not abdicate, Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts after I have disposed of George Washington. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. All I can say then is that the papers report this afternoon that George Washington, the so-called American, is a British subject; that is all, [Applause,] Mr. Chairman, under leave to extend I wish to say that so many rumors and reports of an exaggerated character have appeared during the last few days that even the President, who certainly is as much concerned as any other citizen over the situation that confronts us, should take notice. We are dealing with a serious problem that invites the greatest deliberation. We ought not to be made the pawns of designing men in our own country or of any foreign power that would drag us into a war for selfish purposes. When our President has made up his mind that American honor is at stake and that we must enter upon a war to uphold it, I have no doubt he will find cordial support in the Congress of the United States, but the President has not yet indicated to Congress that the point has been reached where a declaration of war has become necessary. Until the President does come to this body with such information and facts as may warrant further action by Congress, it may not be well to aggravate the situation by giving too much credence to the untruthful rumors that have been bandied about with the evident purpose of finding some reason for provoking a declaration of war. At another time I shall extend in the Record, under permission granted to me, certain observations of Mr. Lincoln when he was a Member of the House, with respect to our Mexican com-plications in 1848. At present I shall content myself by quoting a single sentence from the speech made by Mr. Lincoln January 12 of that year, when he said:

When the war began it was my opinion that all those who, because of knowing too little, or because of knowing too much, could not conscientiously approve the conduct of the President (in the beginning of it) should, nevertheless, as good citizens and patriots remain silent on that point, at least till the war should be ended.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I quite agree with the gentleman that there is too much noise and that the editors of this country may make too much noise. Fortunately the sound of their voices does not penetrate this Hall, while some of the noises which get in here might be suddenly ceased with a great deal of pleasure to some of us who have to stay here.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAGSDALE. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Illinois said he, the gentleman from Illinois, had sense enough to keep still.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I know what he said, but he did not disclose the fact that he had politeness enough, while keeping still, to abide by the rules of the House in undertaking to chide me. That is for the gentleman's information, the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MANN. I am abiding by the rules of the House. Mr. RAGSDALE. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, no. I have been lecturing the great editors and the political college professors. I did not have the gentleman in mind at all. [Applause.]

Mr. RAGSDALE. The gentleman's mind is rather limited in its memor

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Surely my mind is not limited when I refer to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The gentleman says so little on the floor of this House that he ought to be given an opportunity in everybody's time to be recognized. May I yield further to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore]?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I merely wish to say that when speak to the gentleman from South Carolina my mind is un-

Mr. RAGSDALE. I am quite sure that is true. There are a great many things the gentleman possesses that are unlimited, His nerve is one of them. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Chairman, undertakes here to tell us about getting excited over the newspapers, and he undertakes to read from the newspapers, then proving that the conditions in Germany are not what they are reported to be in other newspapers. Now, why should we accept the statement from the newspapers selected by the gentleman any more than he would accept the statements made by other newspapers which he has not selected? I say to the gentleman that I quite agree with him that the people of our country ought not to be excited or hurried into war, but I say to the gentleman, sympathetic as I am with the people who want to preserve peace here, that if Germany has placed a restraining hand upon our ambassador, who went there in good faith to represent this Government, as a Representative of my people I wish to exhaust every power within our command to bring him back here without regard to

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAGSDALE. Certainly.

Mr. DYER. I will state to the gentleman that the Washington Times of to-day states that the ambassador has been given his passports and that he has never been detained at all.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I will say to my friend that he ought to take advice from the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and not be misled by the newspaper headlines.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. RAGSDALE. To both at one time. Let us have a "talk-Go to it.

Mr. DYER. He has been furnished a special train to Switzerland by the German Government.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know that the Washington Post, a very reliable newspaper, states that there was a conference yesterday on this subject in Berlin? Now, possibly the gentleman is the spokesman of the Department of State, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] is the spokesman of the White House. I would like him to say whether or not he knows that this conference took place in Berlin yesterday, in which the American ambassador bore an

Mr. RAGSDALE. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that my information does not come solely from the newspapers. And I did not say that I was the spokesman of anybody or any thing except the people of the sixth district of South Carolina.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now we are getting the news. Mr. RAGSDALE. And I say that what I stated is true, and it can not be disproven.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improvement of construction plants: For repairs and improvements of machinery and implements at construction plants at navy yards at Portsmouth, N. H., $10,000; Boston, Mass., $25,000; New York, N. Y., $35,000; Philadelphia, Pa., $25,000; Norfolk, Va., $35,000; Charleston, S. C., $10,000; Mare Island, Cal., $35,000; Puget Sound, Wash., $25,000; in all, $200,000.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman a question. Under the improvement of construction plants just read, $200,000, on page 41, there is an appropriation for Boston, Mass., of $25,000, and approximately the same appropriation is made for Boston, on page 44, under machinery plants. What is the condition?

Mr. PADGETT. They are in different bureaus or departments. One is in the Bureau of Construction and Repair, and deals with the hulls, and the other is in the Steam Engineering Department, that deals with the machinery and implements, and so forth, inside of the shops.

Mr. SEARS. The appropriations are so nearly similar that-

Mr. PADGETT. One relates to hulls. They are in different bureaus

Mr. FOSS. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question in regard to Coast Guard cutters. Where are they being built now?

Mr. PADGETT. They are not being built at all. They could not get a bid within the limit of cost.

Mr. FOSS. Are they going to be built in navy yards or by private contract?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know. The award is to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. I believe you called these navy-yard plants construction plants before.

Mr. PADGETT. I will say to the gentleman that the only difference is that we have grouped it all into one paragraph. Heretofore we referred to it as repairs and improvements of machinery and implements at navy yards.

Mr. MANN. You did not use the word "construction" here-

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; it is the same language, and then it was repeated in reference to every yard.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is in error, but I do not know that it makes any great difference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The limit of cost of one steam Coast Guard cutter for service as anchorage patrol boat in New York Harbor, authorized by the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved August 29, 1916, to be, and hereby is, increased from $125,000 to

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a point of order on the paragraph relating to Coast Guard cutters.

Mr. PADGETT. That increases the limit of cost.

Mr. MANN. It is clearly subject to a point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. That is the limit of cost. We provided for that last year.

Mr. MANN. I understand the situation. The Navy Department has no business to interfere with these matters. Of course, you put it in the naval bill last year, and you had no business to do that. You brought in a rule that covered it. Thinitee on Naval Affairs does not have jurisdiction of it. The Com-

Mr. PADGETT. If the gentleman makes a point of order, I will say that it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Does the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois begin at line 11?

Mr. MANN. It commences with line 11. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MANN. I also make a point of order on the rest of the page.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understood the gentleman. Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, while we are considering this section, in reference to the Bureau of Construction and Repair, I think it not inappropriate to call the attention of the committee to the naval disasters which have been suffered by this country in the past year. As near as I can ascertain, we have lost more ships, in number, by accident—that is, by accident pure and simple—in the last year than Great Britain, although she has been engaged in a war, in the course of the operations of which it was necessary to navigate long and unlighted coasts, among the great dangers resulting therefrom.

Probably all the Members of the House remember the recent accident to the U-3, one of our submarines, which went ashore on the Pacific coast, at the entrance of Humboldt Bay, Cal. That accident seems to have been caused either by poor seamanship or negligence. A still worse accident soon followed, when the cruiser Miwaukee, in attempting to pull out the submarine, was trapped in some way by the tidal currents and drawn on one of the treacherous shoals of that coast, so that a fine vessel, a fine cruiser of nearly 10,000 tons, costing almost $4,000,000in fact, one of the most useful cruisers that our Navy possessesis now, as I understand it, a total wreck.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Does not the gentleman think the department was at fault rather than the officers in ordering a ship like the Milwaukee to do that kind of work, when an ordinary salvage company would have undertaken that work for about $18,000?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not think there is so much fault to be imputed to the navigating officer of the Milwaukee as there is to the department or the higher official that ordered a vessel of this class to attempt that kind of work. A vessel of the cruiser class was entirely unfitted for such work. The vessel drew over 22 feet of water. It was on a treacherous coast, full of shoals, where strong currents endangered it. A powerful tug that did not require much more than half the depth of water would have done better work. The expense, as the gentleman from Delaware says, would not have been great, and we would have preserved a much-needed vessel.

But this is not the only accident our Navy has suffered recently. The cruiser Memphis was sunk in the harbor of Santo Domingo, with a loss of 40 lives. That accident was probably without any fault on the part of the officers controlling the vessel or navigating it; but we lost a powerful armored cruiser of 14,500 tons-more powerful probably than any cruiser of its class in any navy, which cost over $6,000,000.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; always to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PADGETT. I am told that that was caused by an upheaval, perhaps a submarine volcano, that just rose right up under it and tore the ship in twain, and landed lava and other stuff right in the ship. Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think there was no fault to be attached to the management of the vessel at that time. But about a month prior to that we lost a fuel ship, the Hector, off the coast of Charleston, S. C. I am informed that the Hector at that time was in charge of a civilian crew, but I assume, although I am not informed as to that matter, that it was commanded by a naval officer.

In May, 1916, the mine planter San Francisco struck a shoal near Chatham Light, and was laid up for repairs for several months, and last summer the destroyer Terry struck a reef off Puerta Plata, Santo Domingo, and was beached. Her commander was tried for negligence, but was acquitted.

Last fall the fuel ship Jupiter got into collision with an Italian bark, and I believe the commander was court-martialed and acquitted. Last year, in March, the destroyer Monaghan was ranned by the destroyer Roe, at Key West. The com-mander of the Roe was tried and reduced three numbers in his grade.

The American Navy has had a proud record in the past. The officers have been noted for their gallantry and seamanship, and it is peculiarly unfortunate, it seems to me, that at this particular time we shou'd have to chronicle the loss of so many vessels, with so many a sasters. Some of them, unfortunately can not be attributed to anything else but negligence or bad seamanship. We would prefer to turn from such a record to that which was made in past years; to recall those commanders of American ships who distinguished themselves as the captain of the Constitution did, when he escaped by clever seamanship from a British ship; to return to the time when the gallantry was so distinguished, as it was when a commander of a vessel sinking under the enemy's fire preferred to go down with his ship to being saved with the rest of his crew. It is to be hoped that the department will take notice of the condition of affairs and that a discipline more strict, and a greater efficiency will

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of professors and others, Naval Academy: Pay of professors and instructors, including one professor as librarian, $175,000.

No part of any sum in this act appropriated shall be expended in the pay or allowances of any commissioned officer of the Navy detailed for duty as an instructor at the United States Naval Academy to perform duties which were performed by civilian instructors on January 1, 1913—

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman-

The Clerk continued to read as follows:

In all, pay of professors and others, Naval Academy, $255,440.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order or reserve it?

Mr. MANN. I reserve it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, are we treating this bill by sections or by paragraphs?

The CHAIRMAN. By paragraphs.

Mr. SEARS. I asked for the recognition of the Chair before. The CHAIRMAN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not understand that the gentleman wanted recognition until the end of the paragraph.

Mr. SEARS. Yes; I wanted to speak under the item of pay of professors. That is a paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I notice this carries quite a number of increases of salaries.

Mr. SEARS. Then I thought I would wait until we got to that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair noticed the gentleman rise. Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SEARS. I tried to get recognition for the purpose of discussing the first paragraph.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Florida is slightly in error. He rose. I saw him rise, and then I saw him sit down.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to make this statement: The gentleman from Florida did rise and address the Chair.

Mr. SEARS. I said "Mr. Chairman." I do not know how else I could have done.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman took his seat, and the Chair thought he did not want recognition at that time. I am sorry the Chair did not recognize the gentleman when he

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether there is any intention to have a general provision in this bill in reference to increased salaries or not. I do not think it is quite fair to give specific increases and then give the same party the benefit of a general increase where that was not the thought of the committee originally

Mr. PADGETT. There is no thought of offering any other amendment than what is in the bill with reference to any increases of any kind. We have reported the specific ones here. In the reorganization of the Navy under the provisions of the act of August 29 it involved-

Mr. MANN. There was a sort of understanding in the House when we passed the legislative bill that any increase finally agreed upon in that law would probably be carried in other bills, at least as to the same classes of employees.

Mr. PADGETT. Under the Naval Academy appropriation

Mr. MANN. Of course almost everything in this bill is in the regular Naval Establishment.

Mr. PADGETT. It is in here, and we have taken care of those specifically.

Mr. TALBOTT. The Secretary recommended the increases. Mr. MANN. So far as the gentleman knows, there is no intention of making a percentage increase in this bill?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir.

Mr. MANN. I suppose this increase in the number of employees over there is necessary by reason of the increase in the number of midshipmen.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] insist on his point of order?

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I trust the fev Mr. Chairman, I trust the few remarks I shall make will not be misunderstood. It is only in the hope that at some future time some reform may be obtained. care to get in this House the title of watchdog of the Treasury; on the contrary, I desire to assure you I will go to the fullest extent in making any appropriation that is necessary. I am for preparedness when I think preparedness is necessary. As my State extends out into the ocean and the gulf, our citizens realize perhaps more than the citizens of any other State the importance of naval preparedness. But a few moments ago I called attention to the fact that there were 900 retired military officers in this country, and that I did not believe those gentlemen would care to be referred to as old, worn-out, broken-down horses

When I look over this Chamber and see the activity of my young colleague, Uncle Joe Cannon, of Illinois, and my good friend Gen. Sherwood, of Ohio, it seems to me that these retired naval officers, who have been trained in an open-air life, should at least be active enough at 45 to 64 to keep them at the Naval Academy at Annapolis as instructors. By the report Naval Academy at Annapolis as instructors. By the report which I hold in my hand it appears that last year 38 additional civilians were employed as instructors at this academy. In the present bill in all, under "Pay of professors and others, Naval Academy," there is carried an appropriation of $430,440 compared to $413,860 last year, or approximately a $17,000 increase. There are at the Naval Academy to-day about 1,200 tradests. students. The full quota is 1,700 students. At that rate the instructors, teachers, cooks, butchers, and bakers are paid approximately $253 per pupil, if the entire 1,700 were at Annapolis. There are only 1,200 there. I do not know, but I have been told that the cost of each student at Annapolis per annum is something like $4,500. I want to say to you, Chairman, that in selecting young men to go to Annapolis it has been my pleasure and my pride to select boys who were not able to pay their way through any college, but who as American boys are ambitious to get an education. I believe when you spend upon a boy the sum of $4,500 per annum for his educa-tion instead of assisting him in making him a better citizen you come nearer to making him nothing but a parlor-carpet young man who believes only in wearing gold epaulets and having gold all around him; and I do not believe these young men should be brought up in that manner; nor do I believe the young men desire to be brought up in that manner. For four years it was my pleasure to go to a military establishment, and there we did not have to employ watchmen. In this bill 22 watchmen are provided for at salaries. I can not see why these young Americans could not be detailed, as I was detailed, to serve their turn and save this expense, small though It may be, to the Government. What I say may not save anything to the country, but I believe the people are finally going to wake up to the fact that we are spending too much at these colleges, not so much to educate the young men to defend the country, but to educate them so they may go out and be society entertainers. I believe, Mr. Chairman, we could well afford to pass some law whereby these retired Army officers could be sent to Annapolis to instruct these young men, because they should be better able to teach them than any

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word merely for the purpose of making a single observation. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS] said he understood the cost at Annapolis was $4,500 a year for each student. have had the impression from what the gentlemen have said that it cost the Government of the United States $50,000, at least, for every man who was graduated from Annapolis.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman permit? Mr. MANN. I will yield for any information.

Mr. PADGETT. We had some reports on that two or three years ago, and one estimate was that it cost about $15,000 to graduate a young man. Another ran it up to about $18,000 or $19,000. It varied.

Mr. MANN. That depends on what you compute.

Mr. PADGETT. That included interest on the investment of about $14,000,000 that is invested in the buildings.

Mr. MANN. I do not think that computation even charges the salaries of the officers who are over there. They go on the theory that they are already in the Naval Establishment.

Mr. PADGETT. That was included as an item also.
Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to ask a question. I would like to inquire of the chairman if the estimates he has given the committee relative to the expense of educating a student at Annapolis are based upon the number who are now in attendance, 1,200?

Mr. PADGETT. No; that was based upon the former number of 800.

Mr. DOWELL. Can the chairman give to the committee a statement of what additional expense there would be if the number were increased to the capacity of 1,700?

Mr. PADGETT. Perhaps $150,000 more.
Mr. DOWELL. In the aggregate?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes. It would require perhaps a little more than that, say $200,000.

Mr. DOWELL. Of course, there is a greater expense for 1,700 than there is for 800.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; the great bulk of the expense in the larger estimate was the interest on the $14,000,000 investment, the maintenance, upkeep, repairs, heat, all those charges that are fixed charges. They do not increase with the increased number.

Mr. DOWELL. As I understand the chairman, we could educate 1,700 for practically the same amount as 800?

Mr. PADGETT. Not practically; but I think about $200,000

Mr. MANN. We will have to rebuild the academy. We have spent $14,000,000 on the Naval Academy since I have been a Member of the House, and if you make a further increase, you will have to expend that much more.

Mr. PADGETT. The present authorization runs the number up to about 1,800—I am speaking of the operating expenses and the enlargement of the Naval Academy—we have a provision in here for enlarging it to accommodate the increased number

Mr. DOWELL. As I understand, in order to have the 1,700 there must be provision for enlarging the academy.

Mr. MANN. There has to be an enlargement of the academy, anyhow. We built the academy before the census of 1900 was taken. We increased the representation; each Member and Senator only had 1 cadet, and the President only had 10. Now, we have given the Secretary of the Navy a bunch of them, increased the number to the President, increased the representation in both House and Senate, and given to each Member twice as many as he had before.

Mr. PADGETT. Three times as many as it was when I came

Mr. MANN. And yet they said when they built the academy that they were making the limit as close as they could. It was not built with the idea of giving each Member of Congress two

Mr. DOWELL. At any rate, from the answers of the chairman, I understand that the fewer the number of cadets at Annapolis the greater the percentage of expense.

Mr. PADGETT. Per capita, yes; because you divide the overhead charges by a smaller number.

Mr. MANN. There are no overhead charges.

Mr. PADGETT. There is the interest on the investment.

Mr. MANN. You will have to build accommodations for every new cadet

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In the bill we are now appropriating $824,729.20 for the Naval Academy at Annapolis. That alone amounts to $6,873 for each of the 1,200 cadets there.

Mr. PADGETT. Does the gentleman take into consideration that we propose an enlargement of the academy?

Mr. NORTON. How much is to be used for that? I do not believe any amount is provided for that here.

Mr. PADGETT. I beg the gentleman's pardon; what I had reference to is under public works.

Mr. NORTON. I quite agree with the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Sears] that it appears that the system they are practicing at the Naval Academy is the same system carried out by the Army and Navy officers in their work in the field. They do not want a soldier to do any manual labor of any kind if it can be avoided; it is repulsive to most officers to do anything but drill and dress up. That is the policy that is being carried out as I have frequently observed it. It seems to me that in the Naval Academy it is an outrage that it should cost the Government about $10,000 a year to educate a midshipman. Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Yes. Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman has made an error of one cipher in his division. The gentleman said it was $6,000 for each cadet, whereas it is $600.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman is right-that does make a decided difference. My calculation made on the total appropriation stated in the bill was not correct.

Mr. SEARS. I understood the chairman to say that it required $16,000 or $18,000 to educate a cadet at Annapolis.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; including the interest on the $14,000,000 investment; the salaries of the officers, and counting in the pay of officers detailed for this duty, it amounts to that in the aggre gate. But when you take the operating expenses, you have all that in the bill before you. For 1,200 cadets it would be so much, and if you had 1,700 cadets it would be less. Of course, if you had 1,700 cadets you would have to increase the number of professors, instructors, mess boys, and cooks.

Mr. NORTON. This appropriation does not, of course, cover all the expenses of the academy. I understood the gentleman [Mr. Padgett] to say that the expenses of educating a midship-man for four years was about $50,000.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, no; there have been two estimates.
One was about $15,000 and the other about $18,000 or $19,000, as I recollect.

Mr. NORTON. Then I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. PADGETT. That is for the four years, and it includes the expenses of maintenance, upkeep, officers' salaries, interest on the $14,000,000 invested, and all that.

The Clerk read as follows:

Departments of electrical engineering and physics: Three electrical machinists, at $1,180 each; 2 mechanics, at $1,180 each; 1 laboratorian, $1,000; in all, $6,900.

Mr. McCRACKEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think there must be something very wrong at the Naval Academy. About one year ago I appointed a young man to take the entrance examination, which he passed after he had made preparation here. He went to the Naval Academy and served until about 10 days ago, when he was notified that he had failed in one or two subjects of the semiannual examina-tion held last month. I think he failed in French and also in Spanish. He was not the only one who failed; there were 60 others who failed to pass the examination. I asked him what the real trouble was. He said that there was a certain man there who was a teacher of a foreign language, the man being a foreigner himself, and the boy said the only reason he failed was because this foreign teacher had a prejudice against him. I think that is entirely wrong. Here is a boy who has gone to considerable trouble and expense to make his preparation. He had prepared here in the city of Washington for at least a year. He passed the entrance examination about a year ago; was admitted to the Naval Academy and served for something like eight months and is now dismissed. I am satisfied, after making my own examination of this boy's case, that he has been wronged, and I would like to know from some one

Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? EN. Yes. Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. McCRACKEN.

Mr. BUTLER. Did the gentleman appeal to the academic board of the Naval Academy?

Mr. McCRACKEN. I have not had time. The boy has been dismissed and was told to go home.
Mr. BUTLER. When was he dismissed?
Mr. McCRACKEN. Just about 10 days ago.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it not a conditional dismissal, and will be not have 60 days within which to prepare himself to take the examination over in those subjects in which he was deficient?

Mr. McCRACKEN. No; it is an absolute dismissal, because he has passed the age of 20 years, and he can not be admitted to another examination.
